Amateur Boxing.—The Amateur Boxing Association have received 164 entries for the schools competitions—44 for the seniors and 120 for the juniors.

Villa's Latest.—Aston Villa's latest capture is J. G. Thompson, a young full-back who played for Ashington, a club in the North-Eastern League.

FOOTBALL COUPONS ROLLING IN.

Have You Filled Up Yours For Competition No. 8?

The list of matches to be played on November 15th, which comprise coupon No. 8 in our Football Competition, is now being studied by prospective entrants.

Already, many forecasts have come to hand and many will follow as the contest has still a prime fascination for followers of football form.

The second coupon for the current contest appears in the adjoining column the first appearing in our issue of yesterday.

Coupons must be addressed:—

FOOTBALL CONTEST No. 8,
"Cologne Post",
A.P.O. S.40 Rhine Army.

List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.

2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.

3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for any reason, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.

4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.

5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into. Neither will interviews be granted.

6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.

7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, mislaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.

8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.

9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Anglo-Pole.

I saw a British officer in the Club last night who has just signed on with the Polish Army and was wearing its uniform. Quite smart it is, too.

Believe it or Not.

I must tell you the joke of the moment in the Rhine Army. A letter came to the Post Office addressed: "Sir William Robertson, Amusements Office, Cologne" It was returned to the sender endorsed: "Not known."

The Mystery Pin.

Who is the officer in Cologne who for some weeks has had his left shoulder strap kept in place by a safety-pin in lieu of a button? His friends in the mess chaff him about it, but still it remains. Is it a mascot, or what?

Paradise.

"Champagne at four marks a bottle in Rhineland." My informant was a demobilized warrant officer. But it was of Bingen-on-the-Rhine and not of Cologne that he was speaking, and incidentally he is a traveller in wines.

Handling Fifties.

How would you like handing wads of fifty-mark notes over a counter for two hours a a stretch, to a queue with no end? The clerks at Cox's bank looked bored stiff when I dropped in on the eve of closing time. Of course there was a mark rush on.

Has to Stop.

I know a captain now in Rhineland who dreads to go home again for his grandmother's funeral for fear that his application will be met with a peremptory order for demobilization.

Popular "Earwig."

If the authorities have any doubts as to the popularity of the "club," as old habitués understand it, they should have paid it a visit about mid-day yesterday. The bar was overflowing, and it was difficult to see across the room for smoke.

Quite True.

I hear a good story of an orderly sergeant who could not make the roll of his company and the total on parade, agree. He finished up by reporting "One man absent, Sir." "Orderly room for him in the morning" was the officer's crisp reply. Later the orderly sergeant found he had forgotten to count himself as on parade. He informed the officer concerned of his error and said. "I have warned myself for company office Sir."

That German V.C.

I had often wondered what the letters "V.C." on the armlets of so many uniformed civilians stood for. "Verkehr control" is the explanation, and when I add that verkehr is the German for traffic, there is no more to be said.

A Difference.

A stranger in Cologne, he was seated in the station munching a slice of bread and wishing that he had not forgotten his clasp knife, for he had a tin of bully, but not the wherewithal to open it, Near him were seated two Jocks "Can you lend me a jack-knife?" he queried. First Jock: I ha'e nae got yim" Second Jock (after a moments consultation with No. 1.): "Nae, Tommy, but a can sell ye yin!"

Pipe-Lighters.

In the wall of the passage leading into a German printing works there is a small gas jet burning day and night for the convenience of the employes. The idea is a good one.

What Frauleins Read.

A friend tells me that his German girl typist, previous to his arrival at the office in the mornings is engrossed in one of Disraeli's novel printed in English, She reads it as fluently as you or I read "The Post". On certain evenings she visits a professor's house for lessons in astronomy and Greek my hology.

Pfennigs.

It is possible that Tommy has never received single pfennigs in change, but the little coins, a hundred of which go to the mark, are not out of circulation by any means. In shops in the poorer quarters the pfennig is still in active circulation.

Oh! Be Careful!

After waiting for what seemed ages in the queue at Cox's yesterday, two subalterns confidently presented their cheques to the cashier. "Signature wanted," was his laconic remark to one. "Needs endorsement," he said to the other. So they both dropped back. The queue pressed on and they had to start all over again from the extreme rear.

Nasty.

The other evening a corporal asked Datas, the memory man, "How many ribs has a donkey?" The ready wit of Datas came to the fore, and he replied, "Take off your tunic and count them yourself."

To the Drachenfels.

Even in these Autumn days the walk from Bonn to the Drachenfels is well worth while. In places by the riverside the crags assume the most fantastic shapes, while the riverside slopes in their beautiful autumn purple remind one vividly of the glorious Ardennes country.

The Villagers' Pipes.

Among the souvenirs Tommy is taking to the homeland there are none so common as the huge stemmed pipes with walking stick handles, which the ancients and some youngsters too, delight to smoke in the village inns the while they sup weak beer and play cards.

Traffic Control.

Our military police have apparently taught the Germans much as regards controlling traffic, which at many busy poin's is now regulated by German police instead of British M. P's. as hitherto.

Very Wise.

Have you noticed how careful the German householder is with his plants? The hall of the house in which I am billeted, is lined with valuable species taken indoors for protection during the spell of snow.

Two Nuns.

I witnessed a pretty incident in a crowded tram yesterday. Two Sisters of Charity entered, whereupon two young girls near the door promptly surrendered their seats, which after a smiling but unavailing protest, were occupied. It is perhaps only fair to add the men seated in the car had not the chance to demonstrate their chivalry, so swifty did the frauleins rise to the occasion.

Not Mr. Pussyfoot.

"Bible Class in Cabaret daily at 6.30.' Such is the announcement which catches your eye in a certain passage, but the passage, I hasten to add, leads to a Soldiers' Club, so there's no need to get the wind up about Mr. Pussyfoot.

Winter Sport.

The fall of snow the other day, and the prevailing icy atmosphere, reminds me that opportunities for skating may be with us at any moment. I know several people who, in February, missed a month's excellent sport because they were not equipped with skates and hesitated to add to their kit by sending home for them, fearing that the freezing season would soon end. In Germany, there is usually a long spell of frost, and enthusiasts would be well advised to be prepared for it.

Observation.

Officer to his batman:—"And have you noticed any change in Cologne after your three weeks in Blighty?" Batman:—"Only that the fags are dearer in the canteen, sir."

Another Street Name.

In addition to its Zeppelinstrasse, Cologne also has its Sedanstrasse. It is a residential quarter down by the Rhineside, and by the irony of fate is just round the corner from the residence of the British Military Governor!

Cosy.

I have dropped across many comfortable soldiers' clubs in Rhineland, but for cosiness I think the one at Bonn under the auspices of the Catholic Women's League would be hard to equal. There is an oriental setting about the room which completely camouflages the canteen side of the business.

Trouble Everywhere.

Germany has its labour troubles too. For the past five weeks a tradesman I know has been on the look-out for just one small fitting to complete an electric installation, but he explained to me yesterday that he has perforce to carry on with gas for the reason that there are "zu viel strikes in Deutschland".

Complaints.

Complaints continue to reach me of the manner in which civilians monopolise the small "reserved for military" section of the Bonn cars. Apparently the notice in the window is being treated as a scrap of paper.

RHINELANDER.

LOST OPPORTUNITY.

"Oh, here hath been dawning another
blue day,
Think wilt thou let it slip useless away."

Words that were taught to the infant mind, when the great possibilities of life stretched out before it. Words it is well to remember when the road has been traversed, and the journey of life is drawing to its close. Words that speak to us of opportunities given, being placed before mankind to help their fellow men, to give the word of hope when it was so much needed.

In the rush of life it is hard to find the time to give to a quiet contemplation of the work that might have been done, the word that might have been spoken, but a little self-examination would teach all men that opportunities have been lost, opportunities that were perhaps God given to men to lift the burden which crushes down many a human soul.

As a man glances back along the road he has come, in his mind's eye he can see at times the lost chances that can never return. To very many that road still stretches and will continue while the traveller passes milestone after milestone along the way of life, and as each day comes some time in that day he may give the helping hand to a tired fellow traveller.

When the wintry wind moans through the barren branches of the trees, and the leaves, once so bright and green, lie sombre and dead on the rain sodden earth, when no longer the warm sun shines through the verdant cloisters, but has given place to the cold icy blasts of winter, one thinks of the days of gladness, when all the world was happy in the glorious summer time. So men today, "in the winter of our discontent" may think of the days gone by, of the time when help could have been given, of the time when we could have led others into that glorious sunshine.

At the foot of thy crags, O Sea
But the tender grace of a day that is dead
Will never come back to me".

The winter of poignant remorse will surely come to him who passes by, and in passing sees not the suffering of his fellow men.

The dark days of regret will overshadow that one, who with heedlees laugh sees the golden opportunities slipping away, when they could have meant so much to him, could have fully equipped him for the struggle of life, that great battle wherein a man fights for himself, and if he be a true soldier of a just cause, will find him battling for others also in that awful strife.

For every poison that will injure the body there is an antidote; and for everything that would injure the soul, God has given man a power to withstand that poison. While the past may be one of regret, the future may be for all the time of recompense, when a man with the help of the God who made him, may bring the summer once again into his life and into the lives of others.

Ornamental Protection.

Although the windows of most big houses in this part of the world are amply guarded with iron bars, these latter are rarely of plain design. Scrolls, flowers, and artistic curves are formed to provide a substantial protection, which is also ornamental.

SOMETHING NEW IN ARMY EDUCATION.

Now that the winter is really upon us, and no outdoor amusements can be indulged in after 3 o'clock in the afternoon, it will please many people in Cologne to hear that some voluntary evening classes in various subjects are to be started at the G.H.Q. General and Commercial College, 58, Hansa Ring.

These classes are not part of the usual courses at the college. They are planned to meet the needs of those who desire to be working at some interesting subject in a general way, rather than for a special examination. They are more on the lines of the evening classes at Polytechnics, etc., at home.

The German course has already started at the British Empire Leave Club, and is on Monday, Wednesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, 6.30—7.30 p.m. The classes in other subjects will begin on Thursday next, Novr. 13th. French and Mathematics are on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, 5.30—6.30 p.m., and Shorthand and Typewriting on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays, from 6.30—7.30 p.m.

These subjects will probably be run in different standards, according to the attainments and qualifications of the applicants who wish to profit by them. There is, further, a set of lectures on Nineteenth Century English Literature, which will be on the lines of the University Extension Lectures in England. These are on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays from 5.30 to 6.30. It is hoped that a Spanish class will be started shortly, and any other subject for which there is a considerable demand. Books and necessary stationery will be provided.

Applications to attend the courses should be sent to the Adjutant, G. H. Q., General College; all ranks, and ladies as well as men, can join.

Each set of classes will be planned to last for 30 lessons, and students are very strongly urged to begin at the beginning of the course, and to attend as regularly as possible; in fact, it is obvious that the success of the scheme will depend on the co-operation between the teachers and the pupils in these respects.

The first 30 applicants in any subject will be accepted, and names may be sent in up till 12 noon on Thursday, Novr. 13th.

BEKANNTMACHUNG.

Gemäß § 2 des Gesetzes vom 29. August 1919 (R.-G.-Bl. Seite 1491) und mit Zustimmung des Zehner-Ausschusses der Nationalversammlung wird eine im Betrage von 5 Milliarden Mark hiermit laut untenstehenden Bedingungen zur öffentlichen Zeichnung aufgelegt.

Deutsche Spar-Prämienanleihe 1919

I. Die Höhe der Anleihe beträgt 5 Milliarden, rückzahlbar innerhalb von 80 Jahren laut Tilgungsplan (3 Milliarden während der ersten 40 Jahre und 2 Milliarden während der letzten 40 Jahre).

II. Die Anleihe wird in 5 Millionen Spar-Prämienstücken, das Stück zu M. 1000, ausgegeben und ist in 5 Reihen, die mit Lit. A, B, C, D, E bezeichnet werden, eingeteilt. Jede Reihe enthält 2500 Gruppen (von 1 bis 2500) und jede Gruppe 400 Nummern (von 1 bis 400).

III. Die Anleihe gelangt unter folgenden Bedingungen zur Zeichnung:

1. Für jedes Spar-Prämienstück von M. 1000 sind als Gegenwert M. 500 in 5% Deutscher Reichsanleihe mit Zinsscheinen, fällig am 1. April oder 1. Juli 1920, zum Nennwert (siehe Ziffer 2 der untenstehenden Zeichnungsbedingungen) und M. 500 in bar einzuzahlen.

2. Die Zuteilung erfolgt entsprechend der Höhe der Zeichnung; jedoch werden die kleinen Zeichnungen von 1 bis 5 Stück vorzugsweise berücksichtigt.

3. Gewinnverlosungen finden zweimal jährlich am 2. Januar und 1. Juli statt (die erste Gewinnverlosung ausnahmsweise im März 1920, der nähere Zeitpunkt wird noch bekanntgegeben); bei jeder Gewinnverlosuug werden 2500 Gewinne im Betrage von M. 25 000 000 gezogen.

Gewinnplan:

5 Gewinne	zu M.	1 000 000	M. 5 000 000

2500 Gewinne			M. 25 000 000

4. Die Tilgungsauslosungen finden jährlich am 1. Juli statt. Auf jedes zweite getilgte Spar-Prämienstück entfällt ein mit den Jahren wachsender Bonus von M. 1000 bis M. 4000.

Tilgungsplan:

In den Jahren	Tilgung: Stückzahl jährlich	Tilgung: Gesamtbetrag jährlich M.	Bonus: Stückzahl jährlich	Bonus: Im einzelnen M.	Bonus: Gesamtbetrag jährlich M.	Insgesamt jährlich M.
1920—1929	50 000	50 000 000	25 000	1000	25 000 000	75 000 000
1930—1939	75 000	75 000 000	37 500	1000	37 500 000	112 500 000

Ein jedes getilgte Spar-Prämienstück bekommt außerdem einen Zuschlag von M. 50 für jedes verflossene Jahr.

Die Gesamtzahl der Stücke, auf die ein Gewinn und Bonus entfällt, beträgt somit 2 900 000, d. h. 58% der Zahl der Spar-Prämienstücke.

5. Ein mit einem Gewinn laut Gewinnplan gezogenes Spar-Prämienstück nimmt auch an den späteren Gewinnziehungen bis zu seiner eigenen Tilgungsauslosung teil.

Die Auszahlung der laut Gewinnplan entfallenden Gewinne erfolgt unter Abzug von 10%.

6. Die Gewinne werden 2 Monate nach der Gewinnverlosung (erstmalig jedoch am 1. April 1920), die Tilgungssummen, einschließlich der Zuschläge und des Bonus, am 29. Dezember j. J. gegen Vorlage des Stückes ausgezahlt.

7. Vom Beginn des 20. Jahres ab steht dem Besitzer des Stückes das Recht zu, die Rückzahlung desselben jeweils zum Ende des Jahres bei Innehaltung der Kündigungsfrist von einem Jahr zum Tilgungswert, d. h. zum Nennwert samt den zustehenden Zuschlägen von M. 50 für jedes verflossene Jahr, unter Abzug von 10% zu verlangen.

8. Sollte vor Ablauf von 10 Jahren eine neue gleichartige Spar-Prämienanleihe zur Ausgabe gelangen, so haben die Inhaber der Spar-Prämienstücke dieser Anleihe das Zeichnungsvorrecht.

Steuerbegünstigungen der Spar-Prämienanleihe:

a) Befreiung eines Besitzes bis zu 25 Stück von der Nachlaßsteuer und bezüglich derselben Stücke von der Erbanfallsteuer. Keine Nachlaß- oder Erbanfallsteuer für die auf den Namen Dritter bei der Reichsbank oder anderen vom Reichsminister der Finanzen noch zu benennenden Stellen auf 5 Jahre und mehr oder auf Todesfall hinterlegten Stücke (bis 10 Stück für jede einzelne dritte Person).

b) Der Vermögenszuwachs, der sich aus dem Besitze der Anleihestücke gegenüber dem bei der Erwerbung der Stücke anzunehmenden Vermögenswerte ergibt, unterliegt nicht der Besitzsteuer (Vermögenszuwachssteuer).

Der Ueberschuß des Veräußerungswertes über den Tilgungswert bleibt frei von der Kapitalertragssteuer.

c) Die dem Besitzer der Stücke auf Grund der vorstehenden Bestimmungen unter III, 3, 4 zustehenden Leistungen sowie der aus dem Verkauf der Stücke erzielte Gewinn unterliegen im Gewinnjahre weder der Einkommensteuer noch der Kapitalertragssteuer.

d) Bei jeder Art der Besteuerung werden die Prämienstücke bei einer Stückzahl bis zu 50 Stück höchstens zum Nennwert, vom 20. Jahre ab zum Kündigungswerte bewertet.

Zeichnungsbedingungen.

1. Annahmestellen: Zeichnungsstellen sind die Reichsbank und die im offiziellen Zeichnungsprospekt aufgeführten Geldinstitute. Die Zeichnungen können aber auch durch Vermittlung jeder Bank, jedes Bankiers, jeder Sparkasse und Kreditgenossenschaft erfolgen.

Zeichnungen werden

von Montag, den 10., bis Mittwoch, den 26. November 1919, mittags 1 Uhr entgegengenommen. Früherer Zeichnungsschluß bleibt vorbehalten.

2. Zeichnungspreis. Der Preis für jedes Spar-Prämienstück beträgt M. 1000. Hiervon sind M. 500 in 5% Deutscher Reichsanleihe zum Nennwert berechnet und M. 500 in bar zu begleichen.

Die mit Januar—Juli-Zinsen ausgestatteten Reichsanleihestücke sind mit Zinsscheinen, fällig am 1. Juli 1920, die mit April—Oktober-Zinsen ausgestatteten Stücke mit Zinsscheinen, fällig am 1. April 1920, einzureichen. Den Einlieferern von 5% Reichsanleihe mit April—Oktober-Zinsscheinen werden auf ihre alten Anleihen Stückzinsen für 90 Tage = 1,25% vergütet.

3. Sicherheitsbestellung. Bei der Zeichnung hat jeder Zeichner eine Sicherheit von 10% des gezeichneten Betrages mit M. 100 für jedes Prämienstück in bar zu hinterlegen.

4. Zuteilung. Die Zuteilung findet tunlichst bald nach dem Zeichnungsschluß statt. Die Art der Verteilung bestimmt das Reichsfinanzministerium.

5. Bezahlung. Die Zeichner sind verpflichtet, die zugeteilten Beträge bis zum 29. Dezember d. J. zu begleichen. Die Begleichung hat bei derjenigen Stelle zu erfolgen, bei der die Zeichnung angemeldet worden ist.

Sollen 5% Schuldbuchforderungen zur Begleichung verwendet werden, so ist sogleich nach Erhalt der Zuteilung ein Antrag auf Ausreichung von Schuldverschreibungen an die Reichsschuldenverwaltung, Berlin SW 68, Oranienstraße 92/94, zu richten. Der Antrag muß einen auf die Begleichung der Spar-Prämienstücke hinweisenden Vermerk enthalten und spätestens am 20. Dezember d. J. bei der Reichsschuldenverwaltung eingehen. Vordrucke zu solchen Anträgen mit Formvorschriften sind bei allen Zeichnungs- und Vermittlungsstellen zu haben. Daraufhin werden Schuldverschreibungen, die nur zur Begleichung von Spar-Prämienstücken geeignet sind, ohne Zinsbogen ausgereicht. Die Ausreichung erfolgt gebührenfrei und portofrei als Reichsdienstsache. Diese Schuldverschreibungen sind spätestens bis zum 20. März 1920 den in Absatz 1 genannten Zeichnungs- oder Vermittlungsstellen einzureichen.

6. Ausgabe der Stücke. Die Ausgabe der Prämienstücke erfolgt im Februar 1920; Schuldbuchgläubiger erhalten erforderlichenfalls bis zur ersten Gewinnverlosung im März nächsten Jahres durch ihre Vermittlungsstellen Nummernaufgabe. Zwischenscheine sind nicht vorgesehen.

7. Umtausch der Kriegsanleihen. Die Reichsbank wird, soweit möglich, unentgeltlich Stücke von höherem Nennwert als M. 500 in kleine Stücke tauschen.

SINISTER RUSSIAN SHADOW.

PRIME MINISTER ON THE DIFFICULTIES AND PROSPECTS OF PACIFICATION

TO-DAY'S TWO-MINUTE SILENT TRIBUTE.

MANSION HOUSE.

SPEECHES AT LORD MAYOR'S BANQUET.

Amid centuries-old pomp and ceremony the Lord Mayor's Banquet—the first post-war function — was held at the Guildhall on Saturday and, as usual, was made the occasion for important speeches by Ministers of State. There was a brilliant company.

In proposing the toast of His Majesty's Ministers, the Lord Mayor said that one of the earliest wishes of his life had been to see a Federation of all English speaking peoples for mutual defence. The League of Nations, which is founded on the idea of the brotherhood of mankind, has in a great measure brought this about.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd George, on rising to reply was received with prolonged cheers.

The reign of terror had passed, he said, "which had cast a shadow over Europe for half a century, which had covered the firmament with bloodshed and it is for us to see that it is over for good. A great peril was passed, but though perils remain, the common sense and goodwill which carried us through the war will carry us through the peace. There were difficult questions awaiting settlement. The first was the Adriatic.

"Despite the difficulties, I am confident that a settlement can be found; a settlement which will be compatible with the interests and honour of the gallant Ally which came to our help at a critical moment of the war and between whom and the people of this country there has always existed a feeling of great attachment (cheers). On the other hand I feel that justice must be done to nationalities emancipated from the Austrian yoke through the efforts and sufferings of the Allies, foremost among whom was Italy. (cheers).

Then there is Turkey, always troublesome in peace and war, and more troublesome in peace than war. There is complete agreement amongst the Allies on the fundamental principles of settlement with Turkey. First, we are all agreed that Turkey's misgovernance in lands populated by Greeks, Arabs and Armenians shall come to an end (cheers). We are all agreed that the gates of the Black Sea must be free to all nations (cheers) and that guardianship can no longer be entrusted to a power that betrayed its trust and closed those gates in the face of the Allies at the biddng of Prussian military power. As to other questions there ought to be no insuperable difficulty in the distribution of responsibilities amongst the Allies for guaranteeing this policy."

Continuing, the Premier said he could not speak with the same hope and confidence of Russia. He would be happier if he knew that the Russian tangles were in course of being cleared up. We could not have peace until we had peace in Russia, and the outlook was not pleasant. A few weeks ago the prospect of an early issue was distinctly promising, but to-day indications pointed to a more prolonged and sanguinary struggle. The raid on Petrograd had not come off and for the moment Denikin's brilliant advance towards Moscow had been temporarily checked. The latest news from Omsk was certainly not reassuring. He had, however, seen the Russian sky look just as sombre before. Russia was a land of surprises.

He was not making any sort of prediction that the Bolshevist Armies were going to conquer the whole of Russia. He did not believe it, because the peasantry had in their hearts a detestation of Bolshevism. He dreaded however, an interminable series of swaying campaigns, laying waste some of the most fertile land in the world and devastating a country which was essential to the prosperity of the world. He dared to predict in the early days that Bolshevism could not be suppressed by the sword and that other methods must finally be resorted to for restoring peace and good government in that distressed land.

After referring to previous attempts by the Supreme Council to secure a settlement in Russia the Premier said he hoped the time is not distant when the Powers would be able to renew their attempts at settlement with a prospect of success. He did not regret one penny of the help we had given in North Russia. If the Russians really wished for freedom we could always say we had given them the chance but we could not afford to continue so costly an intervention in the interminable Civil War.

Our troops were out of Russia and frankly, he was glad of it, for Russia was a quicksand. Victories were easily won there but one sank in victories, and great armies of past Empires had been overwhelmed in the quicksands of barren victories. Russia was a dangerous land for intervention but he was hopeful that when Winter gave time for all sections in Russia to reflect and reconsider the situation, that the opportunity might afford itself for the Powers of the world to promote peace and contentment in that land.

HALT!—AND THINK.

THE GREAT TWO-MINUTE SILENCE.

A Special Order has been issued by General Sir William Robertson, Bart, G.C.B. etc. Commander-in-Chief, British Army of the Rhine, regarding the compliance with the King's suggestion for the solemn celebration of the anniversary of the Armistice.

At 11.00 hours to-day, 11th November, all guards will turn out and present arms and buglers will sound the "Last Post," during the performance of which Officers will salute and other ranks will stand to attention. On the conclusion of the call guards will slope arms and all ranks will remain at attention until the period of two minutes' silence is completed.

All road traffic will halt at 11.00 hours and movement will not be resumed for two minutes.

A letter has been issued by the Archbishop of Canterbury urging Christian men and women reverently to carry out the King's proposed silence.

In the absence of Cardinal Archbishop Bourne, who has gone to Lourdes in connection with the anniversary of the armistice, his Vicar-general has issued a similar exhortation.

The Archbishop of Canterbury sincerely hopes that the day will be marked by prayers for the League of Nations, his letter concluding: "The knowledge of what the League, please God, will bring towards establishing the world's peace and bettering the world's life gives a bright setting of point and purpose to the anniversary of Armistice Day."

General arrangements, following the same lines as in England, are being made in Australia to give effect to the King's wishes.

PUSSYFOOT'S PROWESS.

HOTEL SLUMP IN NEW YORK.

The passing of the Prohibition Enforcement Bill by Congress, says a New York telegram, has had an instantaneous effect on the hotels and restaurants of New York. The latter in many cases are now only a shadow of their former selves. A week ago it was almost impossible to get a room in any of the dozen best known hotels, but many of these hotels to-day have empty rooms which the managements see no prospect of filling.

People who journey to New York on business have now so little incentive to stay, to have a "good time" that they usually go straight home after the completion of their business. Pleasure seekers from the provinces are also staying away. Restaurant proprietors say they are faced with ruin.

SPAIN AND THE POWERS.

Senor Perez Caballero, formerly Spanish Foreign Minister, has published an article at Madrid supporting the proposal that Spain should establish an Alliance with the Allied Powers. He points out that closer relation with the Allies would be to the best interests of Spain.

Apart from Russia the outlook was good. Looking back on the past he thought things were better than our fears and better than our hopes. They could not expect to return to the normal in a single year. Two things were necessary, work and confidence. In work lies the salvation of all countries. He referred to the strength of our position as compared with other countries and said that the trade figures show an admirable recovery. We were not free from Labour troubles but they are less menacing than they were. There was a better feeling between Capital and Labour and he felt confident that the courage of our people, which had pulled us through the great difficulties of war, would enable us to face the second year of peace with new hope, knowing that if all would put heart into their task, we should not merely repair the ravages of the great war but would enter on such an era of prosperity as Great Britain had never seen. (cheers).

Replying to the toast of the Services Mr. Walter Long paid a glowing tribute to the wonderful courage of the officers and men of the Navy that had contributed in so large a degree to the winning of the war. He said they were determined that the Navy should be kept abreast of the times. Whatever its size it should be the best Navy we could possible have. A strong and efficient British Navy was the best security not only for British homes but for the peace of the world.

Mr. Winston Churchill having paid a similar tribute to the achievements of our Armies, said we had emerged from the terrible cataclysm stronger than before and with a position gained to which posterity would look back with reverence and awe.

MOTOR SHOW.

HIGH PRICES AND SILLY POLICY.

The exceedingly high prices of motor-cars at the Olympia show does not deter buyers in the last. Premiums of £1,200 have been paid for options on chassis for delivery at the end of this year and there is a waiting list of thousands for Rolls-Royce chassis. A man who places an order to-day cannot obtain promise of delivery of a chassis of this make before the end of July 1921, and then he will still have to get the body of the car built. Second-hand Rolls Royces have found ready buyers in England at 4000 guineas and one man is reported to have paid ten thousand guineas for a car.

The show clearly demonstrates one thing, says the "Evening News," viz—that we as a nation do not yet clearly realise the importance and necessity of lowering the cost of motoring. That cheap motoring will come is certain and if Great Britain does not introduce it, America will. A typical example of blindness to the question of economy, it says, can be seen at the show where there are hundreds of engines on exhibition, practically all of them being fitted with carburetters for highgrade fuel, whereas petrol is 3s, 0½d. per gallon and paraffin is 1s. 8d.

RIGA OFFENSIVE.

RUSSIANS AND GERMANS DISAGREE.

The Foreign Minister of Lettland reports from Riga that on the 6th November the new Lett offensive on a broad front had been proceeding for four days. Lettish troops are gradually surrounding the Germans on the Riga front and with the assistance of the Allied Fleet which bombarded the German's line of retreat, the battle is still proceeding with obstinacy. Disagreement between the Russians and Germans of Bermondt's Army is growing. Many Russian troops with their officers have deserted to the Letts. The Letts were also helping General Yudenitch and captured last week 1,200 Red Guards. On the Libau front heavy German attacks have been repulsed. The Minister accused the Germans of exercising the greatest terrorism at Mitau

LORD MAYOR'S SHOW.

The Lord Mayor's show in London on Saturday was essentially a peace pageant and one of the chief features was a number of young women dressed in white, squads of whom appeared at intervals throughout the procession. The weather was dull and foggy and though considerable crowds watched the proceedings there seemed to be a certain lack of enthusiasm, though the members of the Deal Lifeboat, who laboured day and night in last week's storm in their attempts to rescue the crews of the three ships wrecked on the Goodwins, came in for hearty cheers at various points. They were headed by their coxswain, William Marsh, who is nearly seventy and has been a member of the crew for fifty years. The nations comprising the League of Nations were represented by some 250 men and women in gay trappings.

NATIONAL BALANCE SHEETS.

Wage earners in industry are not doing their best to maintain production, said the President of the Board of Trade at Liverpool. The workers would never put their backs into production until they felt that the whole pressure of the entire organisation of the country were directed to that end.

Manufacturers were not doing all they could to push the export trade. The Government could not do much to help.

We are slack as a nation and until our exports are flowing in a far greater stream than at present, and our home production is on a far greater scale, we can neither hope nor expect to get back to our satisfactory national balance sheets.

GERMANS ATTACK LIBAU.

A War Office communiqué states that to the North and West of Riga the Letts, under cover of the bombardment by the Allied squadrons, advanced along the coast ten miles to the West of the mouth of the Dwina. They drove back Bermondt's troops from the immediate suburbs of the city, capturing two guns, many machine guns and a number of German prisoners. Information has been received that the Germans have attacked Libau, their main efforts being directed against the Northern defences of the city, but owing to the freezing of the lake the attack was repulsed. It is expected that attempts will be renewed in greater strength and fears are also entertained that the Germans may try to capture Windau.

FILMING THE BIBLE.

The American Film producer, Raymond Wills, announces that he is producing a film of the Bible in 104 reels, which he proposes shall be shown at the rate of two reels weekly for one year.

There was a heavy fall of snow at Exeter on Sunday.

During Sunday, Lord Brassey's condition improved somewhat although he has not entirely regained consciousness.

AMERICAN STRIKE.

ULTIMATUM TO MINERS' OFFICIALS.

The hearing of the United States Government motion to make permanent the temporary and ex parte injunction granted at Indianapolis against the coal miners was heard on Saturday. The United Mineworkers, through Counsel, asked that proceedings should be postponed for a week or ten days in the hope that the strike would be settled but Counsel for Government objected to such delay. The Court thereupon dissolved the injunction and later ordered the coal strike to be cancelled. The Miners' Attorney declared beforehand that if the decision were unfavourable to them they would request a modification permitting the use of the strike benefit funds.

Affidavits were submitted to the Court showing that the Government operates railroads at a loss, which increases with the diminishing coal supplies.

Mine owners of various coalfields also submitted affidavits alleging violations of contract by miners in the present strike. The defence argued that the war legislation under which the injunction was sought no longer applies, because the war had "ceased progressively"; that soldiers, who were members of the Miners' Unions had been discharged and the mines returned to the owners.

Counsel for the Government read President Wilson's statement appealing to the miners not to strike but to submit the questions at issue to arbitration. The Unions were given until Tuesday evening to issue cancellation of the strike orders, representations being made by the defence that many Labour Officials must be summoned from long distances.

The end of the first week of the strike witnessed very little change in the general situation. The production of Union mines continues to be paralysed and the Wartime Fuel Regulations virtually affect seven additional Union mines, making a total of thirty-two mines in North and West Virginia where the regulations are in operation.

The order prohibiting the coaling of foreign ships until the end of the miners' strike has been revised to the extent that ships will be allowed sufficient fuel to carry them to the next bunkering station.

CALLOUS WOMEN.

ROBBED A SOLDIER'S CORPSE.

"You seem to have gone beyond all that common human nature thinks to be human," said the presiding magistrate, Mr. F. D. Bumstead, at Cannock, Staffordshire, to two young women whom he sent to prison for two months for stealing £3 from the dead body of Corporal James William Bell.

The accused, Beatrice Powell (23), of High-street, Walsall, and Florence Ward (17), of Kings-street, Dudley, were seen by a miner last Saturday rifling the pockets of Bell, whose body, terribly mutilated, was lying on the railway lines near the camp.

Powell said she and Ward divided the £3 between them. She bought a pair of boots and a coat out for her 30s. Ward said she moved Bell's hand off his chest and took a pocket-book and letters, including a black-edged envelope, out of his pocket. The Treasury notes were among the letters.

FARMING IN BELGIUM.

Organised by the peasants, who have been assisted on returning to their farms by gifts of English live stock from the Agricultural Relief of Allies Committee, a show of live stock has just been held in the partly-destroyed village of Handzarme, near Dixmude. There were 152 entries. It was stated that there had been for many years a strong prejudice on the part of the Belgian agriculturists against black pigs, but that this has been entirely removed by the specimens sent over by the Royal Agricultural Society's Committee. Large "blacks" are now as popular as the other breeds distributed.

The Burgomaster expressed the gratitude of peasants in the stricken regions for the help given by British farmers.

NEWSPAPER PROFITS SEIZED.

The Brussels Assize Court which recently sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from 20 to two years the staff of "La Belgique," one of the newspapers which appeared during the German occupation has ordered the total profits of the newspaper, being 5,500,000fr. (£220,000), to be paid over to the State, says "The Times" correspondent at Brussels.

CLEMENCEAU ON GERMAN SOIL.

M. Clemenceau has made a short excursion from Strasburg to Kehl, where he was received by the German authorities. According to the French papers his reception was very reserved. As he drove by motorcar through Kehl the town appeared very empty, all windows being closed.

CHURCHILL'S PRIVATE SECRETARY.

Mr. Winston Churchill has appointed Major Walter Waring, M.P., to be his Parliamentary private secretary in succession to Mr. McCallum Scott. Major Waring will also act as members' friend in regard to army matters in the House.

'VARSITY NOTES.

COST OF LIVING AND FEES FOR EXAMS.

The cost of living at Oxford continues to be the subject of much discussion. No practical suggestions for reduction are forthcoming, however, beyond an extension of the Keble system. Under this, living is appreciably cheaper owing to most meals being taken in common. Other suggestions are pooling in the ordering of supplies or joint management in the provision of essentials but it is not believed that much can be saved in this way. The barest annual expenditure of an average undergraduate at an average College is now estimated at £150 for the academic year of six months.

Cambridge Senate will shortly discuss various changes and reforms recommended by its Council on terms which suggest the making of a full term, independent of Easter, and other term changes which will result in the addition of fourteen days to the present compulsory residence.

Another recommendation deals with undergraduates who enter for examinations and then fail to appear, involving the University in much expense. It proposes that the fee shall be exacted from all candidates who enter, unless notice of withdrawal is given by a certain date.

YACHTING MYSTERY.

At an inquest held at Hythe the body of a young sailor which had been washed a hore was identified as that of Ned Harvey, of Dublin, who left Leigh-on-Sea on October 9 on board the yacht Fiona with Major E. A. W. Maude, Tank Corps, the owner of the vessel. The yacht's destination was Burnham-on-Crouch, but it was not seen again after leaving Leigh.

Mr. Percy Kenn, Limehill House, Chertsey, stated that Major Maude belonged to the Royal St. George's Yacht Club, Kingstown, and was a capable yachtsman.

A verdict of "Accidentally drowned" was recorded.

EGYPTIAN ARMY INCREASE.

On the advice of the War Office, says the "Weekly Dispatch," the Government has agreed to raise the strength of the Egyptian Army from one to four divisions, of which two will consist of Sudanese.

The pay of British officers with the Egyptian Army is to be increased to meet the rise of pay in the home forces. A bimbashi, the lowest rank at which an English officer joins the Egyptian forces, will receive £800 a year, with no income tax; a colonel will receive £1,000, also with no tax.

MILITARY TRAIN COLLISIONS.

A railway collision has occurred near Watten, between Calais and Saint-Omer. A British military train ran into a French train, two people being killed and several injured in the latter.

Still another railway mishap is reported in the Pas-de-Calais. About three o'clock on Saturday morning a British locomotive ran into a goods train at Reviere-Neuve. One truck was wrecked, and six British soldiers were injured, two of them seriously.

OUR OCTOBER TRADE.

The Board of Trade returns for October show that the month's exports were valued at £79,060,892 sterling as compared with £42,820,724 sterling in October 1918, an increase of £36,240,168. The highest amount of exports prior to last month was shown in August last, when the value was £73,773,278. Last month's imports were valued at £153,486,162, which was also a record total, against £117,623,803 in October 1918.

PRICE OF COAL.

Sir Auckland Geddes, speaking at Newport, said he hoped shortly to take off the extra six shillings per ton imposed on the price of coal in July but that everything depended on increased output. It was impossible to remove the export embargo until the output reached 250 million tons per annum. The output last quarter was at the rate of 200 million tons.

COST OF LIVING MOUNTING.

Food prices in the United Kingdom are still higher. They now show 130 per cent. increase and it is expected that by the end of the year they will exceed 150 per cent. over 1914 prices.

MOND LIBEL ACTION.

The election libel action by Sir Alfred Mond against the "South Wales Post" and its editor, Mr. David Davies, who opposed Sir Alfred Mond at the general election at Swansea, was settled on Saturday. Defendants apologised and agreed to pay £500 towards the costs of the action.

BEATTY'S LOVING CUP.

Earl and Countess Beatty were on Saturday presented with gifts by the Leicestershire Farmers' Union. That to Earl Beatty consisted of a silver loving cup, George the Second period.

ANARCHY.

HUGE CONSPIRACY FOILED IN AMERICA.

The United States Attorney General has announced that the Government has decided upon the deportation of all aliens engaged in "Red" activities. Details issued on Saturday of widespread seizures of Radicals, show that over 200 agitators, mostly Russians, have been arrested in eighteen cities.

Quantities of articles used in the manufacture of bombs, a complete counterfeiting plant and a large supply of counterfeit bank notes, together with stacks of inflammatory literature, many Red flags, rifles and revolvers were also seized. It is stated that among those arrested are thirty-six men who have been particularly active in creating unrest and that a plot with ramifications in all parts of the States, openly to defy the Government, has been nipped in the bud. It is further stated that those implicated in the plot include Radicals all over the country, a few Anarchists and some Russian agitators, and that the conspiracy has been in preparation for weeks.

It is reported that among those arrested was the Irish Transport Workers' Leader, Jim Larkin.

DUMP EXPLODES.

TEN BRITISH SENTRIES KILLED.

A large amunition dump near Drave Fort, outside Namur, blew up on Saturday morning. Of fourteen British sentries on duty it is feared that ten have been killed.

YUDENITCH RETREATING.

It is stated in a report from the Russian North-Western Army, issued on the morning of the 7th November, that the Bolshevist counter-offensive against Yudenitch's right flank has made considerable progress. The Bolshevists have occupied Gdov and forced the Russians back to a point fifteen miles South of Yamburg. The Russian centre has also fallen back to Kikerino station, thirty-five miles East of Yamburg on the Gatchina railway.

According to a Helsingfors report from the North Western Army, Yudenitch has retreated to the station of Weimarn.

IRISH MAGISTRATE'S STRANGE CONDUCT.

A remarkable incident marked the opening of the investigation into the Co. Donegal cabin murder case at Falcarragh, when Denis Gallagher, a farmer's son, was charged with killing Michael Mc Fadden. A local magistrate insisted upon taking part in the proceedings, though Major Brett, the R.M., intimated that the Crown had asked him to take the case. On the Crown Solicitor threatening to hange the venue the case proceeded, Major Brett taking the evidence, and saying that he alone would act. The prisoner was remanded.

ALIEN WAITERS.

At a demonstration of hotel and restaurant workers at Trafalgar Square on Sunday, the President of the British and Allied Waiters' Union declared that apart from their own efforts to improve working conditions they must call on the Government to fulfil its promises to repatriate all enemy aliens. In their calling they suffered more than in any other from these undesirable foreigners and they wanted the Government to keep its word.

FIVE-SHILLING NOTES.

The British Government has prohibited the export of silver, either in the form of bullion or coin.

If the price of silver increases still further the Australian Commonwealth has decided to issue five-shilling notes in order to protect the currency.

NEW BISHOP OF LINCOLN.

The very Reverend Shuckburgh Swayne, Dean of Manchester, has been appointed Bishop of Lincoln and the Venerable William Hutton, Archdeacon of Northampton, to the Deanery of Winchester.

TRAITOR GETS TWENTY YEARS.

The Assize Court at Mons has sentenced a man named Cornie to twenty years' penal servitude for supplying the enemy with information and for denouncing Belgians to the Germans.

SHAH LEAVES ENGLAND.

The Shah of Persia left Dover for Calais on Saturday in the Royal Yacht Alexandra, which was escorted across the Channel by destroyers. A Royal salute was fired as the vessel left.

FALSE GERMAN REPORT.

The "Taegliche Rundschau," Berlin, stated on Saturday that Field Marshal Earl Haig is in Berlin. This is not true. Earl Haig is at his home in Kingston.

11 O'CLOCK 11. 11. 18.

This is the first anniversary of the Armistice—which ended the most tremendous conflict the world has ever experienced.

The events are still too recent to permit of historical analysis. Here we are more concerned with assigning the meed of honour due to that Great Alliance of the Entente which dissolved the cloud of Prussian militarism that had cast a shadow over the entire world.

We hold the causes to which the world chiefly owed its final deliverance from the menace of the mailed fist to be:

1. The silent pressure of the Navy.
2. The determination to win of the free and Allied peoples.
3. The unity of command, and, finally,

The reserve of force which the entry of America into the War gave to the Entente.

The plan of the German War Staff was as simple as the preparations were complete and stupendous. The plan was the classic one of developing overwhelming force against a portion of the enemy and then crushing through. Twice Germany had her opportunity, once in 1914, when surprise caught us unprepared, and next in 1918, when the Russian collapse allowed her again to outnumber us in the West.

In 1914, the Belgians, our own "Contemptible little army" and the magnificent poilus checked the onrush of the exulting Germans to Paris and the coast. The military skill of the veteran Marshal Joffre and his able colleagues, together with the soldierly qualities of their men, foreshadowed at the Marne in September 1914 the events of last year, when Prussian militarism was driven back whence it came till it finally collapsed in November 1918.

It is only when we view the Titanic struggle as a whole that we can correctly estimate the nature of the conflict and its outcome. By the end of 1914, we had developed the war of position from which there was no apparent issue till the inventive genius of Britain produced the Tanks, and the incomparable leadership and strategic insight of the Inter-Allied Commander-in-Chief transformed the darkness of March-June, 1918, to the ever-brightening gleams of hope and light which culminated in the brilliant noonday of full victory.

Lack of space precludes us from giving details of those epoch making days. Days of anguish and terror as we watched the advancing hordes sweeping over the hard won battlefields of the Somme.

Days of anxious apprehension in the months of May and June which saw the German forces advancing in Champagne.

Finally the tide turned when in July, by a series of strategic converging movements, the German forces were manoeuvred from the pocket between Aisne and Marne and driven from their strongholds on the Chemin des Dames.

Another co-ordinated series of movements correlated the Southern advance with the ever memorable British victories of Cambrai and St. Quentin which burst through the Hindenburg line—that masterpiece of German military engineering.

Another British thrust won back the ground lost in the spring at Bailleul and Mount Kemmel.

Thus, step by step, were the patience and confidence of the Allied peoples justified till by November our opponents were being swept to destruction by the onrushing wave of French and British, Belgians and Americans. The German army was on the point of dissolution into a disorderly rabble; the men were discouraged and their officers disillusioned.

The leaders saw the game was up and asked for an armistice. Our every condition was agreed to, and the dictates of humanity decreed that the fighting should cease.

To-day we may have feelings of pride and gladness, but we must also hold in grateful remembrance those who by their sacrifice made our great achievements possible, and pledge ourselves to emulate them in our efforts to solve the problems of peace.

WHAT TO SEE IN RHINELAND.

RITTERGUT HORBELL.

The flat agricultural plain with which Cologne is bounded to the west and northwest presents, at first sight, few features of special interest. But if we investigate the clumps of trees which dot it here and there we shall find that in many cases they conceal farm buildings of great charm, old and mellow and often encircled by a moat.

At times indeed it is a question of something more ambitious than a farmhouse. Such is the case with the Rittergut of Horbell.

The word "ambitious," though, is somewhat of a misnomer here: "pretentious" would be worse. For the Rittergut was once what its name signifies — the mansion. It was situated in the middle of wide possessions, before Cologne had extended beyond its city walls.

It is a great rambling building of the time of our Queen Anne: a high, many-roomed, haunted-looking house, where steeply pitched roof contains a double row of windows. Its walls are damp with age. Over its great door, to which you climb by mouldering steps, are the armorial bearings of a ancient noble family, and the date — 1714.

It is like a house in a Stanley Weyman historical romance. One can picture carousals going on in it, in the old highwaymen days, foaming steeds being saddled or unsaddled in its great stone courtyard, and equally foaming tankards of ale clinking in its banqueting hall.

Shooting and hunting parties innumerable must have foregathered beneath its roof. When it was building, the campaigns of Marlborough and Prince Eugene figured largely in everybody's talk.

The Seven Years' War must have seen many troops billeted upon it, and when the armies of revolutionary France poured into the Rhine provinces Rittergut Horbell was, no doubt, oftentimes laid under contribution of its fat livestock and the produce of its fields.

After '70 the blowing up of the city walls must have shaken it from its sleep. Then Cologne flowed out towards it, into the suburbs of Lindenthal, Kriel, and the rest, until checked by the ring of powerful forts built at the conclusion of that campaign.

Soon, perhaps, the old mansion's brooding may again be disturbed by the blowing up of the city's fortifications, and then in time the suburbs will stretch out across the fields and engulf it.

I came upon Horbell first on a morning of early spring. The trees which screened it so thickly were bursting into leaf. The tangled paths which wandered through its grounds were bordered with daffodils, and waterfowl were scurrying here and there in its stagnant moat.

In the flagged courtyard I caught glimpses of black and white East Frisian milch cows in their byres. The birds were singing, and from the chimneys of the ancient house the smoke of wood fires curled upwards amid the trees.

After that my daily rides often took me back to Horbell. In the height of summer it provided a cool retreat from the midday sun. Now, in autumn, the coloured leaves enclose this story-book manor house in a framework of beautiful decay. B.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

Can you write one?

THREE PRIZES OFFERED.

Christmas will soon be here, and "The Cologne Post" wishes to encourage its readers to write short Yuletide stories suitable for publication in its columns at that festive period.

They can be on any subject and in any vein but they must not exceed 1000 words in length.

We offer prizes of 150 marks, 100 marks, and 50 marks respectively for the three best received and published, and any others we may think worthy of publication will be paid for at our regular rates.

We cannot undertake to return manuscripts and if possible these should be typewritten, though this is not essential.

The last date for receiving Christmas stories will be November 25th. Envelopes should be addressed "Story Editor" "Cologne Post" A.P.O. S/40, Rhine Army.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views.

BRITISH AND GERMAN OPERA.

Sir,—I am interested in "Claude's" distinction between British and German opera and hasten to add my humble opinion on this subject.

I have seen "Madame Butterfly" performed three times in Cologne, once at Covent Garden and once at Drury Lane, and if I was offered a ticket at any time to attend a performance of this opera at either of the three places mentioned, I should not hesitate for one moment in accepting a ticket for a Cologne performance.

As "Claude" rightly says, the opera in England is only one of the arts, and everything seems to be concentrated on the singing. It will be conceded that if the proper "atmosphere" is lacking, much of the opera loses its charm.

At the performance of "Madame Butterfly" at Drury Lane in April this year, the staging and scenic effects would, I think, have made Puccini shudder. The scenery, as compared with what one sees in Cologne was tawdry and ugly, and one's intelligence was insulted by seeing an almond tree sprouting out of an apparently thick jungle of what might have been bamboo or bananas!

The transition from a sunny afternoon to a moonlight night seemed to take place within the space of three minutes while the tender glances of "that orbed maiden with white fire laden, whom mortals call the moon" were green with envy and would have done credit to a Lyceum melodrama!

The delicacy and daintiness of the German lighting and scenic effects were entirely lacking, such trifling things as a starry tropical heaven, fireflies and glowworms being absolutely forgotten. Yet surely such trifles add to the beauty of that exquisite love duet sung by Pinkerton and Cho Cho San at the end of the first act.

The orchestra at Drury Lane was having a field day on its own and the conductor seemed to forget that while we were all no doubt very pleased to see him, we were also very keen to hear the singing which he was doing his level best to drown with his orchestra.

The German productions mostly manage to secure a pleasing harmony of orchestra, singers and scenic effects—with perhaps the exception of the bloodcurdling rendering of the barcarolle at the end of the second act in "Tales of Hoffmann" recently—whereas in English opera, scenic effects and "atmosphere" seem to be sacrificed to concentration on the singing and orchestra.

The question is, is it better to excel in one or be jolly good in all three? I'm for the latter—at present.

SENTIMENTAL TOMMY.

WIVES AND EXTRAVAGANCE.

Sir,—Really, Mr. Editor, I don't think it's quite nice for correspondents to insinuate or even to say pointedly that many husbands on the Rhine are frittering away their war gratuities on their wives out here.

There may be a certain number of young wives of the "butterfly" type out here who as somebody says have had no experience of life, have scarcely seen their husbands since they got married during the war, and now want to have their fling and make their stay in Cologne one long honeymoon. I know the type well and they may be causing gratuities to fly.

But they are only a small number and the greater part of the wives out here are a far different kind I can assure you.

In many instances I know they are actually saving the money of their "better halves." They are doing what no man can do properly, i. e. the marketing. They are providing him with company in the long evenings keeping him in the billet or together going to some reasonable entertainment. If their wives were not here their husbands would possibly be wasting their money on high-priced inferior wines at the cabarets, treating others at the clubs and in many ways squandering cash to kill the spare hours. They feel lonely without us and this is excusable.

But when we are here, we help them in many ways, save them many little expenses man by himself must incur and he is all the better for our help and society. He becomes domesticated again. At least these are the views and experiences of one wife. MARJORIE.

Sir,—I am surprised that you should publish such a letter as I read on Sunday morning, in your paper, signed "One of the Boys".

I should like to know what business it is of his, how a husband spends his money. It certainly is his own to do as he likes with, and if he likes to take his little wife about and make her happy in this strange foreign land, what does it matter to "One of the boys," or anyone for a matter of that?

If "One of the boys" has a wife she has my deepest pity. To have a husband that scraped and saved every farthing and never gave his own wife a good time must be simply dreadful.

What does he think wives are for if he can't find the money to give a poor girl a good time? W. AKBRIDE.

AN OPERA GROUSE.

Sir,—I think the complaints that have arisen from time to time about behaviour at the Opera are due to this cause mainly.

Young soldiers and girl war workers come out here having never in their lives seen such a thing as grand opera. They hear musical enthusiasts talking about it and telling how fine it is, and they go.

But what they have been expecting most likely is a lively spectacle—revue or musical comedy—and when they find they have to sit through long and serious musical and vocal efforts—not the music liked or anticipated nor the type of song they appreciate, they get restless and talkative.

They don't intentionally offend but short of leaving the place—and they don't feel like doing that when they've spent their money on a ticket—that is their form of solace.

Thank goodness, very few of this class ever go again. "Once bit, twice shy." LOHENGRIN.

EYES AND NO EYES.

Sir,—Rumour has always had it that the German hausfrau was an ideal and perfect manager, and your correspondent "Mrs. Sergeant" seems to think so too.

There are no doubt still many cases where this rumour is a fact, but they are no longer in the majority. The women work hard enough, it is true, in the case of the lower classes; and the wealthy householders wield a rod of iron over their maids, making them slog away from early morning till late at night. But they talk method.

They will spend hours cleaning out a room and thus putting the household to discomfort, only to find at the end of their labours, that instead of clearing the dirt right out of the house, it has merely been swept on to the landing.

They will dust and slop over a room with a wet cloth on the end of a brush, one day at ten, the next day after tea.

I have been billeted now for three months in one of the best houses in Cologne, after really rusticating in a tiny little cottage in the neighbourhood. And in this big house where the lady of it prides herself on being an excellent manager, the stairs and landings have to my knowledge only been three times swept down—this when there are three maids in the house.

No, give me the English run home, where even in the simplest of homes the stairs are brushed down each morning, and the rooms swept and dusted at their appointed time; where you know that by lunch time all the rooms are clean and tidy.

For mistress and maid it has the best results, for the latter can then sit down for a quiet afternoon.

HOUSEKEEPER.

QUIETUDE.

Sir,—While wishing to cast no reflection upon the admirable management of the British Empire Leave Club, I should like, through your columns, to make a suggestion, which, if carried out, would undoubtedly be a boon to the large numbers of fellows, who, like myself, make use of the reading room at the institution during the mornings.

It is that another room may be found in which musical enthusiasts of the club may practise their selections.

The other day I endeavoured to read a serious magazine, but the noise made by the imperfect renderings of piano and violin were scarcely conducive to such an occupation. In fact I found it impossible. DUMVALE.

TO GET OPERA TICKETS.

Sir,—There are, apparently, still many members of the Rhine Army who foolishly imagine that, by waiting for hours in queues at the Cologne Opera House, they will in due course obtain a ticket. To save these misguided ones further waste of time and energy I will detail the correct procedure.

At 10.00 hours three days before that on which the opera is to be produced go to the telephone, call G.H.Q. and give the Opera House number. If you get the call before 11.00 hours you may succeed in securing a couple of tickets. Then and only then is it time to think of queues.

Armed with the unconsumed portion of the day's ration take your stand before the booking office. When at last your turn comes state your business as quickly and clearly as your failing strength will allow, and at the end of fifteen minutes (if the telephone is not too persistent) the tickets will be handed over.

An alternative plan is to arrive at the Opera House half an hour (More will not matter) before the booking office is due to open. Glue yourself to the outer door. Half an hour after time (More very likely) the door will open. Dash in, vault the barrier, and bracing your legs against it, grasp the booking office window. Presently, five calls having been put through simultaneously, the clerk will put down the 'phone in despair. Now's your chance. If you can succeed in attracting his attention the rest is only a matter of time. B.O.

THAT RUGGER LEAGUE.

Sir,—I agree with "Old Timer" that Rugby Football needs encouragement in the Rhine Army, but does he realise that not only Rugger but the more popular Soccer and indeed all sports are more or less at a standstill in Rhineland just now. And there is very good reason for it. Demobilization is taking its toll every day in increasing numbers. That is one difficulty. The next is that all sorts of changes are taking place. Some Battalions are being reduced to cadre strength, others being amalgamated, units are changing about and there is uncertainty everywhere.

When officers and men don't know from one day to another whether they will be out on the Rhine for days or months or if they stop where they will be stationed, can you expect sport to be properly run or energetically organised?

Football is not the only sport that suffers from the present inevitable position. Boxing ought to be fostered and cross-country running.

But it's no good grousing. When things have settled down and we know better where we are then I'm sure sport will buck up again. T. W. T.

REMEMBER.

The wheel has come full circle; just one year
Has passed since rang out clarionlike and clear,
The message which has ended years of strife,
Released the War God's hold on Britain's life
And gave her Peace.

Time is a healer sure, and in a year
Perhaps we have forgotten these days drear,
When every moment might have been our last,
And future mingled swiftly with the past
In days of War.

But in your daily routine, pause, reflect.
Our Nation's future, if till now unchecked
The storm of war had waged; and lift your eyes
In silent thanks to Him beyond the skies
Who gave us Peace.

FOOTBALL RESULTS.

Fog Interferes with two "Needle Matches."

'SPURS FIRST DEFEAT.

The presence of fog prevented the playing of the West Bromwich v. Aston Villa, and Stoke v. Bristol City matches on Saturday. It is regrettable that these matches were not decided, as the football world was eagerly awaiting these results, especially the former.

Blackburn Rovers came an awful cropper at Manchester, the City piling on eight goals to the Rovers two. Preston did well to account for Chelsea and their eleven are bleeding nicely now. Arsenal again failed at home, only managing to draw with Bolton at Highbury. The failures of the Highbury team on their own patch do not surprise many who know this ground. The team with the luck wins here and Arsenal have had all the bad luck that was going. Newcastle again snatched a victory. It is reminiscent of the old days to see the Tynesiders on the top of Division I. Burnley's defeat of Manchester United smashed the United's record of not having lost an away match.

Second League.

The 'Spurs unexpectedly fell at Bury, the Gigg-Lane Brigade winning by the old goal in three. This is Tottenham's first defeat and their proud record of being the only undefeated club has been shattered. Much interest will centre round their conqueror's appearance on Saturday at Tottenham.

Coventry again failed at home, their "win" column still bearing the cypher. Shields did well to draw at Nottingham, and West Ham managed to run Leicester to a draw. Hull's defeat of Barnsley was a creditable performance, but the "Celtics" are missing Barson.

Southern League.

The fall of Queen's Park was a surprise and the "Lions" deserve great credit for their win. Portsmouth drew at Swansea, which was poor consolation to those who thought they were "on velvet"; while Exeter's defeat at the hands of Newport was another shock for form followers.

Scottish League.

Falkirk's draw at Celtic Park, has set all Scotland talking. Something must have gong wrong there for the "Bairns" to snatch a point. Dumbarton's draw at Motherwell proved they are the best "drawing" team in the league. How their supporters mourn for victories. The Rangers put up a fine win at Partick and the Queen's victory at Greenock was an unexpected result.

Appended are the results:

LIV'POOL AND WINDSOR.

Large Attendances for Closing Day's Racing.

THREE JOCKEYS HURT.

Both at Liverpool and Windsor, on Saturday, the weather was threatening. This fact, however, appeared to concern racegoers but very little, for at each meeting the attendance was large. With the going very agreeable, the sport was excellent.

At Liverpool, in the Valentine Steeplechase, there were three runners but none of them completed the course, all falling, and the race was declared void.

Unfortunately, each of the jockeys was hurt. J. R. Anthony, who rode Ballincarroona broke his collar bone; F. Mason, rider of South Lodge, sustained a broken thigh and W. Smith, on Cargo is suffering from a bruised back.

November Hurdle:—1, Bally Handy (3—1); 2. Stainton (9—4); 3, Wrecker (10—1). Eight ran.

Walton Handicap:—1, Damaged Goods (6—5); 2, Little Mischief (100—7); 3, Elysium (5—1). Six ran.

Grosvenor Cup:—1, Carapace (6—1); 2. Ganewell (7—2); 3, Flying Spear (5—4). Six ran.

Ormerod Plate:—1, Gripfast (6—5); 2, Kentish Cob (11—8); 3, Red Michael (6—1). Four ran.

WINDSOR RESULTS.

Thames Handicap:—1, Valley (5—1); 2, Atrocity (4—1); 3, Irish Lace (8—1). Twelve ran.

Forest Nursery:—1, Clarilaw colt (6—4 on); 2, Ether filly (6—1); Tacoronte filly (11—1). Eight ran.

Castle Handicap:—1, Trivet (2—1); 2, Roeder Don (100—8); 3, Phrosie (4—1). Ten ran.

Combermere Handicap:—1, Rock Dew (9—2); 2, Dathue (4—1); Unitor (5—1.

College Nursery:—1, Welsh Woman (8—1); 2, Bruce Lodge (100—12); Thendara (100—8. Thirteen ran.

Athens Plate:—1, Royal Hussar (3—1); 2, Chasseur (2—1); 3, Flying Post (3—1. Eight ran.

THE DERBY CUP.

Alasnam's Chance in Principal Event of the Week.

The principal racing event of the week is the Derby Cup which takes place on Friday. There is a number of good class candidates, making selection a difficult matter, writes our racing correspondent, but the consistent and increasingly good form of Alasnam in the three big Autumn handicaps inclines me to the opinion that Sir A. Bailey's big colt will go one better at Derby and catch the judge's eye.

King John and Wild Wood I regard as really live candidates; the latter, especially, has put up some good performances and the course is to his liking.

"TOTE" FOR ENGLAND?

Recommendation may come before the Jockey Club.

The whole financial position of racing in England will be carefully reviewed at an important meeting of the Jockey Club to be held in a fortnight's time. It is probable that the desirability of recommending the introduction of the totalisator or pari-mutuel on English race-courses will be considered.

This question was brought before the Jockey Club in the second year of the war, but it was rightly believed then that the time was inopportune for the Government to be troubled with the matter. Now that things have settled down again, those who advocate the adoption of this system of betting are raising their voices once more.

"VICTORY" BILLIARDS.

Falkiner's Substantial Lead Against Inman.

For eight consecutive instalments in the Burroughes and Watts Victory Billiards Tournament, Falkiner added to his original lead of 2,000 against the champion, Inman.

On Friday and Saturday the monotony was relieved slightly by Inman, in the course of the two days' play outpointing his opponent.

With the game half way through its course, however, Inman will have to make up leeway with lightning rapidity if he is to beat his young rival. Saturday's closing scores were:—

Falkiner (in play) . . . 8,844
Inman. 6,021

ATTACK ON A REFEREE.

Wolves' Ground Closed Through Spectators' Conduct.

The Football Association commission to inquire into the stopping, three minutes before time, of the Wolverhampton v. Bury match at the Molineux Grounds on Oct. 18 by the breaking in of the crowd, sat at Birmingham on Saturday.

After an exhaustive inquiry the commission were satisfied that the Wanderers club made all necessary arrangements for the proper conduct of the game, and that the spectators were responsible for the serious attack upon the referee. Complaints were made as to the decisions of the referee, but any inefficiency on the part of officials could not be accepted in explanation or extenuation of misconduct of the spectators. As the only manner in which spectators could be dealt with the Wolverhampton ground must be closed from Nov. 17 to Dec. 15 inclusive, and the club pay the expenses of the inquiry.

SOCCER FRIENDLY.

A friendly match, played at Nippes on Saturday, resulted:—41st Labour Coy. 4; 5th Labour Coy. 1.

CHAMPION'S PRIVILEGE.

Entitled to Major Share of Championship Purse.

ESTABLISHED PRECEDENT.

In view of the discussion respecting boxing purses raging at present the following comments by "Fly-weight" in the "Sunday Sportsman" are enlightening.

It has been the inflexible rule for champions to demand the lion's share of the purse whenever a match has been made, he says. An exception must be made in the case of the Jeffries—Johnson contest, when the purse was more equitably divided. Still Johnson made sure of netting a tidy fortune in this match, otherwise, perhaps, he might have insisted on more than 60 per cent. of the purse.

It seems somewhat strange in these days to recall that Tommy Burns was considered a very greedy individual just because he insisted on receiving £5,000, win, lose or draw, for defending his title against Jack Johnson, and it must be remembered that Burns admitted that he had an idea he would be beaten. How does this compare with Jack Dempsey's £5,200?

£10,000 for Beckett.

And when it is considered that Jack Johnson received only £1,500 for winning the world's championship, it will be seen that Beckett will be making no sacrifice in consenting to fight the world's champion for £10,000—which is the smallest sum he would get if the contest is promoted by Mr. Cochran—even taking into consideration the altered money value.

While nobody will deny that Beckett is entitled to all he can get, and few will blame Dempsey for demanding so large a sum for his services, seeing that he can plead the law of established precedent, our champion will be ill-advised if he throws aways his chance of fighting for the world's title by remaining firm to his bid for big money. He must remember that every championship contender has had to be content with a comparatively small sum till the title changed hands.

CARPENTIER'S SUITE.

Everything hangs on Result of Fight with Beckett.

George Carpentier's suite comprises his manager, Francois Descamps, sparring partners, lady cook, masseur, and an odd man or two.

His reception in London was not so blatantly demonstrative as that of the early summer of 1914 when he arrived to fight Gunboat Smith. "Then" he stated to a sporting correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" it was terrible. I was frightened; I wanted to run away. My welcome to-night is much better, for fighting should not tell of the circus. My condition? Tres bien; what you say 'top-hole.'

His Training.

Now I go to Stanmore to finish the training I began many weeks ago at La Geurche. No, I would not discuss my match with your big champion. Is it not enough, will it not be enough to fight him, and is it not wise to wait until it is over? Oh, yes, I am confident. Every fighter is confident. I believe I will win. I mean to win, and so does Beckett. It would be strange if it were not so. But not until the night of Dec. 4 will the winner be known. This fight means much, everything to both of us; for the man who wins will have earned the right to contend for the world's championship. An immense fortune is at stake, and that is why I feel that that the contest on the night of Dec. 4 will be the greatest that has taken place for very many years. And you will come to Stanmore, and tell me what you think. Au revoir." And Carpentier hurried away.

N.Y. NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.

The International Sporting Club has been organised in New York along the lines of the London and Paris sporting clubs, to conduct clean boxing contests. Major Anthony Drexel Biddle is the president, and the vice-presidents are: Mr. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior; Admiral Sims, Justice Barton Weeks, and Gen. Coweman Dupont. The opening night has been fixed for February 3, when Jimmy Wilde is to meet a selected opponent in a match arranged by Tex Rickard, who promoted the Dempsey-Willard fight.

20 MILES WALKING RACE.

Result of Birmingham Club's Road Event.

The Birmingham Walking Club's 20 mile road race attracted considerable interest on Saturday. The result was:—

1. Rogers, Birmingham
2. Horton, Surrey
3. Parslow, Surrey.

Rogers won by half a mile. Time three hours, 52 seconds.

NOT A PUBLIC PLACE.

Successful Plea in Summons for Bad Language at Football Match.

On a plea that a football ground is not a public place, within the meaning of the act, the Nottingham magistrates dismissed a summons against a spectator for using improper language during the Notts County and Derby County match. There were 30,000 present.

FAMOUS GOALKEEPER DEAD.

J. E. Doig, the famous goalkeeper, died on Friday night at Liverpool at the age of 52. One of the greatest goalkeepers that ever played football Doig started his career at a town in Forfarshire and soon came into the first rank. He was repeatedly chosen to represent Scotland in international matches and played for Sunderland and Liverpool.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED?

Sports Officer Deplores Decline in Sporting Spirit.

YOUNG SOLDIERS CRITICISED.

In the following article a unit sports officer deplores the lack of enthusiasm for sport displayed by the British soldiers in the Rhine Army. He says:

Many fortunate and favoured enthusiasts of sport will question whether I am justified in asking the above, but the spirit of sport, for which the British soldier has ever been famous, appears to be so much on the decline among our young soldiers that I venture to expound my humble views to others on this matter for their consideration and discussion.

In Service Battalions between the years 1914 and 1918, sport was the next consideration to duty. At every spare moment when away from the "line" both Officers and men would strip and away to the fields for some form of recreation, but in the Rhine Army, among the young soldiers who, at their age should be full of life and vigour, no such interest is shown.

Large stocks of recreational gear have either been purchased or issued free to battalions, grounds are available, time is of very little consideration and yet before these "budding" soldiers will participate in any form of sport, speaking metaphorically, "they have to be hauled out by the scruff of their necks."

Lack of Grit.

A few instances to justify my statement will perhaps be of some interest.

On one occasion the services of a boxing instructor were obtained for the sole use of a battalion, all were invited to attend for a course of instruction, but out of a whole battalion only four men had grit enough to roll up. Men were encouraged to form a regimental cross-country team of eight; this idea had to be dropped for the reason that not even eight men would take the trouble of stripping for an afternoon practice run. The old inter-company rivalry is almost entirely extinct amongst troops in the Occupied Territory.

At a Regimental Athletic Meeting last July "esprit de Corps" was so lacking that few men supported even their company although good prizes were offered as a recognition. Midsummer this year, a certain Brigade Sports Meeting was held. Of the competitors, over 50 per cent. were officers who, at the last moment, and without training had to compete in order to uphold the status of their various battalions.

A Sporting Minority.

Speaking from what little experience I have had, in most battalions there are about two dozen real sport enthusiasts and these people with the grit are good all-round sports and play almost anything, but the remainder are either content with watching others or wander in the town and attend picture halls.

Another side to this question is the lack of system and organisation in arranging meetings and fixtures of any kind. Of late, several units having football fixtures have left the Rhine without informing other units of their inability to play. Teams have arrived on the appointed grounds only to be disappointed: this is one of the things which is killing the little enthusiasm which still remains.

Great difficulty is experienced in keeping a team together. Very often when a team is selected, one or two of it's "stars" are unable to play. What happens? Some of the remainder, fearing to play on a losing side "cry off" themselves.

No Lack of Opportunity.

At the present time, out of a battalion of say six or seven hundred, how many men have handled a hockey stick, played a game of cricket, run a hundred yards or a mile in a competition, had on a pair of boxing gloves or played a game of rugby? I am quite certain the number would not exceed 40. The cry of lack of opportunity is no excuse whatever.

My intention in writing this is far from a grievance, but rather to obtain the views of others, and with this little effort to help bring to the fore, that spirit, which, during the strain of 1914-1918 did so much to help our troops to gain the position they now hold.

OLD BRIGADE.

INTERNATIONAL RUGBY GAMES.

The French national rugby football team has arranged four fixtures with British national teams during the present season as follows:—

Jan. 1, at Paris, France v. Scotland.
Jan. 31, at Twickenham, France v. England.
Febr. 17, at Paris, France v. Wales.
April 6, at Belfast or Dublin, France v. Ireland.

A team representing the French Army will meet a British Army team in Paris on a date to be fixed later.

Manchester Handicap Sweep.

Many requests have been received at this office for tickets for the Lille Sweepstake in connection with the Manchester November Handicap, or for an address in Cologne whereat they are obtainable.

So far, it seems, there are none to be had in Cologne, but they are expected shortly to be available. They will then be obtainable at ten shillings each from 2 Lt. E. MOORE, c/o "THE COLOGNE POST," COLOGNE.

Applications by post should be accompanied by cheque or postal order and not marks.

Juvenile Boxing.

The A.B.A will accept entries from secondary schools for the Public Schools Boxing Championship, as suggested by the Headmasters' Association and the Headmasters' Conference.

Varsity Golf.

The outstanding feature of golf at Oxford this term is the playing strength available. The golfing resources of Cambridge are not yet fully known.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

Backhaus.

One is lost in amazement at Wilhelm Backhaus. His extraordinary memory is wonderful, his execution and sheer technique are perfect, but to us who have revelled in his recitals here, the most delightful attribute of his art is his interpretation of the great classics of the pianoforte. He does not merely play Beethoven or other of the great ones. He actually lives them. Oblivious of the audience, he is conscious only of the supreme material under his hands and in his brain. He is Schubert and his moods, Mozart and his delicacy, Chopin and beauty.

Au revoir.

Alas, that for many months we shall not hear him play, as he is due to leave this week on an extended tour. Therefore his visit to the Deutsches Theatre on Sunday night was for many of the large audience a long leave-taking. His programme was drawn from Schubert, including the vivid Fantasia "The Wanderer," Mozart, (Sonata in A Major), four Chopin pieces, with the Scherzo in B Flat Minor, and Liszt's Rhapsodie No. 2 the last two last named being rendered with marvellous tone touch and brilliance. He will be greatly missed by his English friends in Cologne and on Sunday evening he was many times asked "When are you coming to England?" In this connection America has "got one" on England, as he is booked for a big tour in the United States next Winter.

Howard Fry.

This popular singer, who assisted at the Recital, was in great form. He sang in all six songs (two in response to insistent encores). They were of various styles, from plain ballade to Cowen's "Unaway, Awake" and Mendelssohn's "I'm a Roamer" in all of which he shone, though the last named song is rather too exacting for his compass. He is rapidly making a name for himself. He was very ably assisted by Mr. (otherwise Private) E. C. Hosier, who accompanied with great charm.

The Memory Man.

Yesterday, I had a chat with "Datas" the wonderful memory man who is this week amazing large audiences nightly at the Palace Theatre, Cologne. Although naturally a reserved, modest man, "Datas" had some interesting things to say about himself. Born in Kent in 1875, his education was not very extensive. At the age of eleven, he became a railway van boy. Then he worked every night at a gas works. It was while thus employed that his memory was "discovered." He was relating the dates of various events to two strangers, thus settling an argument, when a third stranger, who had overheard the conversation, asked "Datas" if he would care to go on the stage. The suggestion was accepted immediately and the memory man made his first appearance at the Standard Music Hall, Victoria. "Datas" has performed practically all over the world and has frequently appeared before Royalty. He claims to have at his finger tips, so to speak, 2,000 facts about the war which, he declares, he read in a little book of dates and at once committed them to memory.

"I can state 2,000 facts and dates about the war, "said "Datas" "the dates of all the declarations of war, of all the battles, of the landing of expeditionary forces in all parts of the world, the names and dates of towns captured in all the theatres of war, the dates when ships were sunk, when the leading generals were born, and a host of other things beside, including the date of every air raid on any town in England."

* * *

"I know the dates when all the raids on the Kent coast towns took place—every one of them—and when the Zeppelins bombed every town they did bomb. Let me state definitely that the marvellous relentiveness of my memory is fundamentally a natural gift. But that does not mean that I have not developed it.

"The "strong man" would soon lose his power to perform feats of strength if he neglected to train. It is just the same with memory. One must "keep fit," so to speak, by constant exercise of the power of memorisation."

B.E.L.C. Debating Society.

A meeting for the formation of a Debating Society for the Rhine Army was held at the British Empire Leave Club on Friday evening. Colonel Heath, D.S.O., Commandant of the Army General and Commercial College, outlined the possibility of such a society, which Capt. G. Dennis K.O.Y.LI., was asked to preside over and organize. The first debate will be held on Friday next when Gunner Harrison Northern Division Equipment Guard will propose and Pte. W. F. Jones, Royal Fusiliers will oppose the motion "That this House would welcome a Labour Government in England." It is hoped that all O.Rs keen on political debates and prepared to help in the speaking will attend on Friday next.

"The Jesters" at Coblenz.

I was always confident that "The Jesters" would find favour with the American audiences on their visit to Coblenz, and the following cutting from the "Amaroc News" Leaves no doubt as to the impression they have created. It says:—

The Yanks of Coblenz were treated to a regular show of the true Broadway type last evening at the Festhalle, when a vaudeville troupe, calling themselves "The Jesters," gave their initial showing before a crowded house.

"The Jesters" is a variety concert company, rather than what most Americans understand to be a vaudeville troupe, at the show, highly interesting and snappy throughout, is a continuous performance by the six artistes in the caste, rather than a series of separate, disconnected acts. A decidedly British accent was noticeable among the performers, and, judging by the clamorous applause and enthusiastic whistling which followed the rendering of each item of a fairly long programme, this improved, rather than detracted from, the quality of the entertainment and gave the boys something entirely new.

British Empire Leave Club.

The theatre at the B.E.L.C. was crowded on Sunday night to hear a splendid concert by the London Divisional String Orchestra and the Pipers of the 11th. Royal Scots. The orchestra gave a delightful programme, some of the most popular numbers being "Selection, from Chu Chin Chow," "The Merchant of Venice Suite," and the "Indian Love Lyrics." At two points in the programme the 11th. Royal Scots marched through the Hall and played to a delighted audience. The solo violinist, Miss West rendered "Air on the G String" and a dance by Bach, which she played with great power and expression.

JACQUES.

WOMAN REFEREE.

Mrs. Butler, of the Ryde House School, Ripley, Surrey, who has acted as a football referee for three years and trained a boys' team, sought on Friday to have her qualifications passed by the Surrey County Referees' committee.

Her application created a long discussion, and eventually the committee decided to ask the Football Association for a ruling. Mrs. Butler scored in an argument on the offside rule.

KING AT RUGBY MATCH.

The King yesterday visited Queen's Club and witnessed the Rugby match between the R.M.A. and the R.M.C. He arrived just before the kick-off, and Generals White and Stevens, the heads of the two colleges, were presented to him.

TRY YOUR SKILL.

Our Weekly Football Contest Still Going Strong.

In connection with No. 7 coupon, the matches for which were decided on Saturday, two games did not take place. These were the West Bromwich Albion v. Aston Villa and Stoke v. Bristol City encounters. Thus, according to our rules, the prize will go to the competitor (or competitors) who submitted the nearest to ten correct forecasts. The principal surprises among the coupon matches were the defeats of Luton and Queen's Park on their own grounds. These results have tripped many competitors. The two draws, those of Arsenal and Leicester, also upset numerous efforts.

The result of contest No. 7 appears on Thursday.

Judging by Saturday's results, No. 8 coupon presents a fine chance for competitors. All you have to do is to strike out on the coupon the name of the team you think will lose. If you predict a drawn game, do not delete either team. Send in as many coupons as you wish, but don't forget to enclose one mark with each.

Coupons must be addressed:—
FOOTBALL CONTEST No. 8,
"Cologne Post",
A.P.O. S.40 Rhine Army.

List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.
2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.
3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for any reason, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.
4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.
5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into. Neither will interviews be granted.
6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.
7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, misaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.
8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.
9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

FOOTBALL COMPETITION No. 8.

Date of matches, Saturday, Nov 15th.
Closing date, Friday, Nov. 14th.

Aston Villa	v.	West Bromwich A.
Sheffield W.	v.	Derby C.
Notts C.	v.	Sunderland
Bradford C.	v.	Everton
Blackpool	v.	Fulham
Wolves	v.	Birmingham
Hull C.	v.	Barnsley
Portsmouth	v.	Exeter C.
Watford	v.	Plymouth
Clyde	v.	Clyd-bank
Dumbarton	v.	Partick
Third Lanark	v.	Motherwell

I enter Football Competition No. 8 in accordance with the Rules and Conditions announced above, and agree to accept the published decision as final and legally binding.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Merry Times Ahead.

There are indications that in spite of reduced personnel the coming winter months in Cologne are going to be full of social incident. All sorts of pleasurable stunts are being thought out.

Far from the Madding.

I went into the writing room at the "Earwig" the other afternoon to pen a few letters. I hadn't been there five minutes before a fearsome din of discordant sounds started on the other side of the curtain. I was "jazzed" out and had to seek elsewhere for quietude.

Dame Rumour.

The wildest of rumours are floating around as to the re-arrangement of locations for British troops in the Rhine Area. Believe nothing until you see it in orders, is a safe rule.

Buying Cutlery.

Razors, scissors and knives being so scarce and dear in Blighty I hear that quantities of these useful articles are being bought in Rhineland by all ranks for Christmas presents. The quality as a rule is excellent and the prices low.

Four Kings.

By an extraordinary chance it happens that at one mess in the Cologne area just now there are four members bearing the name King. So to avoid confusion the Mess President has, with the exception of the senior who retains his right surname, rechristened them respectively, Monarch, Emperor and Shah.

An Orchestral Treat.

Tomorrow (Wednesday) I hear there is to be an Orchestral Concert from 3.30 to 5.30 p.m. at the VI Corps Club. Twenty instrumentalists are to perform.

Neutral Ground.

"Not to be used as a billet-neutral Consulate," is the printed edict in a Severin Strasse window, and I don't suppose I should have noticed the place at all but for the fact that the premises, the Spanish consulate, by the way, are being newly painted.

Scarce Consulates.

Which reminds me that during all my rambles in the City I have only noticed two other consulates, the Mexican, down by the Rhineside, and the Norwegian, in Albertusstrasse, and of course they have their national flags flying over the doorway.

Few Vacancies.

I hear that several officers who hoped to have had their daughters educated at the various convent schools in Rhineland find to their disappointment that most of them have their full quota of pupils.

The Cap and the Cross.

Considering its population I should say Cologne is remarkably free from beggars, though there are some. The seeker after alms whom I have noticed most, is a maimed ex-soldier, who, cap in hand and his Iron Cross ribbon conspicuously displayed, is invariably in position near a certain church.

THE OLD STORY IN A NEW PLACE.

Temptation in the Hohestrasse. Hubby paid.

Uncommon.

Several Germans were curious to know the nationality of two New Zealanders, who quite oblivious of the interest they were arousing, were strolling leisurely along the Glockengasse. It is a rare thing now to see Colonial troops in Rhineland.

Jazz Fliers.

I notice one or two air officers at the afternoon dance teas at the Club who are great adepts at the "Jazz". But elsewhere one sees scarcely any of the Air Force nowadays.

Britannia's Pose.

I annoyed a German civilian, an ardent Royalist by the way, by asking him to find the Kaiser's head on a ten-shilling note. He gave it up, and then I pointed it out to him. It is at Britannia's feet, one of which is placed on the Kaiser's neck. Have you noticed it?

Many Scots.

The absence of khaki in the Hohestrasse on Sunday night was rather marked, but there seemed to be a good sprinkling of the Scots element. Some killed new comers would seem to have arrived in Cologne.

The Betrothal Column.

You will have noticed of course that our home papers announce births, marriages and deaths only, but the German press has in addition its caption for betrothals, and every engagement seems to be publicly announced once the necessary understanding is arrived at.

Devout Soldiers.

Catholic social workers in Rhineland and many soldiers are at present on a pilgrimage to Lourdes, I hear.

Boleslty.

You will have noticed the sign "Reitweg" in the Ring and by the riverside. It means the "riding way," and here you can see of an afternoon officers and grooms cantering along. But I notice down Riehl way that civilians taking similar exercise ignore the Reitweg for the Strand. From the look of their mounts I can appreciate their modesty

The Best Time.

If you really want to have plenty of dancing for your elf and partner at the N.A.C.B. Club "Jazz" teas, I'd advise you to drop in during the mid-week. At the end of the week they are a bit crowded.

Hurrying Home.

One of the N.A.C.B. girls looking rather abashed and walking hurriedly back to their hostel was noticed the other night. A friend had just given her the hint that she had come out in stockings of odd colours which she hadn't previously noticed.

Growing Ancient.

It won't be many days before we are producing our 200th number. It seems but yesterday that we were celebrating the centenary of the "Post."

Weddings.

The wedding procession in Cologne is not in it for ceremonial with its counterpart in the villages, where, as a rule, carriages are discarded and the bridal party, followed by the guests, carrying the inevitable "wreaths" walk through the middle of the street from their residence to the church, the while the population has holiday.

What is he to do?

An officer I know is in a fix. He started dental treatment with a German dentist and a new plate is on the way. Now the order has come out forbidding all ranks to go to other than British practitioners.

Snowed Under.

A gunner officer told me an interesting fact yesterday. He said that during the war he was commanding his battery at three separate reviews by three different reigning monarchs and on each occasion the march past was in a heavy snowstorm.

Two Things at Once.

Passing a hand over his forehead, the worried drill-sergeant paused for breath as he surveyed the knock-kneed recruit. Then he pointed a scornful finger. "No," he declared, "you're hopeless. You'll never make a soldier. Look at you now. The top 'alf of your legs is standing to attention an' the bottom 'alf is standing' at ease!"

Honeymooning.

A New Zealand soldier and his English bride are spending their honeymoon in Rhineland.

Bundles.

What remarkable bundles are carried on the standing-up portion of the trams. The other day two poor women with bundles of firewood managed to squeeze their way in, and at the next stop, a young woman carrying a large churchyard memorial cross, joined the congested party.

Overheard in Camp.

Pat (on his first sentry duty): "Halt, who goes there?" Officer: "Officer of the day." Pat (suspiciously): "Wot the divil are ye doin' wanderin' about at night, then?"

No Batmen.

Batmen are growing extremely scarce through the rush for demobilization. I know of several officers who have to get up at least half an hour earlier than usual to burnish buttons, and polish belt and boots themselves.

RHINELANDER.

FOR BUSINESS MEN IN RHINELAND.

Complaints are being received that letters are being posted from the United Kingdom insufficiently stamped. This causes unnecessary delay, annoyance and extra expense for the recipient and should be avoided. Representatives, please note and advise your head offices accordingly.

* * *

The War Office states that parcels for private individuals in Germany should not be addressed to the care of the British Military Mission, Berlin, as the Mission cannot undertake the distribution of such parcels.

* * *

The Nottingham Chamber of Commerce are pressing upon the Government the urgency of recovering debts owing by firms in Germany to the Nottingham lace trade. The amount of these debts is computed at over half a million sterling.

* * *

A proposal is on foot to utilise the vacant site at the corner of Marzellenstrasse to accommodate a large building to be used as the Cologne Commercial Exchange. It is suggested that it should be proceeded with at once in order to be the centre of the proposed Cologne Fair.

* * *

A German contemporary states that the British manufacturers are taking steps to increase the commercial traffic transport facilities in the occupied area. Much more business would be done if further transport could be secured and credit granted by British banks to sound business men trading with Rhineland.

* * *

It is also stated that some London Banks are seeking the co-operation of Dutch banking firms who are more familiar with the conditions prevailing in Germany. A direct daily service of steamers between London and Cologne is also mentioned.

* * *

The German Government has laid down the following conditions with regard to imports into and exports from Germany: Imports.—As far as imports are concerned, general prohibition is to remain in force, but lists of free imports will be drawn up. All raw materials which are urgently required for German industry are to be admitted without licence, the import of half-finished goods is to remain under control, while that of finished articles will be regulated according to requirements in each case.

* * *

Exports.—Export is to be free, generally speaking, but special regulations and prohibitions are to be issued for certain goods which will be arranged in groups. The export of finished articles is to be free in principle; half-finished goods are to be subject to special regulations, if they are needed by German industry for finishing purposes and if there is any doubt about the supply being able to meet the demand; the export of raw material is only to be allowed in exceptional cases. The Commissioner for Imports and Exports will draw up lists of prohibited half-finished goods and raw materials in co-operation with the trades concerned.

* * *

Delegates nominated by the Commissioner for Imports and Exports will decide, in the name of the latter, as far as their areas are concerned. The Foreign Trade Departments which were formed earlier in the year by certain industries, are to decide questions of import and export only if the whole of the trade concerned wishes that they should do so.

ETHICS OF ECONOMY.

A COMPARISON.

Scene: The "Earwig."

"Let's stroll up the Hohe Strasse, Jimmy. There's always something to see there and it's cheap amusement."

"Righto! Old Bean, but I must have a drink first. Hi! Waiter"! . . . . Minus Eighteen marks.

Up the Hohe Strasse.

"Say, Jimmy, there's old Jimps and his wife, spending money as usual buying something just beause the mark is cheap; cutlery, this time, apparently. Those Johnnies who have written to the "Post" saying how costly it is to have wives here are quite right. Must take all a man's P. and A. Far better enjoy yourself a little."

Jimmy is not quite sure, for he has a wife not out here and feels it. Becoming thoughtful he does not respond to the Old Bean's jocularity and is immediately dragged into a weinstube to get "bucked up." An hour later—88 marks.

"Come along Old Bean, I'm better now. We'll just drop in at the Earwig and see if any of the crew are there." The crew (six of them) are there and our pair take their places in the circle. Drinks round—acntmal. Total—350 marks.

Next Morning.

Jimps finds himself with quite a useful addition to the amenities of his household at home, at a cost of 120 marks, while Jimmy and the Old Bean have bad heads and wobbly interiors. And yet they'll talk to-morrow about the expensiveness of having wives out here. Hypocrites!

THE OLD DUTCH HOUSE.

N.A.C.B. ACTIVITIES.

The Restaurant and Club for W.O.'s, N.C.O.'s and their wives will have its accommodation considerably increased on Wednesday when the large reading room, hitherto used as a reading room at the Ewige Lamp, is to be added to the W.O.'s and N.C.O.'s establishment. This change has obviously been necessary since the opening of the popular N.C.O.'s resort.

Another welcome event in the N.A.C.B. sphere is the opening of a large beer bar at the Stapelhaus establishment on the river bank. Considerable space has been enclosed and comfortably furnished so that other ranks may take a glass of good beer in warmth and comfort.

EX-NAVAL COMMANDER
Cured Of Crippling LEG TROUBLE.

Ex-LIEUT. COMMANDER H. J. MORGAN, R.N., who lives at Laurel Cottage, Porchester, Hants, pays a splendid tribute to ZAM-BUK.

"I never had any serious bodily ailment," he said to a reporter, "until I suffered from acute pains down my left side after a cycle run in the wet. They started at the top of my leg and extended down to the ankle.

"The sensation at first was as if my leg had been seized with cramp. This was followed by agonising pain just like a saw being run up and down the limb. I used to roll on the floor in agony. Embrocation, ointment, and medicine proved useless. Then a friend persuaded me to try ZAM-BUK, which gave me much relief.

"I therefore persevered with ZAM-BUK, and every day the pain and stiffness decreased. At last I parted with my sticks, and a little later I started cycling again. It is 6 years since I used ZAM-BUK, and I have never suffered an ache or pain since."

TRADING PROCLAMATION.

RESTRICTIONS AND SAFEGUARDS FOR COMMERCIAL TRANSACTIONS.

FRENCH PRESIDENT'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

TRADE AND TRADERS.

FOR MUTUAL PROTECTION AND INTEGRITY.

The following important proclamation concerning trade and traders, with legal safeguards and remedies, has been issued by Sir William Robertson, Commanding-in-Chief, British Army of the Rhine. Instructions Regarding the Application within the British Occupied Territory of German Laws dealing with the Protection of Commerce and the Prevention of Profiteering and Illicit Trade.

1. The following instructions are applicable to all persons in the British Occupied Area, excepting those belonging to or accompanying the Allied Armies:—

2. Notwithstanding the fact that whilst the Import and Export of goods in and out of Occupied Territory is, as heretofore, free, yet such goods and the persons dealing in them, on arrival in the British Occupied Territory, are subject to the existing German laws regarding the protection of commerce, etc., excepting in so far as these laws have been or may be suspended, altered, modified or superseded by instructions issued by the British Military Authorities.

The effect of this paragraph will not be retrospective.

3. Allied subjects shall have the right to bring actions against other Allied, Neutral or German subjects before the existing German courts, and similarly German subjects shall have the right to bring actions against Allied subjects before the German courts.

Sentences and decisions given by the German courts in such cases are subject to the provisions of Paragraph 4 of these instructions.

4. (a) All sentences and decisions given by the German Civil Authorities in cases where Allied subjects in the British Occupied Territory are concerned can be annulled or modified by the British Military Governor on appeal being made by such Allied subjects.

This appeal must be lodged with the British Military Governor within the three days following the day on which the sentence or decision was promulgated to the individual concerned by the German Civil Authority. (b) No sentence or decision will be put into final execution by the German Authorities until five days have elapsed after the day on which the sentence or decision was promulgated. The British Military Authorities may in any case order suspension of execution for such time as they may direct.

5. All persons, whether principals, representatives or agents, trading in the British Occupied Area must be in possession of a trading certificate (Handelserlaubnis) in cases where such is required by German Law. This will be issued by the German Civil Authority concerned (Handelserlaubnis-Stelle with the Ober-Burgermeister or Landrat). The British Military Authorities reserve to themselves the final decision as to the granting or refusing of such trading certificates to Allied subjects.

All persons now engaged in trade in the British Occupied Zone who should be in possession of such trading certificates and do not yet possess them, must have applied for same by the 21st November, 1919.

6. These instructions come into force forthwith.

W. R. ROBERTSON, General,
Commanding-in-Chief,
British Army of the Rhine.
November 12th, 1919.

MORE STAGGERS.

AMERICAN MINERS RESIST INJUNCTION.

Holding that the Government injunction against the coal miners' leaders is "so autocratic as to stagger the human mind," the Executive Council of the Federation of Labour in the United States has issued a statement declaring that the miners' strike was justified and promising the entire support of organised labour in favour of the strikers. The statement asks for the assistance of the general public and their endorsement of the Executive Council's action. Mr. Lewis, acting head of the Miners' Union, denies that he agreed to comply with the Court's injunction and demand to call off the strike.

GENERAL DEGOUTTE TO VISIT COLOGNE TO-DAY.

We understand that General Degoutte, who commands the French Army of the Rhine, is paying a visit to Cologne to-day, and that he will arrive at Cologne Main Station at 12.00 hours, where he will be received by the Commander-in-Chief. The 106th Battalion West Yorkshire Regiment will be on parade in the Cathedral Square.

POINCARÉ'S VISIT.

FRENCH PRESIDENT IN ENGLAND.

The President of the French Republic, M. Raymond Poincaré, arrived at Victoria Station on Monday afternoon with Madame Poincaré. He was met at the station by the King and Queen, Princess Mary, Prince Arthur of Connaught, Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. A. J. Balfour, and other members of the Cabinet, and an array of distinguished military, naval and flying officers. Loud cheers were raised by the people in the station, the entrance to which had been closed some time before his arrival. The route of the procession to Buckingham Palace was thronged for hours before his train was due. After cordial mutual greetings by the King, the guard of honour was inspected. The King and President then drove in an open carriage with cavalry escort through long lines of cheering spectators.

At Dover he had been met by Prince Albert and Monsieur Cambon. He was greeted on disembarking by the band of the Connaught Rangers which played Le Marseillaise. He inspected the Naval Military guard of honour and received an address of welcome from the Corporation of Dover, and Madame Poincaré accepted a bouquet from the Mayoress.

A State Banquet was held at Buckingham Palace in the evening.

In proposing President Poincaré's health the King expressed his pleasure at welcoming the President on his first visit to England since the complete defeat of the common enemy and expressed his profound appreciation of the glorious feats performed by French troops in association with their Allies under the splendid leadership of Marshal Foch. He referred to the Alliance between Great Britain and France, which has been made permanent by their joint sacrifices and victories, adding "my country has already given fresh proof of her devotion to the Alliance by a treaty of defence binding her to aid France if she is menaced afresh by her old enemy." He prayed that heaven would avert such a calamity and expressed the belief that the League of Nations would ensure the peace of the world.

Finally His Majesty expressed his confident faith in the glorious destinies of their two nations proceeding together along the path of peace, united by indissoluble ties and by undying memories of common endurance and common triumphs. "Our aspirations are identical; our interests should never conflict. I am unable to contemplate any situation in which we shall not act together in defence of our high ideals of liberty and justice."

Replying to His Majesty, President Poincaré reviewed at great length British and French co-operation, both in efforts to avert war and in the conduct of hostilities. He paid a warm tribute to the great part taken by Britain on land and sea in securing the final victory. He then expressed the hope that Great Britain would never have to redeem her solemn promise of military assistance in the event of a fresh attack on France's North-Eastern frontiers, and that the League of Nations would receive the authority and power necessary for the accomplishment of its specific mission, in which fraternal collaboration of Great Britain and France would still retain its value and usefulness. They can by their Union do much for the tranquility of their own future and the happiness of humanity.

In conclusion President Poincaré said that both nations were specially interested in seeing that Germany faithfully fulfilled the Peace Treaty, over the execution of which they must together watch for long years to come. They will, he said, have to remove from the new Europe evil temptations and risks of adventure and procure for the world security of tenure and freedom of work, a task that is not unworthy of England, France and their Allies.

DEATH OF CARDINAL HARTMANN.

We regret to announce that Cardinal Hartmann, Bishop of Cologne, died yesterday at 2 a.m. Hemorrhage of the brain, with resultant paralysis, was complicated by inflammation of the lungs.

The last bulletin issued over-night ran: "The Cardinal is completely unconscious. Pulse and respiration are accelerated and his condition extremely grave. "Immediately after the Cardinal passed away, his Secretary celebrated Holy Mass in the private chapel.

The body will lie in state in the crypt of St. Gereons's Church until the interment. The obsequies will take place in the Dom at 9 a.m. on Teusday next, the 18th November.

Viscount Curzon will represent Great Britain at the first Council meeting of the League of Nations.

Cardinal Mercier arrived at Liverpool on Monday morning and proceeded to London, where he will be the guest of Cardinal Bourne.

FORTY-THREE SAVED

DRAMATIC LIFEBOAT RESCUE IN FIERCE STORM.

A most thrilling rescue of forty-three members of a ship's crew was effected on Sunday night off the mouth of the Tyne. The wrecked vessel was the steamer Linerton, of Newcastle. She was outward bound to America on her maiden voyage, but she became disabled through engine trouble, and it was while she was attempting to return to the Tyne that she was driven ashore in a terrific gale.

After eight steam tugs had unsuccessfully endeavoured to salve her, the rocket apparatus was brought to the scene but the line failed to reach the ship. As the lives of the crew were in great danger the lifeboat put out and after three hours hazardous task safely rescued the men. Eighty thousand people witnessed the rescue in a blinding snowstorm.

RUSSIA AND PEACE.

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

In Parliament yesterday Mr. Bottomley asked whether the Premier's statement at the Guildhall on Saturday to the effect that he hoped the time was not distant when the Powers would be able to renew the attempt to organise peace among the warring sections in Russia was intended to imply a willingness to open negotiations with Lenin and Trotzky. If so, would the Government, before taking such a step, give the House an opportunity of expressing its opinion?

Mr. Bonar Law suggested that the question would be better put to Mr. Lloyd George on Thursday, but added that Mr. Lloyd George's speech, in which he spoke of reflection during the winter, showed there was no immediate intention of doing anything of the kind indicated by Mr. Bottomley and he could assure the House that no steps would be taken until the House had had full opportunity of discussing it.

Another member asked whether the House was to understand that the Government had in no wise departed from the policy described by Mr. Churchill last Wednesday and endorsed by an overwhelming vote in the House.

Mr. Bonar Law replied "I have already said exactly how the speech strikes me. It is simply an expression of hope, which I am sure the House will share, that there may be some method of getting peace in Russia."

CHEAPER COAL.

SLIDING SCALE TO BE INTRODUCED.

The Government has definitely decided to reduce the price of coal and will at once hold a conference with the miners' leaders to discuss the basis of reduction. It is understood that the Ministers concerned hope to frame a sliding scale of prices corresponding to output, any reduction in price being based on the existing output and each subsequent rise and fall of price being determined by rise and fall of output. Wages will also be taken into account in determining prices but in this connection the miners' leaders intend to insist on a strict limitation of profits as they are in excess of what they ought to be and are therefore responsible for the prevailing high prices of coal. The miners will also raise the question of nationalisation. The present apparent decrease of output is attributed to a large increase in the number of men employed. The Government, however, does not accept the view that there is any great increase in output per man.

EXCHANGING RUSSIAN PRISONERS.

Replying to a question regarding the proposed meeting of British and Soviet delegates at Copenhagen to arrange for exchange of prisoners, Mr. Cecil Harmsworth said the Government is waiting for a reply from the Soviet Government to a message inquiring the date on which the Soviet delegates will present themselves on the Esthonian front.

His Majesty's Government hopes that the negotiations may be brought to a successful issue and that our men may soon be able to leave Russia.

GALLANT LAND GIRL MARRIED.

Miss Peggy Fisher, the East Sussex land girl who gained the "Land Army V.C." for saving her sweetheart, Arthur Marshall, from being gored by a bull, was married at Fletching on Saturday to the man she rescued. The bride drove to the church in a gaily decorated farm wagon, drawn by six horses and accompanied by 12 land girls in uniform, who formed an archway of farm pitchforks as the pair left the church.

GRATEFUL CONVICTS.

Convicts at Parkhurst Prison have joined in a request to be allowed to send a floral tribute to the funeral of Monsignor Canon Conway as a token of their great respect and affection for the canon, who was Roman Catholic chaplain at the prison for twenty years. As the canon had expressed a wish that there should be no flowers, the request of the prisoners, much to their regret, could not be acceded to.

GLUT OF MEAT.

UNLIMITED SUPPLY IN EXCESS OF RATIONS.

In view of the heavy arrivals of Australian and New Zealand mutton and lamb, the Food Controller has made an immediate reduction of 2d. per pound in the maximum retail price of imported mutton and lamb.

The difficulty at the moment is not how to get meat but how to get rid of it. Every cold store in the country is crammed with meat, says the "Evening News." Ships in the Thames and Mersey cannot unload in consequence, and other vessels are on the way bringing more. During the last few days over 40,000 tons of New Zealand mutton have arrived in England. Smithfield's normal requirements at this time of year are about eight thousand tons.

To make matters worse the public are eating less meat than formerly. For the last week or two there has been practically no limit to the amount of meat buyable but Smithfield last week failed to clear itself, although supplies on the market were 1,600 tons below normal. The head of one meat firm says that "unless the Government decides to cut its losses and make a new start, thousands of tons will go bad. People cannot afford to buy meat in any quantity at the present prices."

The prescribed ration is 2s. worth of beef and mutton per head per week. This, however, is not a maximum quantity, but a guaranteed minimum. Until further notice butchers may supply, and consumers may purchase from the butcher with whom they are registered (whenever he has sufficient supplies), any quantity of beef and mutton they may desire. Should it become necessary to modify this arrangement due notice will be given.

The Ministry of Food desires also to remind the public that the weekly ration of Government butter is increased from 1 oz to 1½ oz per head as from to-day. The Ministry is able to authorise this reversion to the pre-strike ration of Government butter owing to improved facilities for transport.

GERMANY AND COURLAND.

WAR MATERIAL FOR BERMONDT.

War material for General Bermondt's troops is continually reaching Courland from Germany, says the Lett Foreign Minister in a telegram to the Lettish Press Bureau at Copenhagen. Seventeen aeroplanes, as well as machine guns, have just arrived. Colonel Bermondt is reported to have admitted the failure of his attack on Riga and to have declared that he sets all his hopes on Germany.

ESCAPED PRISONER'S MIXED RECORD.

Identified as one of the six military prisoners who escaped, after gagging and handcuffing their guard, John Black, a youth of 19, a private in the King's Own Scottish Borderers, improperly attired as an officer, was charged, at Westminster, with robberies from the Alexandra Pavilion for Officers, Grosvenor-gardens, and elsewhere.

Detective-sergeant Worth, said when prisoner, undergoing a long sentence for stealing mess funds at Calais, he escaped with other prisoners being removed, near Winchester, on Oct. 14. Apparently he had visited the Alexandra Pavilion in officer's uniform, for he had stolen an attaché case and other property from bed-rooms there. Some of it had been recovered from the cloak-room of the Shaftesbury Hotel, where he had stayed as Lieut. McDougall.

Prisoner said he was recommended for release when he was led by others into attacking the guard. He had been commended for good work in France, and he joined up before he was 16.

Sergeant Worth said it was true that he had been discharged from the Army three times for being under age, but he would serve.

Mr. Francis remarked that there were three charges of theft, besides masquerading as an officer. Prisoner must have four month's hard labour.

REPATRIATION OF PRISONERS.

The 4,000 Germans interned in Handforth (Cheshire) camp will be cleared in a day or two to Germany. The first parties left on Saturday and Sunday and it is expected that the camp will be empty in a couple of days. Handforth was one of the first camps and is the largest in the North of England.

SNOW BLIZZARDS IN BRITAIN.

Heavy falls of snow, accompanied by violent gales, are reported from all parts of the country, the storm assuming the fury of a blizzard in many localities. The North Yorkshire hills are covered with snow, while Ben Lomond is clad with snow from base to summit.

Canada's latest Victory Loan for three hundred million dollars has been oversubscribed.

A Belgrade telegram states that the Italian occupation authorities at Zara have made instruction in the Italian language compulsory in all schools.

U. S. BOLSHEVISTS.

ASTOUNDING PLOT AGAINST GOVERNMENT.

The United States Assistant Attorney-General has published sundry documents seized in the nation-wide raids on Bolshevists. They reveal plans for the Union of Russian workers to overthrow the Government through a general strike. The documents make no secret of their programme of destruction and death to achieve the aims of the Union. Much material has been made public such as ordinarily would cause any newspaper publishing it to be excluded from the mails. All these amazing documents are printed in Russian.

One manifesto outlines the Union's programme as being nothing less than the "complete destruction of private control of natural resources, capital and any social system whereby the rule of one man over another is enforced."

The manifesto further says "We must convert small strikes into general ones and convert the latter into an armed revolt of the labouring masses against Capital and the State. At the time of this revolt we must proceed to immediate seizure of all means of production and all articles of consumption and make the workers masters of all general wealth. At the same time we must mercilessly destroy all the remains of Government authority and class combination by liberating prisoners, demolishing prisons and police offices, destroying all legal papers pertaining to private ownership of property, all field fences and boundaries and must burn all certificates of indebtedness." The document also recommends the shooting of gendarmes and police, the establishment of communes and "one grand federation."

SILENT SINCERITY.

THE TWO MINUTE TRIBUTE.

Before the clock struck eleven yesterday morning the Dom Square presented an unusual appearance. At five minutes to the hour German traffic, vehicular and pedestrian, came to a halt, whilst the buglers were forming up on the top steps of the Cathedral. By the time the first note of the hour rang out from the lofty spire of Cologne's famous edifice, a huge crowd had assembled—comprising English, French, Belgian, and American officers, together with a large number of English soldiers. English civilians of both sexes comprised not a small section of the spectators, whilst a considerable number of German civilians were interested and respectful onlookers.

Perhaps there is nothing more pregnant with real pathos than the "Last Post," and as this call shrilled out from the buglers on the Dom steps the Guards presented arms, whilst officers saluted and a number of civilians—both English and Germans—removed their hats. As the final long note of the "Last Post" died away and the Guard sloped arms, the crowd was reluctant to move. Everyday affairs had been swept aside in this brief and silent, but sincere, tribute to the memory of the Glorious Dead who laid down their lives to bring to a successful conclusion the greatest war in the history of the world.

RUSSIA'S WARS.

RED REINFORCEMENTS.

A Russian military expert has communicated the following opinion of the situation to Reuter's correspondent: "In the Eastern sector furious fighting continues along the whole front in the direction of Tobolsk, Yaloutorovsk and Kurgan, while the Bolshevists have reached the Ishim river. No news has been received from Turkestan. On the Southern front the Reds continue their counter-attacks along the whole line between the Volga and Dnieper, having advanced furthest in the South on the roads from Voronezh. The general situation nevertheless remains firm. Denikin's Army in turn is advancing towards Briansk. Stubborn fighting is also proceeding along the whole North Western front. The Reds are attacking on the Luga-Pskoff front with partial successes. Generally speaking, the constant influx of fresh forces to the Bolshevists gives them a numerical superiority and the possibility of simultaneously strengthening their whole line. We are therefore obliged to assume the defensive."

M.P.'s SUDDEN DEATH.

Sir Thos. Whittaker, M.P., for the Spen Valley Division of Yorkshire since 1892, died suddenly on Sunday at Eastbourne.

The deceased member, who was created a Knight in 1906, had numerous activities. After sixteen years in the iron trade he spent ten years connected with various newspapers and was a prolific writer on Economic, Financial, Commercial, Statistical and Social questions. He was chairman of the Royal Commission on Importation of Paper during the war.

PRINCE IN THE STATES.

The Prince of Wales crossed the Canadian-American frontier at Pouses point on Monday evening. He was met by Mr. Lansing, who is accompanying him to Washington, which is expected to be reached about noon to-day. Vice-president Marshall will receive the Prince, who will visit Mount Vernon, the home of George Washington on Thursday, and will dine the same night at the British Embassy.

FEWER TRAINS.

GREATLY REDUCED SERVICES FROM TO-DAY.

Owing to the coal shortage there will be a great reduction in the number of passenger trains, the reduced service commencing to-day (Wednesday).

The trains to and from Paris and Ostend will run as usual, also the 14.24 to Brussels. The train to Treves will leave Cologne at 7.20, while the return from Treves will depart at 12.00, arriving at Cologne at 16.36. There will be only one express train daily in the direction of Bonn, Coblenz and Mainz.

Before proceeding anywhere by train intending passengers will do well to make enquiries of the local station master.

CLERGYMAN IN A DIVORCE SUIT.

In the Edinburgh Court of Session on Monday Lord Sands granted a decree of divorce to Mary Catherine Mackinnon, or Smith, of Pladda View, Port St. Ayr, against her husband, John S. Smith, described as a teacher, of Elswick-road, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The pursuer in evidence stated that she was married to the defender in January, 1914. He was then a Minister of the Church of Scotland at Tiree, but later conceived the idea of going to England and of joining the Church of England. He left Glasgow in the middle of 1915 and got a post as curate at St. John's Wood. He was only a month in this charge when he left the house and the witness did not see him for three weeks. Subsequently they left London and lived in Tiree for a month or two. At Christmas, 1915, the defender became locum tenens of a parish in Buckinghamshire and was eventually made vicar of the parish. He resigned that post in September, 1918. The witness went to a nursing home in August and after leaving it she did not see her husband again.

Throughout their married life her husband's habits had been irregular and he often disappeared from the house altogether. Generally when he was away from home he took drink to excess. She also found that he had formed an intimacy with a domestic servant. She received a letter from him saying their marriage had been a ghastly failure.

ANNUNZIO IN ACTION.

The Serbian official Press Agency at Belgrade states that a skirmish has occurred between Italian Government troops and the troops of D'Annunzio in which the Government force suffered considerable losses.

A Rome message says that General Badoglio, after a long conference with the Italian Premier, has left for Fiume to resume negotiations with D'Annunzio.

VATICAN AND BAVARIA.

For the first time since the beginning of the war the Pope has officially received a representative of the Central Powers in private audience. This was Baron von Gebsattel, who journeyed to Rome to prepare the way for the return of the Bavarian Minister.

W.R.A.F. DEFUNCT.

On Saturday the Women's Royal Air Force officially ceased to exist. The Force is now defunct with the exception of some two hundred odd girls in England and less than forty in France. These are being retained until sufficient men are found to replace them.

COST OF DUTCH INTERNMENTS

The Netherland Government announces that expenses uncurred by the Foreign Ministry in connection with the internment of prisoners of war amounted to 5,422,116 florins on account of Germany and 8,723,820 florins on acount of Great Britain.

NO PARIS NEWSPAPERS.

Printers and all other employees on the Paris daily newspapers have decided to strike to-night owing to the refusal of the employers to grant an extra allowance of five francs per day to meet the increased cost of living.

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE

SILVER STILL HIGHER.

Most of the attention at the opening of the market was directed to J. and P. Coats' capitalisation scheme. Although generous, it was not in accordance with the sanguine expectations and quotations fell sharply to nine. Investments were dull, especially in War Loans, this being attributable to another large batch of new capital issues. Business in other directions was active, notably in oils, textiles and shippings. Improving values in diamond shares were a strong feature. Silver reached another high record of 5s. 6½d. per ounce, due to Chinese buying orders and absence of supplies. Among yesterday's capital issues were Wolseley Motors of £1,000,000 sterling 6½ per cent. Debenture Stock at 99½, and Wilford Steamship Lines, which offered 350,000 one-pound shares and 600,000 five-shilling shares.

AERIAL MAILS.

A serious beginning is now being made in carrying mails by air. A regular service between London and Paris started yesterday, and this is to connect up with mails to many parts of Europe and to Africa.

A certain amount of aerial post work has already been done, of course. We in Cologne received some of our correspondence from England by this means in the spring and summer of this year. It was an interesting experiment, not too dependable, but in face of early difficulties it gave promise of great possibilities in the future.

We are on the eve of a revolution in our postal services. It will take time to become at all general and there may be temporary set backs in its earlier stages. These are inevitable. But that all mails will eventually be carried through the air we have little doubt. And by mails we mean not only ordinary correspondence but everything that to-day travels by train or steamer, including parcels of all kinds.

Before ten years have passed aerial postage will probably be the orthodox way of communicating with every corner of the globe and not only will it supplant the existing methods of conveying the written message, but over many routes we shall see it seriously competing with the telegraph.

In the aerial postal services there should be plenty of scope for large numbers of those gallant young pilots who steered their machines so skilfully on the battle fronts and beyond.

There are great difficulties to be faced at the outset of such a revolution in postal transit, but none we are sure that those who developed so rapidly our air services for war cannot tackle with equanimity.

The aerial mail is something to watch with the keenest interest. If time is money, then the saving of time it will effect will have far reaching results on the world's future. It will bring all nations nearer together and in closer touch.

Let us hope that the result will make for peace in the future. "When the civilised world," said General Sykes the other day, "is intersected by a system of air routes nations will learn that it is as absurd to declare war one upon another as for the citizens of Birmingham to declare war upon the citizens of Crewe."

TWELVE THOUSAND POUNDS.

TOMMY AS PHILANTHROPIST.

What would you do with £12,000 supposing you were successful in winning it? That is a question which has been discussed in barrack room, billet and mess during the past few weeks, a query suggested by the advent of yet another Lille sweepstake.

"Cologne Post" readers of all ranks have supplied an answer. To the majority the possession of such a nest-egg opens up a vista of ease and comfort, well-doing and charity. Indeed until we examined our postbag we had no idea there were so many budding philanthropists in the Army of the Rhine, or that premium bonds had so much attraction for the investor.

One competitor in the "Post" competition evidently more confident of winning the prize than the sweepstake, for he signs himself "The Winner" and sends his home address, as he is "on leave at present" plumps for a "little business ready to start in life once again". One draws the conclusion that his "life" finished when he entered the Army.

FOR OLD AGE PENSIONS.

"I would think of trade which America is getting too far advanced in, and when I get demobbed start in the same and cut them down, and if I were successful I would take a little percentage of the profits for myself and the rest would go to the help of old age pensions, as I noticed when on leave that the old people could do with not only a little more but double what they get at present," is how one young soldier would account for his new-found wealth.

Then there is the competitor who in his estimate overdraws his "banking account" to the extent of £4,000 in the fascinating task of deciding a profitable investment. Aviation, shipping, rubber, oil, gold, consols, railways, soap and breweries all appeal to him as against a niggardly £2,000 by way of War bonds and £500 in War Savings Certificates. This aspiring Carnegie in his desire to do himself well safeguards himself with a banking account of a cool thousand.

Another budding financier with an eye to business calculates that the investment of £5,000 in Government stock would mean a saving of £250 per annum by way of income tax. Having provided for his father, he indulges in a mild orgy of travel, returning presumably to occupy his own house and invest the remainder in a promising local tramway company. From this he deduces an income of from £80 to £100 per annum. A motor car also comes within his range of expenditure and the end of the tour sees him back at his old job "with as bright an outlook" as when he commenced to disperse the £12,000.

THE SWEETEST GIRL.

One love-sick swain with a passing thought for his parents, has his eye on a nice little house in the country to which "I would take the sweetest little girl as its mistress, a horse, gun, a couple of dogs, a little two seater to slip up to town. What more do we want?" he asks?

"Of course, I should have to provide for old age," he continues. "Easily done by placing capital in the War Loan, thereby helping myself and country also. Fancy being able to see the world as you please, Paris, Brussels, Madrid, Vienna, oh, anywhere and at any time, as fancy chooses. To see the sun set in Naples Bay, see it rise in Honolulu. To dine at the Ritz and finish the night at Ciro's, to be able to rise on a keen autumn morning and find your hunter ready, and the merry chatter of the followers gathering at the "meet" and coming home tired and happy to a great armchair and a roaring fire and the dearest wife in the world sitting across from you. Oh! £12,000, would you were mine." He is still pining.

"Thinking of possession and having possession are two entirely different things" prefaces the soliloquy of a reader with a desire to become cosmopolitan; another advocates rescue work and the saving of "young and beautiful girls." St. Dunstan's shares imaginary contributions from a group of competitors. Against this we have the competitor who would set out to convert the "leaders of the masses" and invite them to partake of his prize. If they declined to black-leg their comrades, then in that unlikely event he would buy a pick, become a miner and amuse himself by striking every day of the week and paying himself strike pay.

The Prizewinners.

After much consideration the Editor has adjudged the appended as the three best contributions:—

FIRST PRIZE.

If I won that blinking money,
I shouldn't need to bet,
I'd do my best to sail through life
Without a bloomin' fret.

I wouldn't need to soldier long,
Go back to "Blighty" free,
And Wednesday my old Dutch would have
The neighbourhood to tea.

I'd tell the Sergeant Major,
To eat his batty hat,
For now my friends comprised such folk,
As "Clarice Mayne" and "That."

I'd buy a jolly motor car,
And soon learn how to drive,
You bet your boots I'd record break,
That's if I kept alive.

My Uncles, Aunts and Cousins,
And all the family host,
Would know I'd got the money,
They'd get the "Cologne Post."

I'd be a politician bold,
Stick up for Coalition,
And do my best to lay the ghost
"Pussy" la Prohibition.

The "Pearsons Weekly" slum kids,
Poor tiny little tots,
Would get a jolly outing
In sunny flowery spots.

I'd do a lot of good
Perhaps a little bad,
But one good thing we never miss
The things we never had.

Now I've explained quite briefly
Of anticipated larks,
Mister Editor please send along
A prize of fifty marks.

Fifty marks awarded to Sergt. Major W.S. Warren, Race c/c D.D.A.P.S.S. Rhine Army.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views

DREAD OF DEMOB.

Sir,—I am one of those unfortunate individuals — there are many similarly situated — who are remaining in the Army for the very simple and sound reason that I dread demobilization.

Will you allow me a little space in your columns to state briefly my case?

When war broke out I was apprenticed to engineering and in 1915 at the age of eighteen I joined the Army. I naturally endeavoured to get into the Engineers, but at that period men were badly wanted in the infantry and into the "fighting foot" I was drafted.

Now I am 23, my knowledge of my trade I have had no chance of augmenting — in fact I must confess that I have forgotten almost all I knew.

What, pray, is left for me on demobilization? Am I to go back and renew my apprenticeship, and at my age endeavour to live on the pittance I shall receive, or must I adopt the role of labourer for the rest of my days?

DOWNHEARTED.

AFFECTATION IN WOMEN.

Sir,—It may be in the Army of occupation that we are led to take greater stock of our women folk than when we are at home and there are so many around us.

This perhaps leads me to the conclusion that affectation is largely cultivated by what I will call the younger generation that section which has all the appearance of June brides.

To us of a riper age it is amusing if not wearisome. In all things, I say,

BE NATURAL.

WILL THE JAZZ GO?

Sir,—You ask will the Jazz go? For myself I certainly hope it will and that it will bring in its train a revival of the old dances.

Take the old barn dance. It is difficult to identify the languid demeanour of some fair dancers and the rapt expression of many young subalterns with this old favourite, but let us by all means get back to the good old natural dancing of my young days.

FATHER.

HOLD IT FAST.

Sir,—I also have been interested in your article and correspondence advocating careful handling of gratuities, but it seems to me that it is mainly for the guidance of Officers. As a Tommy my handsome gratuity amounts to the sum of £20.

This scarcely provides scope for outrageous extravagance and with the present high cost of living will not go far in meeting the needs of the rainy days ahead, against which we are warned. What matter, then whether it is spent or saved?

DRIVER.

Sir,—We of the Bachelors' brigade will perhaps be accused of parsimony, but from personal observation and remarks let drop I have come to the conclusion that wives in these days are an expensive luxury.

The German trader if he suffered from the disappearance of many of our troops is more than recompensing himself at the expense of the married officer, particularly he with war-time wedding bells still ringing in his ears.

The young wife on the Rhine finds herself in a novel position with seemingly unlimited paper money for as "Dago" rightly points out "cheap money makes for extravagance."

Opera, play, dance, club dinners compete for attention. What of the future?

HOLD IT FAST.

Sir,—I have just witnessed the valiant endeavours of at least one young officer husband to steer his bride past the light and attractions of a jeweller's window.

Why not put such places out of bounds on certain days of the week and on these he could arrange to perform the duties of Orderly Officer?

WINKLE.

Sir,—Will the critics of wives take into consideration just what their presence here means to both parties—husband and wife? Alleged extravagance becomes of minor importance.

When at a place of amusement recently I could not help being struck by the serene happiness of men when in the company of their wives. Couples were freely besprinkled up and down the hall, evidence in itself of the changed condition of life brought about by the advent of women on the Rhine.

I cannot help agreeing with "Marjorie" in her views. The likelihood is that the male partners but for the presence of their womenfolk would have sought relaxation and amusement elsewhere. The large number of cabarets which advertise their ability to cater for the military is evidence in itself of how much that bald form of amusement has appealed in the past.

Now the Army concert parties and other pure forms of amusement carry the day, and rightly so.

Your article "Ethics of Economy" sums up the position better than I can put it. I enclose my card.

CRUSTY BACHELOR.

HOHE STRASSE DANGERS.

Sir, — May I protest strongly against the foolish practice, fortunately rare, of driving cars along the Hohe strasse at all, but most emphatically during its crowded hours.

About 16.30 on Monday the street was very crowded and my wife and I found it difficult even to walk at anything like an ordinary pace. Suddenly much horn-blowing announced the coming of a car and I was amazed to see, coming in the direction of the Dom, a car driven at over 20 miles an hour. People scurried in all directions and by some stroke of luck everyone escaped injury, but it was not the driver's fault.

He should count himself fortunate not to be under a charge of manslaughter at the present moment. As a British officer who has driven many cars, under most conditions, I feel bound to protest strongly against such reckless behaviour on anyone's part.

VOGEL.

WHY NOT WRESTLING?

Sir,—I am afraid it is rather futile to suggest new sports in Rhineland seeing how little attention is being given to the regular run of games etc.

As "T.W.J." said yesterday things are too unsettled for much to be done. But let us hope that after Christmas, when the Army of Occupation has settled down and knows definitely what its personnel is to be that among the sports encouraged in addition to football, boxing and running, will be the fine old sport of wrestling.

This seems to have been neglected for far too long. Now and again a craze for it develops for a time and then wrestling appears to get forgotten.

But it never should be, in my opinion, and many of us much prefer it to boxing.

CUMBERLAND.

THE OLD DUTCH HOUSE.

Sir,—I suppose it is largely due to the correspondence in the "Post" that the N.A.C.B. authorities have taken the hints thrown out and enlarged the club for W.O.'s and Sergeants. It is good news to know that this necessary step is in progress.

But there was another suggestion made in your columns which I think was just as worthy of consideration and action. I refer to the proposal for a similar club for that large body of N.C.O.'s — the corporals.

It is to be hoped that we shall soon see an announcement from the enterprising N.A.C.B. as to that.

J.J.W.

TO STOCKING FANCIER.

Sir,—Would the gentleman who passed the rude remark about the N.A.C.B. girls kindly consult an eye specialist or take more water with it next time?

One of them.

CONCERT AUDIENCES.

Sir,—After witnessing the laboured efforts of an artiste to arouse some enthusiasm in a concert audience I have come to the conclusion that "Wigunite" must have had some experience of the "boards."

It was a catchy song with a simple rollicking chorus, yet apart from a few enterprising souls at the back of the hall the audience could not be induced to raise their voices!

Contrast this with the eagerness with which North country music hall habitués take up choruses.

SALFORD LAD.

SECOND PRIZE.

Have you the priceless gift of imagination?

Rather!!!

Among a woefully deficient stock of gifts that is one at least I imagine I have full fledged.

£ 12,000!

How easy it was to imagine myself the lucky winner of this comfortable sum.

What would I do with it? Ah; who could tell?

Visions of profiteers I have known float before me.

Profiteers big, profiteers small, profiteers who made profit on Tommy's tea and "wads" and profiteers who dropped their "h's" (about the only thing they did drop).

Now I could look them all on a level. I at least had not profiteered, although a "parvenu".

Of course I should pay my subscription to the "Cologne Post" up to the time of its ceasing publication.

I would make it my business to see that "Corporals" did not have to sit in the draught in the Deutsches Theatre even if I had to bribe the Box Office people.

Arbitration on a financial basis would settle the "Gunner's" supposed usurpation of titles, and I would buy the whole of the Rhine Army silver identity discs and call it square.

Yes I would have a flutter in War Savings Certificates, give the Quartermaster a pension for life for "services rendered" and the residue (if any) in the fulness of my heart I would use to endow a Memorial to the Widows and Orphans of Sweepstake Promoters.

Twenty Marks awarded to Bmdr. A.F. Bacon, Hdqrs. London Divnl. Artillery, Rhine Army.

THIRD PRIZE.

This problem must necessarily be looked at from various standpoints, but as one, who to some extent has "Had his day" — being turned 50, I would like to be able to offer "a helping hand" to the young men just entering upon the great struggle of life.

Briefly, I think I would work somewhat on the following lines: First, invest the capital sum in a sound security. This would not be a difficult matter at the present time with war bonds and other Government securities, thus ensuring a comfortable livelihood. My dependants would naturally have first consideration although part of my capital, the greater part, would at my decease be left in trust for the purpose of affording financial assistance to suitable young men, who often, under adverse circumstances, give proof of earnest effort to help themselves.

I would do this by arranging loans, upon proper security, of, say from £100 to £200 free of interest for 10 years. The money could be invested in business, property, thrift societies, or any legitimate means of increasing the amount approved by the Trustees of the fund.

This I believe would be a perpetual means of conferring a benefit upon those deserving support, as, of course every ten years capital would be repaid and available for further loan.

Limited space forbids anything more than an outline of this scheme, but I believe it to be quite workable, and that it would be one conferring lasting benefit.

Ten marks awarded to Sgt. F. W. H. Green. 52nd Battn. Rifle Brigade. Rhine Army.

RHINELAND FOOTBALL.

Great Battle between 10th and 11th Bns. The Queens.

KEEN INTER-COY GAME.

A match between the 10th and 11th Battalions, The Queens' was played on the 11th Queens ground at Kalk on Saturday. Owing to the late arrival of the visitors the match could not be started before 14.50 hours, and consequently it was rather difficult to see just before time.

The 10th Queens, having won the toss, elected to play with the wind. Soon after the kick-off the 11th Queens centre half, Lieut. Bratchell, met with a mishap and had to leave the field for a time. Several miskicks on the part of the 11th Queens resulted in Pte. Baker of the 10th getting through and scoring with a weak shot.

Many Fruitless Corners.

This reverse seemed to pull the 11th Queens together. Even play ensued following which the 11th Queens began to press continually making the 10th concede several corners which, however, were not converted. Shortly before half time from a centre from the outside left Sgt. Argent managed to score for the 11th Queens.

On the resumption there were some very keen tussles and both goal-keepers were called upon to save. Towards the middle of the second half the outside left Pte. Warminger placed a high dropping shot in the centre and Sgt. Argent outpaced the 11th Queens backs and scored.

On the kick-off the 11th Battalion again returned to the attack and the 10th Queens goalkeeper brought off several very fine saves. A few minutes before time the 10th Queens forwards nearly broke through and the 11th Queens defence was severely tried, but they managed to clear and relieve the pressure. The whistle went leaving the 11th Queens winners by 2—1.

A SEVEN-NIL VICTORY.

B Coy. Overwhelm D. Coy. 52nd Kings Liverpool Regt.

A match between B and D Coys. 52nd K.L.R. was played at Bonn on Saturday. Both teams applied pressure in turn at first, but gradually B Coy. began to show their superiority, and, after half an hour's play, Barrow scored from a corner. A few minutes later B Coy. obtained a penalty but Barrow shot wide.

B Coy. took up the running again and Lockwood increased their lead. About five minutes before the interval another penalty fell to "B" and this time Barrow made no mistake, the ball dropping in from the crossbar.

Half time: B Coy. 3; D Coy. 0.

On resuming B Coy. continued to dominate the game and goals were added by Walsh, Holt, Lockwood and Barrow. D Coy. vainly endeavoured to pierce their opponents' defence. The end came with "D" pressing.

Full time: B Coy. 7; D Coy. 0.

FOOTBALL RESULTS.

Aston's Shock for the Conquering "Throstles."

First League:—West Bromwich Albion 1; Aston Villa 2.

Second League:—Port Vale 1; South Shields 0.

LONDON CHALLENGE CUP.

Semi Finals.

Chelsea 1; Queens Park Rangers 0.
Crystal Palace 3; Fulham 1.

The results of Monday's matches amply prove that nothing is certain in football. Astons' defeat of the "Throstles" at the Hawthorns (a result by the way which was forecasted in our columns) was a splendid performance. The Villa have certainly got round the corner, and that they are settling down to be their real selves is a happening which is pleasing to all. Much interest will centre round the return meeting of these two clubs at Villa Park next Saturday.

Port Vale were good value for their win over the Seasiders.

In the London Cup, Chelsea accounted for Queen's Park Rangers. The Rangers seem to have struck a bad patch at present.

Crystal Palace, by defeating Fulham, upset many calculations, but they are a cup fighting team, and it is by no means improbable that they will account for the "Pensioners" in the final.

RUGBY RESULTS.

Rugby results in England on Monday were:—

Cambridge University, 30, Northumberland, 3.

Llanelly 8, Leicester 5.

CLUBMEN AS CUEISTS.

The Association of Conservative Clubs is resuming this season its billiards tournaments, which were such a popular feature amongst clubmen prior to the war. Handsome challenge shields and prizes are to be competed for by clubs in the five groups into which England and Wales are divided. The entries constitute a record, no fewer than 73 clubs having decided to compete. The competition starts this month, and the winners of each group will be eligible to compete for the championship shield.

WHY, OH! WHY?

Without expressing any opinion on the programme submitted to them (says the Cardiff "Express"), the Hill's Plymouth Colliery Company, Ltd., have declined to allow the use of the Pentrebach Hall, near Merthyr, for the purposes of an assault-at-arms and concert in aid of the widow and family of a soldier whose sufferings in a German prisoner of war camp resulted in his death at Bridgend Asylum soon after his homecoming.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

Cross-country Union and Services Representation.

RULES REVISED.

At the annual general meeting of the National Cross-Country Union it was proposed to amend the Constitution Rules so as to provide for the Services Associations being represented on the Executive Committee and at the A.G.M.

The Northern delegates raised a question as to the possible effect if the various Army units were affiliated under the voting scheme as laid down in the Constitution Rules.

The Army representative, Cpl. Wand Tetley, said that the Army Association would represent all its units on the N.C.C.U., and there was no necessity to provide for further representation. Eventually it was agreed to alter Rule 3 to provide that the R.N., Army, and R.A.F. cross-country associations should be given one delegate each on the Executive Committee on becoming affiliated.

With reference to the voting it was agreed that the Services Associations should each exercise two votes at an annual general meeting, and that in reckoning the voting power of affiliated associations under Rule 9 Services clubs should not be considered.

CROSS-COUNTRY RUNNING.

Cambridge Defeat Ranelagh H: Varsity Skipper's Great Race.

The Ranelagh Harriers were at home to the Cambridge University H. and H. on Saturday, when the respective teams met in a race over the 7 miles Wynne Cup course. The race proved a great one, both sides being strongly represented, and a stern struggle ended in a victory for the Light Blues by 38 points to 40.

A. C. Telfer, the Cambridge captain, ran a great race, and although being rather badly torn by a barbed wire obstacle at 4½ miles, he still forced the pace. It was only F. J. de B. Collenette's sprinting powers over the last quarter-mile that beat the Light Blue out of first place.

OXFORD'S ONE-POINT WIN.

Dark Blues Second Victory: Montague's Fifth Win.

The Dark Blues gained their second victory on Saturday, when they received a visit from Highgate H., but they again cut matters fine and only won by a single point.

Montague continued his victorious career unchecked, this making his fifth winning sequence, but so far he has had no one to extend him. He won by 180yds. from Callard, the pair being streets ahead of the rest. Grace and Johnson missed the trail and finished together. The result was:—Oxford University, 27 points; Highgate H., 28 points.

INDIVIDUAL TRIUMPH.

Ex-cavalry Officer's feat in London Annual.

The annual cross-country race between South London H. and Blackheath H. for the Nicholls Cup was decided on Saturday from the Swan, West Wickham, over a seven-miles course towards Hayes and Addington, the going being fairly heavy. S.L.H. won by a score of 100 points to 120.

The race was an individual triumph for A. C. Edwards, the Blackheath ex-cavalry officer. He took the lead before the first mile had been covered, and was not afterwards approached, winning by nearly a minute from L. G. Housden, S.L.H., in the fast time of 40 min. 6 3-5 sec.

BOWLING PROPOSALS.

Australians Expected to Tour the British Isles.

The annual meeting and dinner of the English Bowling Association will take place on Saturday, Nov. 22, at 4.30 p.m., at the Holborn Restaurant.

Among the proposals to be submitted to the delegates is one to rearrange the districts in England for the national bowling championship, so that there shall be only eight district areas. A motion will also be proposed that the number of heads (not points) in the pairs championships shall be 15, with the exception of the final, which shall be 21.

The delegates will also be asked to consider the revision of the rules and regulations of the inter-county championship, a new scheme being submitted to re-group the counties, with the object of saving unnecessary travelling in the early stages of the competition. It is also proposed that the counties shall play two rinks home and away, instead of the first county drawn being regarded as the home team, which obtains under the present rules governing the competition.

Another proposal is "that an advisory council consisting of five members be appointed to assist in the selection of the international team." It is anticipated that the Australian Bowling Association will send a team to tour the British Isles, and the English B.A. will make the arrangements for the matches and entertainment of the team in England.

JOCKEY SUSTAINS BROKEN THIGH.

Mason was looking forward to a very successful steeplechase season, having just fixed up to renew his old acquaintance with Mr. Percy Whitaker's stable, besides being first jockey to Mr. Bibby and Withington again.

His financial loss will therefore be great, for it will be some months before he can pull round from the bad fall he got at Liverpool on Saturday, when South Lodge rolled over him at Becher's and broke his thigh He was in a lot of pain when brought back in the ambulance, but when Mr. Whitaker left him before he went into the infirmary he was more comfortable, and said he was hopeful of riding again.

ENGLISH BOXING.

Joe Starmer K.O. Joe Brooks in Sixth Round.

SYMONDS DEFEATS CLARK.

There was a huge attendance at The Ring when the attraction was a 20 3-min. rounds contest between Joe Brooks, of Aldgate, and Joe Starmer, of Kettering. This terminated unexpectedly in the sixth round.

In the opening stages Brooks was always on top of his rival, but though his work was speedy, his blows lacked sting. Starmer, on the other hand, always punched the straighter, and after the fourth round changed his tactics so often that he began to score the faster. He punched Brooks heavily about the body in the fifth round, and early in the next got home a powerful left to the body from which Brooks went to the boards and was counted out. He afterwards appealed for a foul, which was rightly ignored.

A SPIRITED CONTEST.

Joe Symonds, Plymouth, again defeats George Clark.

The meeting of Joe Symonds, of Plymouth, the ex-fly-weight champion, and George Clark, of Bermondsey, who like Symonds, was beaten by Jimmy Wilde in a contest for the Lonsdale fly-weight belt, created a lot of interest in Plymouth on Friday night, and there was a big crowd at the Cosmopolitan Gymnasium. Both weighed in under 8st 8lb, and the result of a spirited contest was a win for Symonds on points.

CARPENTIER AT HIGHBURY.

French Champion Receives a Great Reception.

Georges Carpentier was one of the 30,000 onlookers at the First Division Football League match at Highbury on Saturday between the Arsenal and Bolton Wanderers. He was accompanied by M. Descamps, Olslager, his masseur, Lenaors, his sparring partner, and others, and after being introduced to Sir Henry Norris, M.P., the chairman of the club, and Mr Leslie Knighton, the manager, he was piloted by Mr. Knighton to the playing pitch, where an army of photographers had assembled, and they were soon busy snap-shotting him.

Immediately he stepped on to the enclosure he was recognised, and was obviously gratified with the magnificent reception given him, the huge crowd cheering him again and again. The captains of the rival teams each had a hearty handshake from him, and he then spun the coin, the Arsenal captain calling to him for choice of ends and making a correct guess. Carpentier then left the pitch to the accompaniment of further rounds of cheering, and made his way to the directors' stand, from which excellent coign of vantage he watched the game. He remained until a few minutes from the end, when he discreetly withdrew so as to get clear away before the crowd poured out of the ground.

JACK FULFORD INJURED.

Struck in the Eye by Golf Ball while Teaching.

Jack Fulford, the Royal Wimbledon professional, met with a rather serious accident a few days ago, while teaching on the course. He was struck by a ball in the left eye, and rendered unconscious for a time. Fulford's eye was badly damaged, but happily he is making rapid progress towards complete recovery.

A Broken Leg.

J. Kelly had the misfortune to be kicked by another horse while riding at exercise at Findon on Saturday, the result being a broken leg.

JOCKEY'S HAT-TRICK.

Whalley Rides Three Winners at Leicester.

LEICESTER AND CHELTENHAM

Rain fell at Leicester on Monday and going was very soft. The attendance was good. The feature of the day was the completion of the hat-trick by A. Whalley, who piloted Lancovil, Felim and King Alfred to victory. Details:—

Quorndon Handicap:—1, Lancovil (11-10); 2, St. Gingoulph (11-4); 3, Sunny Vista (8-1). Seven ran.

Town Plate:—1, Phrosie (6-5 on); 2, Anisette (11-4); 3, Hikm (3-1). Three ran.

November Nursery:—1, Silver Stream (100-6); 2, D'annunzio (10-1); 3, Nareesh (10-1). Fifteen ran.

Atherstone Handicap:—1, Felim (9-4); 2, Viaduct (10-1); 3, Trowbridge (5-1). Ten ran.

Oadby Nursery:—1, Geometry (11-4); 2, Fraise Filly (10-1); 3, Service Kit (4-1). Ten ran.

Melton Plate:—1, King Alfred (5-1); 2, Golden Quiver (5-2); 3, Sanitarium (2-1). Seven ran.

CHELTENHAM RESULTS.

Southam Hurdle:—1, St. Mary (7-2); 2, Willing (3-1); 3, Rockcorry (9-4). Six ran.

Cleeve Steeplechase:—1, Rathleague (9-4 on); 2, Ballinagoul (3-1); 3, Warbine (6-1). Three ran.

Amateur Riders Hurdle:—1, Shining More (4-1); 2, Stargantes (3-1); 3, Temeside (100-8). Ten ran.

Cotswold Steeplechase:—1, Fond Lucy (6-4); 2, Kafue (7-2); 3, Tom Faggus (8-1). Seven ran.

Cheltenham Steeplechase:—1, Irish Rebellion (5-1); 2, Ballymendel (6-1); 3, Mark Back (6-1). Six ran.

Roschill Hurdle:—1, Procurater (7-4); 2, Gavielle (7-2); 3, Montdidier (8-1). Eight ran.

PROMISING JUMPING STABLE.

What promises to be again a very powerful jumping stable this winter is that which Mr. Percy Whitaker is running at St. Giles, near Salisbury. Many useful Irish horses have recently joined his team, which is shortly to be augmented by the arrival of Captain G. R. Morgan's Rather Dark, King's Carol, Arbor, Razol, and two others.

It was at first feared that Rather Dark had broken down when taking part in the Liverpool Hurdle on Saturday, but his temporary lameness was brought about by his having rapped himself. This wore off later, and he returned to his stable sound.

BILLIARDS.

Lawrence and Breed in Midlands Championship.

A billiard match of eight thousand up between E. C. Breed (holder) and F. Lawrence for the Midlands professional championship was commenced at Birmingham on Monday. The players, who started level, are playing for a hundred pounds a side. The closing scores were:—

Lawrence (in play)..... 1,335
Breed 904

SERGEANT WINS COW.

The cow which was raffled by the 113th Bde., R.F.A. has been won by Staff Sergeant R.C. Turner, No. 2 N.A.C.B. Club, Cologne, with ticket number 234.

MANCHESTER HANDICAP "SWEEP."

The draw for the Manchester November Handicap, organised by Commander Bickford, will be drawn at the Theatre Calais, France, on Wednesday, Nov. 19, at three o'clock. Anyone drawing a horse will be notified by telegram. Books of twenty-five tickets can be obtained for £12 (single tickets 10s.), and can be obtained until Saturday next on application to Commander W. Bickford, 53, Quai de la Tamise, Calais.

SPORT NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A Splendid Record.

Northampton R.F.C. have up to date played seven matches, winning all and scoring 239 points to 35.

Newly-formed Amateur Club.

The newly-formed L.N.W. Rly. Co.'s Boxing Club, whose headquarters are at Broad Street Depot, are now affiliated to the A.B.A.

Ladies' Hockey.

Teams of ladies from the North Middlesex and Hanger Hill Golf Clubs met on the North Middlesex course, when the Hanger Hill players proved successful by 4½ points to 2½

Olympic Games.

The General Committee of the Scottish Amateur Athletic Association at a meeting in Edinburgh considered the question of taking part in the 1920 Olympic Games at Antwerp next year and it was agreed to support the movement, and a sub-committee was appointed with full powers.

The Rugby Game.

An effort is being made to establish the Rugby game in Derbyshire, and a meeting will shortly be held at Chesterfield. The prime movers are Mr. J. T. Todd, the old Durham County and International player, and Mr. W. Walton Pitt, of Unstone, Derbyshire.

A New North End Man.

Preston North End have signed on T. Winspel, left half-back, from the Birmingham and District League, who was recently demobilized. Whilst in training at the Crystal Palace he played a number of games with the Palace club, and has shown excellent form in the Army.

Albion's New Players.

West Bromwich Albion have signed on Arthur Swift, the centre forward who played for them prior to the war, and Wood, another ex-soldier, has also been re-booked, his position being full back. Clarke, a promising outside left from Wednesbury Old Athletic, has also been signed on.

Blinkered and Muzzled.

Brigadier-General was adorned with blinkers and a muzzle in the Combermere Handicap at Windsor.

Recruit to Ra ing.

Sir George Bullough is next season, going in for flat races, and has several promising yearlings in J. Jarvis's stable.

Colts Sold.

Clarilaw colt was sold to Mr. Joyce for 450 guineas, and Trivet to Mr. Poole for 400 guineas, at Windsor on Saturday.

Damaged Goods.

Damaged Goods was bought in for 305 guineas, after winning the Walton Handicap at Liverpool.

Scratchings.

Bachelor's Heather has been struck out of the Manchester November Handicap, and King Sol out of all engagements this year.

A Costly Save.

Wimbledon's goalkeeper, A. C. Taylor, broke his right wrist saving a penalty at Guildford on Saturday in the F.A. Cup divisional final. Guildford won 2—1.

To Strengthen Defence.

With a view to strengthening their defence, Northampton Town have signed on William Thompson, a full-back from Ayr, who formerly assisted Reading.

A big Price.

Mr. Tilstock has purchased Sweet Clorane, the dam of Irish Elegance, with a colt foal by Fairy King, privately from Mr. Thoburn. A big price was paid for this famous mare, who is also the dam of C.P.

Rider to Trainer.

Mr. H. S. Harrison, the well-known amateur rider, is retiring from the saddle altogether, and is adopting training as a profession, He has already a dozen National Hunt performers under his charge.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

Deutsches Theatre.

Vaudeville displaces drama at the Deutsches Theatre this week. The bill is filled by a London Company of variety artistes under the direction of Mr. Phillip Williams. Humour is the outstanding feature of the entertainment presented, and for this Mr. Leslie Ross is chiefly responsible. He makes his appearance frequently in the course of the programme, never failing to enliven the proceedings by his presence. He is freely forgiven for cracking an occasional "chestnutty" or doubtful gag because of his undoubted ability as a purveyor of fun.

* * *

The entertainment opens with a cheery chorus and is followed by a tuneful little trio "Carry on" by Leslie Ross, Nancy Hanton and Rene Hele. After a concerted item, Mr. Gerald Williams contributes "The Mountains of Mourne," revealing a tenor voice of exeptionally good quality in the process. Then comes a laughable sketch called "Demob'd," the idea of which is well conceived but somewhat weakly written. Its success, in fact, depends almost entirely upon the ability of the artistes taking part.

* * *

Quite one of the most enjoyable items is that of Mr. Williams himself, who, at the piano, is extremely entertaining. Miss Diana sings charmingly, Miss Nancy Hanton is a sparkling comedienne while Miss Rene Hele is brilliant at the piano. The whole performance is excellently stage-managed and should attract large audiences for the remainder of this week.

Sunday Next.

On Sunday next the Opera stars will scintillate at the Deutsches. Gertrude Bender the popular soprano will be there, likewise Hans Clemens the lyrical tenor. With them will be Alfred Barker, whose tonsils, it is to be hoped, will be by that time functioning as unobtrusively as a l well behaved tonsils should.—Future plans include visits from Herr—but I'm not going to let you into all Captain Haygarth's little secrets and surprises or our dear economy M. P.s will be demanding of Winston Churchill why so many applications for non-demob are being put forward. Somebody's got to go home to draw out-of-work or strike pay, haven't they?—

RACING IN FRANCE.

The Société d'Encouragement, the principal French flat-racing organization, has drawn up a programme for 1920 providing for important increases in the stakes, the doubling of the number of races open to horses bred outside France, the reopening of the Chantilly Racecourse, and a premium equalling at least 10 per cent. of the stakes to be paid to breeders of the winners of all races with the exception of handicaps and selling plates.

"Damaged Goods" Disability.

Mr. W. Wren, one of the most popular of owners, is laid up as the result of a cowardly assault, and was unable to be present at Liverpool on Saturday to see his horse Damaged Goods win. The chestnut is well-named, considering that besides the tube he has in his throat, he has two big knees, and breaks blood-vessels.

Frank Webber to be Jumped.

Frank Webber is now to have his attention turned to hurdle racing, and he should do well if only he takes kindly to jumping.

OUR FOOTBALL COMPETITION.

How Queen's Park Rangers Result Upset Calculations.

The general failure of competitors in our No. 7 contest, the result of which will appear to-morrow, provides a theme for comment. Our competition staff have not so far discovered a single competitor with more than eight results correct out of the ten required. Considering the matches this is a rather unexpected event; albeit many stumbled over the Queen's Park result. Up to going to press only twelve competitors have been noted who correctly gave this result.

No. 8 contest coupon provides another opportunity for football enthusiasts, and the League Tables published on this page furnish a guide for intending competitors

Coupons must be addressed:—

FOOTBALL CONTEST No. 8,
"Cologne Post",
A.P.O. S.40 Rhine Army.

List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.
2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.
3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for [illegible]son, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.
4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.
5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into. Neither will interviews be granted.
6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.
7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, mislaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.
8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.
9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Snow-balling.

On Monday afternoon much amusement was caused in Marzellen Strasse by two "Tommies" on a flat roof, who were busily engaged in snow-balling passers-by in the street below. The height from which they conducted operations allowed of no retaliation by their victims.

Famous Cleric.

Elsewhere will be found the news of the passing of Cardinal Hartmann. The bells of the churches were tolling and his death was proclaimed to the public by flying triangular shaped black flags.

Stoppage.

Yesterday afternoon much interest was being taken in a car stoppage round about the Dom. Dozens of cars were at a standstill and as such a sight is very unusual in Cologne, this no doubt was accountable for the interest taken by Tommies and civilians alike.

The Latest.

The latest picture post cards to be seen in most of the large shops here now is a photo of Cologne Cathedral covered in snow. The inscription runs, "Cologne under the first snow. Season 1919.

That Cow.

What will be the fate of the cow, raffled by the 113 Bde. R.F.A. and won by a Staff Sergeant at No. 2. N.A.C.C. Club, I wonder? Will it be allowed to live and do useful service by supplying the club with fresh milk, or will it be served up one day in lieu of rations?

Very Hilarious.

The German seems to make the most of having a good time. The other evening I heard a terrific din outside my billet. Visions of Bolshevism flashed through my brain as I went to my window. But it was only a party of merrymakers of both sexes and all ages returning from a party.

Runaways.

Hohe Strasse had its sensation on Monday afternoon when a horse dashed into a shop window. The animal in question received severe injuries and had to be destroyed. This was the second incident of this description that had occurred that day so I was informed.

Slippery Streets.

The coming of snow has brought in its train a bad time for horses. Cologne's streets when covered with the falling flakes provide a dangerous surface and yesterday morning I saw no less than four horses fall within the space of half an hour.

New Uses for Coins.

There is at least one good use to which some Belgian and French coins can be put apart from their spending value. I noticed yesterday that the buttons of a Tommy's great coat were held in place by string passed through the centre of these coins. Rather a novel idea, I thought.

Mistaken Identity.

A subaltern came into our office yesterday foaming at the mouth. "Where's the wallah that wrote about an officer with one pip on his right shoulder and two on his left?" he demanded. "But how do you know the paragraph referred to you?" the Editor asked mildly. "Well, look!" said the "sub." The Editor did so. There were two pips on his right shoulder and one on his left!

Believable.

With everything so fabulously dear at home, I believe many are finding it cheaper to have their wives and families in Germany and let their houses furnished than go to Blighty on leave.

Speedily Rich.

A tremendous amount of money has been made in the Cologne district since the Armistice. Many business men who before and during the war were of small account are now very rich and are buying mansions in which they live in great style.

The Last Straw.

How many people noticed a German walking down Breite Strasse wearing a straw hat, and no umbrella in the pouring rain the other night.?

Make a Show.

Among some men in a labour battalion, who were employed in digging a trench, was one who worked as if he were a chorus man in a play. In a mechanical way he simply went through the motions, pretending to dig and so forth. It was not long before the sergeant singled him out and going up to him said: "Lean on the shovel now an' thin. If it breaks I'll indent for another."

Not Easy Subjects.

I chanced to meet an officer yesterday who doesn't believe in wasting his spare time on the Rhine. He is learning Persian in the evenings. "And when I've made more progress in it," he said, "I intend to tackle Chinese."

The German Christmas.

Those who are destined to spend Christmas on the Rhine are likely to have a merry time. It is essentially the Germans' great time for feasting and celebration. Of course it is to Germany that we owe Santa Claus and the Christmas tree.

Girl Friends.

Overheard among members of the Leave Club staff. "Is Gertie Smitherson a friend of yours?" "Yes, what's she been saying about me?"

Picture Stars.

Among the portraits of picture players adorning the walls of the Modernes Theatre I notice several of famous American stars including that of the late John Bunny who became so popular in England.

Pink and Grey.

Yesterday in the Hohestrasse I saw a flapper wearing bright pink silk stockings and grey shoes. Of course I turned my eyes away instantly.

A Winter Garden.

The lounge of the VI Corps Club seems to grow more attractive every time I go there. It is now decked out as a winter garden. The lounge has rapidly grown in favour as an afternoon and after-dinner rendezvous for both sexes.

A German McCracken.

Watching a recent match between two civilian teams I was much interested in the performance of one of the defenders. Playing at right back he repeatedly threw the opposing forwards off side much to the spectators' displeasure. He gave a magnificent display of brainy defence and his emulation of McCracken's tactics certainly saved his side.

RHINELANDER.

OPINIONS OF THE MOMENT.

ENGINES' PROPER COLOURS.

Mr. Harold Stannard writing of beauty in machinery says:—Only one thing the locomotive still lacks before it reaches perfection, and that is its proper colour. The green of one great railway company is surely wrong. It makes the engine look as though it were a timid thing seeking to adopt protective colouring in its rush through the countryside. Red, another familiar colour, gives regal but rather too aggressive effect. For majestic impressiveness nothing can beat the black of the great engines that link the manufacturing centre with the capital. But black fails to do justice to the tremendous vitality of an engine. The ideal colour is still to be found.

JEWS IN PALESTINE.

Mr. Herbert Samuel, at a meeting to consider Jewish colonisation of Palestine, said:—That country could not within its its limits give room to the millions of persecuted Jews of Eastern Europe, but their sufferings could to a great extent be alleviated. By occupying Palestine the Jews would best serve the interests of the British Empire. It would be necessary clearly to define the boundaries of Palestine. The Jews would not allow restrained capitalism or landlordism to flourish in the new State. They would erect a community which would be an example to the world.

HOSPITALS CONDEMNED.

Sir Berkeley Moynihan, K.C.M.G., speaking on the lessons of the war to the medical profession and the hope for the future in the new Ministry of Health, said:—There is not a hospital in the country of which I have knowledge—and I know most of the best—which is anything like as good as it ought to be. Nothing like adequate arrangements are made for the proper investigation of the clinical type of patients, there is insufficient collaboration with research departments, they are not properly equipped, even with such humdrum things as X-ray departments and other equally necessary parts of a first-class hospital. All is of a third-rate character.

UNEMPLOYED OFFICERS.

General Sir Frederick Maurice speaking at a meeting of ex-service men said:—The problem of employment is a serious one. With 13,000 demobilized every day the prospect for the winter is a gloomy one. The number of officers out of employment is at least 19,000. The immediate necessity, is to deal with the ex-officer problem, which still remains in a very critical state. In order to do this it is essential for an ex-officers' Association to be formed, owing to their welfare being administered to by different departments and under different Warrants than that of the rank and file.

A NATIONAL IDEAL.

Mr. Seebohm Rowntree writing on the need for a national ideal says:—I am inclined to think that half our blunders spring from the fact that we have put before us no clear ethical ideal as to what we want in the future. We base a precarious policy on the insistent claims of first one social group, then another, without submitting all claims to some high moral standard. We are given, indeed, to the generous use of words like Freedom, Justice, Brotherhood. But the conceptions for which they stand are too poorly represented in the turmoil of political or industrial life.

THE GREAT LESSON OF THE WAR.

Mr. G. P. Gooch writing in the "Quarterly Review" says: The passing of empires has been the familiar theme of the moralist in all ages; and the downfall of Germany, following the collapse of Austria and Russia, supplies warnings for the States which have survived the epic struggle. The victorious Allies will do well to imitate, if they can, the energy and thoroughness of their defeated foe. But the supreme lesson which the fall of the German Empire teaches, and which other empires will neglect at their peril, is that arms and wealth are after all but feeble bulwarks, and that it shall profit a nation nothing if it gain the whole world and lose its own soul.

DANGER OF THE CROWD.

Bishop Frodsham says that one of the most marked characteristics of the present day, is the development of government by the crowd, which is one of the gravest sources of danger. The most dangerous speakers with the crowd are those who make extreme statements without attempting to prove them, and who repeat these statements over and over again. No one who knows me will believe me that I am anything but sympathetic with trade unionism. None the less, I believe that trade unions are in danger of being transformed into an unintelligent crowd of members who give up their individual judgment, and who are manipulated as a crowd in a way which is disastrous to their own interests, and to the interests of the country.

SOMETHING NEW IN ARMY EDUCATION.

The new voluntary classes at the Army College described in our issue of Sunday last, start on Thursday. Applications to attend them have been numerous, and it looks as if these courses will supply a real want. As some applicants do not seem quite clear as to their eligibility, we repeat that all ranks, and any English ladies (wives or workers) can join. If possible, applications to attend the classes should reach the Adjutant, G.H.Q. General College, by noon on Thursday. Students can be enrolled however, after attending the first class, provided the maximum number (30 in any one class) has not already been reached. All the courses, except the German class, (which is held at the B.E.L.C.) take place at the G.H.Q. General and Commercial College, 58 Hansa Ring.

VANITY FAIR.

A Feature for the British Woman in Rhineland.

Temptation to Buy.

Furs seem daily to become more beautiful and more costly, and never have so many luxurious garments been on sale. This temptation to buy comes at a time when every woman is grumbling at the persistent high prices. The cold days have made most of us consider that the most profitable purchases are the really warm garments.

Dearer Silks.

Unless something happens in the silk industry, the highest prices ever asked for these goods will soon become operative. Indications are that matters in the industry will become serious, and will supply even more vital problems to the manufacturers of dresses than is the case at the present time.

Established Fashions.

Fashions for the winter of 1919-20 are now firmly established; and the trend towards magnificence of fabric and trimming is certainly fully recognised by the sartorial authorities. In the early autumn the tailor suits were in tweeds and serges, and the afternoon one-piece frocks were in cloth or stockinette of simple genre. Now that the modes are all definitely settled, many of them bearing much historic and psychological interest, one can turn ones attention to the choosing of new gowns, furs, and hats.

Furs that Flatter.

Apart from any question of necessity, the becomingness of fur is undeniable. What age or type of woman would not feel and look her best in one of the new model wraps? Such a wrap accentuate all the best points of one's figure, and is particularly adaptable to wear over the new wide skirts. All the best furs are rich looking, of the softest texture, and silky finish. For evening wear light skins are worn, such as chinchilla and ermine; but these are generally darkened with a border of skunk or lynx.

Popular Lace.

To-day lace plays an enormous part in dress. Happy is the possessor of real lace! While both price of stuffs and labour rule so high, garments that have been laid aside during the days when evening dress was seldom worn can be re-modelled and brought up to date by the use of lace, and nothing is lovelier for the classic draperies now in fashion than delicate lace of all kinds.

Novelty Boots.

High Russian boots of suede, buckskin, and soft leather are among the novelty boots being made to measure for the woman of fashion this winter. These boots to be correctly worn should fall in neat folds around the ankles, thereby, it is said, enhancing the beauty of small feet and making large ones look very much smaller than they really are. Brocaded slippers are showing important-looking paste buckles as a decoration. These brocades are in various vivid colours shot with silver; rose and jade green are, of course, favourite shades.

The Charming Woman.

To be pronounced "charming" is always gratifying to a woman. Charm is elusive and hard to define. A really charming woman brings with her an atmosphere of her own. Most people would be unable to say whether her frocks were of the latest. It is the "air" she has that is most noticeable. The charming woman isn't of necessity a brilliant conversationalist. Summed up, charm in a woman seems to be ready sympathy, timely humour, the aptitude for "rubbing people the right way" and the graceful art of looking interested.

A Wardrobe Hint.

After being caught in the rain whilst wearing a costume, the best way is to hang it up where there is plenty of air and no dust until it is almost dry. Then, with fairly hot irons, press on the wrong side until dry; then hang up until aired. Brush any dust off, and you will find your costume quite smart again. AGNES

FROM EVERYWHERE.

No More Control.—Munitions of War Orders have now been revoked.

Nautical.—A Cardiff school teacher and his family are living in a canal boat.

Lovers' Surprise.—A pair of Staffordshire lovers walked into the canal in a fog.

More Faked Foods.—The City Analyst complains of increasing adulteration of food in London.

A New Duty.—The Health Ministry now has control of registration of births and deaths.

S. A.'s Help.—Gold worth a million pounds has arrived in England from South Africa.

In Memoriam.—Warminster is to have a gun captured by the 6th Battn. Wilts. Regt.

Small Beginnings.—A remark regarding an old coat led to a quarrel and a breach of promise action at Newcastle.

And The Others?—During rat week, only a thousand rats were destroyed in naval establishments.

Tell-tale.—In a divorce case it was stated that 200 cigarette ends were found in a wife's bedroom.

Train forgotten.—A French ambulance train which had been forgotten for fourteen months has just been recovered.

Utopia.—The International Labour Conference demands a universal eight hour day.

Holland's Share.—The internment of German prisoners cost Holland 5½ milion florins.

A Concession.—The Inter-Allied Naval Commission has conceded free navigation for lighters on the German coast.

Turned Down.—Willesden Guardians have refused a gift of beer for the paupers.

No More.—Canada has rejected the proposals for further gratuities for returned soldiers.

The Ban.—The exportation of silver bullion, specie and British silver coin is prohibited.

A Watch Haul.—A Clerkenwell messenger boy was robbed in broad daylight of a parcel containing fifty gold watches.

For Loyalty.—The Leigh-on-Sea stationmaster has been presented with £50 for loyalty during the strike.

The new Order.—A domestic servants' registry office for discharged soldiers has been opened at Bromley.

Not Popular.—Business men in Paris are demanding the withdrawal of the luxury tax.

Still Growing.—At a cost of £7000, Salvation Army barracks are to be erected in a London suburb.

Rugeley's Way.—Rugeley men and women who won distinction in the war have been presented with gold watches.

No Object.—Traders say that the price of motorcars appears to be no object to their present customers.

Bank Fusion.—The Union Bank of Manchester has become affiliated with Barclay's Bank.

Original.—Passengers in the "Adriatic" subscribed £55,000 to the Canadian Victory Loan.

Old Age Money.—The Special Committee on Old Age Pensions suggests 10s a week at seventy years of age.

His View.—Dr. Clifford says Lottery Bonds fleece the poor to save the taxation of the rich.

Figures.—Forty two million tickets were issued during the last 12 months from 130 automatic machines on the underground.

No Cinema Songs.—Applications to introduce first-class singing during the intervals at London cinemas has been refused.

The "Scuttlers."—The detachment of German naval officers from Scapa Flow have been moved from Oswestry to an unknown destination.

WAR CHRISTMASES.

Write your Experiences.

MORE PRIZES FOR READERS.

In addition to the prizes we are offering for short Christmas stories, we invite our readers to send us their personal experiences of the Christmases they have spent since the beginning of the war.

We require one for each of the years 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917 and will give 50 marks for the best short description of a Christmas spent in the Army in each of those years. There will therefore be four prizes — one for each year of the war.

The length of these descriptive articles must not exceed 500 words each

Typewritten copy is preferred but not essential.

The latest date for receiving them will be November 20th and they must be addressed 'Christmas" Cologne Post. A.P.O./S. 40. Rhine Army.

A TOMMY'S GROUSE

1918.

"Deep in a bed of decent size,
No more of sleep will I be robbed,
I'll please myself when I arise,
When I'm demobbed."

"I'll double not at a bugle call,
No more at me will sergeants bawl,
Yes, I'll snap my fingers at them all,
When I'm demobbed."

"No more of 'Smith, your hair get cut',
No more of 'Smith, scrub out this hut',
Or, 'Smith, wash from your neck that smut,'
When I'm demobbed."

1919

"Gone are the times of real delight,
No more in cafés can I muse,
No lovely walks by Rhine o' night,
I pay for all tram rides I use,
Now I'm demobbed."

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

Can you write one?

THREE PRIZES OFFERED.

Christmas will soon be here, and "The Cologne Post" wishes to encourage its readers to write short Yuletide stories suitable for publication in its columns at that festive period.

They can be on any subject and in any vein but they must not exceed 1000 words in length.

We offer prizes of 150 marks, 100 marks, and 50 marks respectively for the three best received and published, and any others we may think worthy of publication will be paid for at our regular rates.

If possible manuscripts should be typewritten, though this is not essential.

The last date for receiving Christmas stories will be November 20th. Envelopes should be addressed "Story Editor" "Cologne Post" A.P.O. S/40, Rhine Army.

GOVERNMENT AND HOME RULE FOR INDIA.

PENNANT INQUIRY.

COMMITTEE'S PRELIMINARY FINDINGS.

The House of Lords Committee of Inquiry into the circumstances attending the dismissal of Miss Violet Douglas Pennant from the Women's Royal Air Force resumed its sitting on Tuesday. Some preliminary findings were announced.

Lord Wrenbury, the Chairman, said the Committee had arrived at some conclusions. They found that the accusations of immorality between Colonel Janson and Miss Glubb were untrue, and that the accusations of general immorality at Hurst Park Camp were entirely unsupported by any evidence, nor was there any evidence of immorality at other W.R.A.F. camps.

The Committee also found the accusation against Colonel Bersey, — that he desired that immorality should continue at Hurst Park Camp, — to be untrue, and also found that there was no evidence to support the accusation against General Livingstone and Colonel Bersey that they desired to allow such a state of things to continue whereby night passes were given to young girls under which the girls were taken to London in Government cars and brought home drunk.

These interim findings of the Committee were unanimous.

The sitting had originally been arranged to give Lady Rhondda the opportunity of giving evidence, and Lord Wrenbury's announcement, at the conclusion of the sitting, of these preliminary findings came as a surprise. After reading them Lord Wrenbury added, "We shall in due course report not only upon the question as to whether Miss Pennant was rightly suspended, but upon all the accusations which have been made."

LADY RHONDDA'S EVIDENCE.

At the opening of the sitting Lady Rhondda was called. She said that Sir Auckland Geddes asked her to prepare a report on women in camps generally. Her report dealt with nine different Women's Corps but especially with the W.R.A.F. It was honestly prepared on facts. She had no animus against Miss Pennant. She (witness) had never in the least sought to obtain the post of Controller. After Miss Pennant's dismissal Miss Pennant came to see her and accused her of having gone to Lord Weir and "demanded her head on a charger."

"I just laughed," said Lady Rhondda, "knowing that Lord Weir had made up his mind before I saw him."

Continuing, witness said she had never been party to any intrigue against Miss Pennant.

At one point Lord Wrenbury remarked, "The Women's Royal Air Force, it appears, sprang into existence on the first of April."

Lady Rhondda replied "Yes. I never really could understand why that date was chosen" (laughter).

WITNESSES NOT CALLED.

At the conclusion of Lady Rhondda's evidence the Chairman read a letter from Lord Stanhope saying that he fully intended to withdraw and apologise in the House of Lords for his statement regarding Wormwood Scrubbs, but he was unable to withdraw his statement regarding Hurst Park, which Mrs. Kitto (who was not called) and three other witnesses could substantiate.

Miss Pennant's Counsel asked for these other witnesses to be called, but the Chairman said that Counsel had already been shown extreme indulgence and the Committee would not grant the application unless Miss Pennant paid all further costs of the proceedings. Counsel declined this offer.

The Chairman then announced the findings given above.

A well-known firm of solicitors announces that Brigadier-General Livingstone and Colonel (now Mr.) Bersey have instructed them to issue writs against Miss Pennant for libel.

APPEAL FOR EMPLOYMENT OF EX-SOLDIERS.

Referring to Field Marshal Earl Haig's appeal for public co-operation in the employment of ex-service men the Ministry of Labour states that ninety per cent. of demobilized men have already been absorbed. However, there are still over 20,000 ex-officers and other ranks on the register of the Appointments Department and over 300,000 ex-service men on the employment register. The majority of the latter are drawing unemployment donation.

The response to the King's proclamation had been, and continues to be, generous, and it is confidently anticipated that Earl Haig's appeal will have the effect of inducing those firms which have not yet done so to employ not less than five per cent. of disabled men. Up to the end of October 28,000 applications have been sanctioned under the training grants scheme, and 15,000 ex-service men placed in employment.

INDIAN CHAMBER.

MEASURE OF HOME RULE FOR NATIVE STATES.

In opening the conference of Ruling Princes and Chiefs at Simla, the Viceroy of India, Lord Chelmsford, thanked them for their unanimity in placing their resources at the disposal of the Government in the Afghan war and particularly acknowledged the prompt and wholehearted assistance from the Princes of the Punjab in suppressing the recent disorders there.

The Viceroy, continuing, said that tranquillity reigned in India but the difficulties and dangers of peace were less patent than those of war and were accordingly more difficult to cope with. The new after-the-war spirit, he said, was the greatest danger which had ever faced mankind. Princes and Chiefs could lend valuable assistance by guarding their States against the lawless and malicious spirit and by not tolerating the lying stories as to the motives of the British Government.

He announced the Government's intention to create a permanent chamber of Princes. Attendance and voting at such Chamber would be voluntary, the Chamber being a consulting and not an executive body. Direct transactions in business between the Government of India and the Native States would not be prejudiced by the institution of this Chamber. Each State would retain its right to direct communication with the Government. The Government of India had acceded to the request of the Durbars to have a voice in the formulation of political practice, with the reservation that as the paramount power it retained the right of ultimate decision regarding the principles to be adopted and the extent of their application.

GENERAL DEGOUTTE.

FRENCH COMMANDER'S VISIT TO COLOGNE.

In cold, dull weather, with the ground covered with half-melted snow, General Degoutte, commanding the French Army of the Rhine, visited the British General Headquarters and inspected the 1/5th Bn. West Yorkshire Regiment (Lt.-Col. Barwell, M.C.) at Cologne yesterday.

The General, accompanied by several members of his staff, arrived from Mainz shortly before midday and was received by the Commander-in-Chief.

A huge crowd surrounded the Cathedral square to watch the proceedings, a strong detachment of mounted police keeping the space clear.

General Degoutte was received with the general salute, the band playing the "Marseillaise", followed by "God Save the King". He then inspected the troops, with whose appearance and movements he was very well pleased, and was introduced to various members of the Headquarters Staff.

The proceedings terminated with a particularly smart march past, which received favourable comment on all sides.

STRIKERS YIELD.

AMERICAN MINERS' PARTIAL ACCEPTANCE.

In a statement issued on Monday, the United States Attorney General, Mr. Palmer, warned the miners that resolutions of their conventions and orders of their various organisations were not above the law, and reiterated his previous warning that the Government considered the strike illegal and would prosecute its suppression to the bitter end.

A telegram from Indianapolis states that the General Committee of the Miners decided early on Tuesday morning to call off the soft coal strike, thus complying with the order of the Court. This decision was reached after seventeen hours' deliberation.

UNTRACED PRISONERS IN GERMANY.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the War Office stated in the House of Commons yesterday that there were twelve officers and 391 men, British prisoners of war in Germany, still unaccounted for. He further stated that the estimated cost from 1st April to the 31st October of the Army of Occupation in Germany was twenty-eight million sterling and for the British forces in France and Flanders four million.

President Poincaré and Madame Poincaré entertained the King and Queen to a Banquet at the French Embassy. There were no speeches.

The last of the German prisoners of war who have been interned in camp at Bramley, Hants, to the number of 1,000, have left for Dover en route for Germany.

N. W. FRONTIER.

TWO BRITISH OFFICERS MURDERED.

The War Office has issued an announcement to the following effect. A regrettable incident is reported to have happened near Akra, in Kurdistan, fifty miles N.E. of Mosul. It appears that on the 3rd November Mr. J. H. Bell, of the Indian Civil Service, political officer at Mosul, and Captain K. R. Scott, commanding the 31st Punjabis, Assistant Political Officer at Akra, were returning to Akra after an inspection of recruits for the frontier gendarmerie posts.

Near Bira Kopra, about fifteen miles N.E. of Akra, they were attacked by a party of one hundred Kurds, and both were killed. The perpetrators of the murder are reported to belong to the Zibar tribe, and some local Kurdish gendarmerie appear to have joined them. After the murder Akra itself was attacked by a body of 300 Kurds, and the gendarmerie at that place were forced to withdraw.

Information as to the causes which led to the murder of these two gallant officers is meagre, but the crime appears to have been the result of inter-tribal jealousies. The disturbances appear to be purely local, and there are no signs at present of its spreading.

BRITISH ASTRONOMER.

HONOURED BY AMERICAN ACADEMY.

Men of science the world over will welcome the news, given in a Newhaven (Conn) telegram, that the National Academy of Sciences at Washington has awarded its gold medal to Professor Alfred Fowler, of the Royal College of Science, South Kensington, in recognition of his eminence in astronomical investigations.

Born in 1868, Professor Fowler was educated in Yorkshire and at the Royal College of Science, where he formed one of a group of brilliant men which included Professor Sir Richard A. Gregory and H. G. Wells.

Having finished his course, he became a lecturer and research assistant at the Royal College and soon displayed those qualities of patient and clear-sighted analysis of physical and mathematical phenomena that have made his name a household word throughout the realm of Science.

Professor Fowler has journeyed to many parts of the world on eclipse expeditions and has assisted in securing data which have added greatly to our knowledge concerning the sun. His work on the chemical and physical condition of stars has been brilliant.

Professor Fowler was the first to give a reliable interpretation of the constitution of comets' tails. When Halley's comet returned in 1910 many people were frightened at the statement that the earth would pass through its tail and that the tail was of a poisonous nature. By working spectroscopically with gases at extremely low pressure, Professor Fowler demonstrated the extreme tenuity of the matter of which the tails are formed. Then again, by similar methods, he has done a great deal to increase our knowledge of the constitution of matter, having shown by spectroscopical and mathematical researches how molecules of matter are built up.

Professor Fowler is a most unassuming man but has been granted many medals both by British and continental societies. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1910 and since then has become Hon. Secretary of the Royal Astronomical Society.

AIR MINISTRY.

PENDING RESIGNATION OF GENERAL SEELY.

In reply to a question, Mr. Bonar Law stated in the House of Commons that it was possible that General Seely had resigned from the Air Ministry but he would rather that a statement should be made by the Minister himself. The question was put by Mr. Pemberton Billing and created considerable surprise in the House.

It is stated that General Seely's impending resignation is due to his disagreement with the plans now under consideration for the reorganisation of the War Office and Air Ministry.

HOUSING CONFERENCE.

In view of the housing problem a conference of all local authorities of Greater London will be held early in December. It is intended to appoint a special Committee to draw up and submit to the people of London a comprehensive housing and town planning policy, dealing not only with slums but with the development of the suburbs and the provision of new transit facilities.

TO ASK THE PREMIER.

There has been some complaint recently by members of the House of Commons concerning the absence of Mr. Lloyd George at question time. Mr. Bonar Law yesterday informed the House that in future the Premier will be present to answer questions every Thursday.

The Honse of Lords has rejected the Commons amendment to the Sex Disqualifications Removal Bill, which aimed at enabling Peeresses in their own right to sit and vote in the House of Lords.

VIVE LA FRANCE.

PRESIDENT POINCARÉ AT THE GUILDHALL.

London gave a rousing reception to the President of the French Republic on Tuesday, when he drove with Madame Poincaré from Buckingham Palace to the Guildhall to receive an address of welcome from the Lord Mayor and City Corporation. President Poincaré showed visible evidence that he was deeply touched with the warmth of the welcome.

On arriving at the Guildhall the distinguished visitors were received by the Lord Mayor and Mayoress. Among those present were Prince Albert and Prince Arthur of Connaught and members of the Government, including the Premier and Lord Derby.

At luncheon the Lord Mayor made a felicitous speech eulogizing the sacrifices of the French nation. In reply President Poincaré alluded to the sufferings of London and Paris at the hands of the enemy.

German air raiders had killed 516 and injured 1,570 in London. The same methods of terrorisation were used against Paris but Germany was just as deceived. In London as in Paris the enemy's attacks were opposed by an unshakable determination supported by the firm conviction of national duty (cheers).

England, continued M. Poincaré, has always been guided by principles of fair play. Formerly, when Britain and France were adversaries, they attacked with chivalrous courtesy and thus learned to respect each other. "Can we conceive a more audacious challenge to civilisation and the spirit of the twentieth century than to wage war by night on open towns and bury innocent people in the ruins of their dwellings? It is necessary in the peace we have just signed to spare posterity a resumption of the horrors we have known. Our two great peoples powerfully contributed to save righteousness from the ruin wherewith it was threatened. It remains for them to give it new life and assure its reign upon earth." (Cheers).

MILITARY MISSION TO PERSIA.

A Commission of military experts to estimate the needs of Persia in respect of the Persian military and police forces will shortly leave for Persia, under the terms of the Anglo-Persian agreement. It will consist of Major-General W. E. Dixon, Colonel Moens, General Huddleston, Lieut.-Colonel Fraser, Major J. B. Steele-Brevet-Colonel J. W. Lamont, and Lieut., Colonel Irving Fortesque, General Dixon has spent much time in Persia and has a proficient knowledge of the language.

British and Indian troops were required in Persia in order to protect the frontiers against external menaces and to secure internal tranquility, said Mr. Cecil Harmsworth in reply to Commander Kenworthy.

Neither of these menaces had altogether disappeared but the troops will be withdrawn as soon as it is found possible. The date by which Persia will be able to look after her own interests will depend on the rapidity wherewith the provisions of the recently concluded Anglo-Persian agreement are put into operation. Neither side has any desire for delay.

PRISONERS REPATRIATED.

During the week ending 5th November, 21,091 German prisoners of war were repatriated from the United Kingdom, while 1,955 German and 1067 Turkish prisoners were repatriated from Egypt. The total numbers repatriated from all theatres of war between the 1st Sept. and 5th November are as follows: German, 252,014; Austrian, 23,000; Turkish 26,009; Bulgarian 1,223.

LARKIN OUT ON BAIL.

The Irish Transport Workers' Leader, Jim Larkin, has been released on bail for fifteen thousand dollars. He was arrested on the charge of criminal anarchy by circulating the "Revolutionary Age", a publication advocating the forcible overthrow of the United States Government.

M.P.'s ARRESTED.

A force of troops and police yesterday raided the Headquarters of the Dublin newspaper "Dail Eireann" and seized a quantity of documents. They also arrested three members of Parliament, Messrs. O'Mahony, Hayes and Lawless.

MUTED LONDON.

COMMEMORATING THE ARMISTICE.

The great silence which fell upon London on Tuesday morning at precisely eleven o'clock, immediately after the maroons had given the signal, was most impressive. Everyone in the streets stood stock still and the hum of traffic was instantly hushed. Men bared their heads, police and military stood at the salute, and many women were seen to be silently crying.

Thousands of people had gathered in front of the Mansion House. From a quarter to eleven the Headquarters band of the Salvation Army played hymns on the balcony until just before the signal to pause. The Lord Mayor, accompanied by the Mayoress, stood on the balcony during the period of silence. At the expiration of the two minutes the "Last Post" was sounded by a bugler, after which the huge crowd sang the Doxology and the National Anthem. All flags in the vicinity of the Mansion House were lowered for the two minutes.

Vast crowds assembled on the steps of St. Paul's Cathedral and surged across the roadway. As the cathedral clock tolled eleven, heads were bared and stood bowed in meditation. For two poignant minutes intense silence prevailed. Then it was broken by the singing of "O God, our help in ages past."

The Prime Minister, Mr. A. J. Balfour, Mr. Bonar Law, Mr. Austen Chamberlain and other Ministers were standing on the steps of the Home Office when the maroon gave the signal. They bared their heads and stood in meditation.

Round the cenotaph in Whitehall there was another huge assembly. A French officer arrived at the shrine shortly before eleven and deposited a beautiful wreath from President Poincaré. He remained at the salute during the period of silence. Royal wreaths were also deposited at the cenotaph. One bore the inscription in the King's handwriting, "To the memory of the glorious dead."

During the afternoon Rear-Admiral Ferguson and Lieut.-General Mac Donagh, accompanied by Viscount Peel, under Secretary for War, laid on the cenotaph two large heart-shaped wreaths of laurels from the Admiralty and War Office.

Telegrams from Australia and Canada show that the armistice silence was observed there in manner similar to England. The day was also generally observed in the United States, where there was a brief cessation of work in all Government departments. The Prince of Wales' train, en route to Washington, was halted near Baltimore and the Prince and his staff stood to attention.

IRISH ARMISTICE.

A.P.M. WOUNDED IN FIERCE RIOT.

Serious rioting broke out at Cork on Tuesday night, when soldiers and civilians came into collision. Sticks, stones and belts were freely used and revolvers were also discharged. The Assistant Provost Marshal received a bullet in the thigh and a soldier was badly wounded in the forehead. The police, reinforced by military, finally succeeded in driving the rioters back to barracks, but not before many windows had been smashed and extensive looting had taken place.

In Dublin on Tuesday a procession of Sinn Feiners paraded the streets singing. A body of Trinity College students, after singing the National Anthem on St. Stephen's Green, set out to meet the Sinn Feiners. Several conflicts ensued, lasting about an hour, stones and sticks being freely used.

A detective officer named Wharton was shot at and seriously wounded in Dublin in the evening. His assailant escaped.

INFLATED CREDIT.

One of Mr. Bottomley's questions in the House of Commons referred to the increase to 5½ per cent. for discounting Treasury Bills. He asked whether this would not involve an increase of nearly five million pounds for payment of interest during the latter half of the financial year. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain, replied that any additional cost to the Exchequer would be repaid many times over to the nation and also to the Exchequer if the steps taken succeeded in reducing credit inflation and led to an earlier restoration of our effective gold standard.

PREMIER BLESSES LADY ASTOR.

Mr. Lloyd George has sent a letter to Lady Astor, who is contesting the Sutton Division of Plymouth, hoping that she will be elected. It is important, he says, for a certain number of women to be in Parliament to represent the women's view points, especially on such questions as housing, child welfare, food and drink.

NURSE CAVELL'S PRISON CELL.

The cells at St. Gilles prison, Brussels, which were occupied by Miss Cavell and Mademoiselle Petit, have been converted into a small museum containing their books, clothes, and other small possessions. Each door bears a commemorative tablet, surrounded by trophies and flags, recording their heroic deaths.

British destroyers proceeding to the Baltic have reached Copenhagen.

About twelve hundred Russians liable to military service have been enrolled in Finland.

WIFE'S VAIN PLEA.

V.C. COLONEL IN DIVORCE COURT.

In the Divorce Court on Tuesday Mr. Justice Shearman granted a decree of restitution to the wife of Lieut.-Colonel John Sherwood Kelly, V.C., the officer who was recently reprimanded by Court Martial for writing to the Press. There was no defence.

Mrs. Sherwood Kelly gave evidence that she and Colonel Kelly were married in April 1916. Her husband became fascinated with another woman and told her he was tired of marriage and of giving up his liberty. In February 1919 she wrote a letter appealing to him to return, wherein she said, "I think the men and women who made you out such a hero must have turned your dear head. But remember, the day may come when you will no longer be in khaki. The hero of yesterday will become the ordinary citizen of to-morrow, and the latter may perhaps sigh for the affection which he despises to-day."

London newspapers state that Colonel Sherwood Kelly received his demobilisation papers on Tuesday.

STARVED FOR 17 DAYS.

EX-SOLDIER'S TERRIBLE PLIGHT.

An extraordinary story was told by a man who has been found lying under an archway at Bath in a state of exhaustion from prolonged starvation. He is at present in hospital, still in a dazed condition, but able to give his name as W. Parry, an ex-soldier. He states that he had lain under the archway without food for 17 days.

He has given his age as 44, but has the appearance of a man of 70 owing to his beard and wasted condition.

His account of what happened is that he set out to tramp from Bristol. On the journey he began to suffer with his feet, and went under the archway to rest. While in France he had suffered from trench feet, and the trouble returned. He removed his boots to ease his feet. His feet were so swollen, however, that he found he was unable to replace his boots, and could not walk.

The hospital authorities say that from his condition he must have been without food for at least a week.

For days he has lain in hospital in a critical condition, but is now showing signs of improvement. He says that he has no friends or relatives, and is unable to give any account of himself. At one time he was a sailor, and he has been a prisoner of war in Germany.

FASHIONS AND RELIGION.

Several dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland have started a campaign against the latest fashions in women's clothes.

Dr. Hallinan, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick, in a letter to the Press, has found a new argument against fashions which, as he says, come from Paris to London without being improved in transit and are taken up at third hand in Ireland. The Bishop writes:—"I have seen it stated on what I conceive to be reliable authority that the principal designers of these modern fashions in women's dress are men, not women; and, furthermore, that they are generally Parisian Jews or Freemasons, who are bitterly opposed to Christianity and seek, among other means, to uproot it by the introduction into Christian society of these dangerous and indecent dresses."

COOKED TO DEATH.

A terrible fatality through a fire in a gas main was investigated on Saturday at Ilkeston, the victim being Thomas Lynch, 37, bricklayer. Carrying a lighted paraffin lamp, he went into the main with a bucket loom to plaster it up. Twice he emerged with his hands to his head as if in great pain. He was advised by a fellow-workman not to return, but he insisted upon doing so, and was subsequently found in the main in an upright position with his clothes on fire. He had been warned not to enter if there was gas in the main. Medical evidence described the body as being practically cooked. A verdict of accidental death was returned.

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.

Fears of a further advance in the Bank of England rate of discount had a depressing effect on investments and induced much profit-taking in oils. French Loans were weak on a further rise in the exchange, which is attributed to special remittances in connection with French issues in London. Brazilians were favourably influenced by a smart rise in the value of milreis. Textiles, shippings and Mexican silver minings were in demand. Siberian mines hardened on an announcement that details are completed for an amalgamation of the four leading companies. South Africans were weaker, in sympathy with the general tone. British Oil and Cake Mills shares were strong on the issue of bonus share issues. The capital will be increased from two millions to ten millions. The issue of Metropolitan Water Board 5½ per cent. Bills was fully subscribed.

The King and Queen of the Belgians have arrived at the Azores aboard the George Washington on their homeward journey.

BEATEN IN THE FIELD.

Now that a year has elapsed since the signing of the Armistice on November 11th, 1918, it is well to look back over those memorable months which culminated in the German request for the cessation of hostilities.

Time moves rapidly, and so much history has been crowded into the twelve months which have elapsed since that ever memorable date, that we are apt to forget the salient features of that event.

What then was the military position? Germany bereft of her Allies defeated in the two preceding months was trembling on the verge of the greatest military disaster ever contemplated in history. It is well to insist upon this point. For there are not wanting Germans who take up the attitude that, after all, they never were really beaten in the military sense at all. The "Home Front" is blamed for yielding.— the "Hunger Blockade" say some—the wicked authors of the Revolution, say others—all conspired to cripple Germany's sword and render her helpless in the face of overwhelming powers.

All this is very ingenious, but unfortunately the standpoint is devoid of truth. A few days after the signature of the Armistice, the German Press called on the inhabitants of the Provinces bordering on the Rhine to give a warm welcome home to the German Armies which, after four years of incessant fighting, were about to return undefeated to their native land.

Hindenburg, in an order addressed to the troops under his command, issued a somewhat similar statement in January of this year. "With heads erect, overcome but undefeated, we quit the battlefields in which the valour of our troops has sustained the honour of the German arms after four years of incessant fighting. Only the collapse of the home front, due to the severity of the blockade, coupled with the overwhelming numbers the enemy could bring against us, compelled us to yield."

Now all this is palpably untrue. One simple question is sufficient to put the question to the touchstone of reality. If, as the Germans assert, they never really were beaten in the field, how is it that the British Navy patrols the Rhine and that British, French, Belgian and American troops stand astride its shores?

Some ingenious Teutons have actually volunteered the statement that the troops of occupation are here by mutual understanding between the new German Government and the Allied Powers.

With a view to correcting this erroneous idea, we think it well to draw attention to the military situation as it developed from the events of the late summer of 1918, leading on to the collapse of Bulgaria in September, the Austrian and Turkish debacles in October and the final collapse of Germany in November. On another occasion we propose to give a more detailed account of these final phases.

MY PRECIOUS PIECE OF PAPER.

Some years ago now, I was given a piece of paper, and I well remember being told at the time to "take great care of it, as one day it may be of great use to you." From that day onward, that piece of paper, became as it were, a piece of myself; it never left me.

When my call came, and I donned the King's uniform, my precious piece of paper had a new resting place in a wallet in my tunic pocket. I often gazed around the barrack room, to see dozens of eyes, fixed with a steely gaze on my tunic pocket, as if to penetrate the very cloth to wrest the secret held by my precious piece of paper.

Life to me was getting almost unbearable, and I was daily walking about in fear of my life, feeling like a murderer being hounded down by the police, just for the sake of that piece of paper. I had almost decided to cast wisdom to the winds and burn it, and so, as I thought, lengthen my life, when the orderly came to inform me, that I was on draft for France.

Well do I remember that night, as I laid in bed, and pondered with my conscience, should I destroy it, or take it with me to France, with its unknown possibilities. It was almost dawn, and still left me with the fate of my precious paper undecided.

Suddenly, I was struck with an idea, which caused the blood to rush to my head, and the bed on which I lay to creak under the strain. Yes, I would risk all, and take it with me as my mascot, and if I went under, my precious paper holding my destiny, would be buried with me.

My piece of paper and I eventually reached France, to battle and die together if need be. At last I was posted to my Battery, together with six of the fellows who shared the barrack room in "Blighty" with me.

Here I consoled myself with the knowledge of being in a strange land, among people who had neither heard of me, or of my precious paper. It was just a week since we had joined the Battery, and I began to think at last I'd found a haven of refuge, from those who would seemingly stop at nothing to become possessed of that piece of paper, and so once again I began to breathe freely.

Little did I think that fate was to play once again into my enemies' hands, as I went out that night in quest of some cigarettes at a neighbouring canteen, at peace with myself and the world at large. I had returned and just "got into kip," and was having a quiet read of my local paper, when I heard a turmoil outside the "bivvi," which caused me to listen.

Suddenly the door was pushed open, and standing in the doorway pointing an accusing finger at me, stood Jack Peters. One glance at Jack was sufficient for me to grasp what had happened. On the strength of a "buckshee" franc or two he had picked up on the "crown and anchor" board, he had gone to the village and supped too well, and I had, whilst in that confiding mood, told the "boys" of my precious paper.

Well, to relate, all the trials that piece of paper and I were subjected to, during our two years' stay in France, would, I am sure, fill a book, so I propose to leave that to your imagination.

Ultimately I transferred my affections to Cologne, when one sunny morning in September, I received an urgent message to attend at the orderly room. I obeyed the order immediately, but with a slight attack of "wind up," not exactly knowing for what reason I had been sent for.

I pushed open the door to find the Battery clerk patiently waiting for me, with his pencil and paper at the alert position, ready for action. He commenced by asking me when I enlisted, together with the request for my pay book. After carefully perusing that grimy object of interest, he informed me it contained no record of my "attestation," and I would not therefore come under the new order he had just received.

It was then, my precious piece of blue paper, was to play its noble part. My hand went to my wallet and with a thrill of pride, I pulled out my "attestation form" and laid it on the table. The clerk looked longingly at it and asking me to wait a few minutes, vanished into the C. O's sanctum.

He returned in five minutes time with the following message, "You jammy perisher, you are for 'demob' in the morning, come here at 9 o'clock and I will make your papers out."

The following morning my piece of paper and I were parted, but it had played its noble part, as it had 'rescued' me. S. H. F.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views.

STUDYING ECONOMICS.

Sir,—I am often asked by soldiers what are the best books to read to gain a fair insight into questions of political economy which are so much discussed to-day.

For their use the following notes on a course of reading I recommend may be found useful.

1. Start with Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," a book that, if people realised it, could be given to children with as much impunity as an expurgated edition of "Gulliver's Travels."
2. Follow this up with Jevons' political economy essays, and Malthus.
3. Then one is prepared for the classical work of John Stuart Mill, which systematises and rounds out all the writings in this field that had gone before. Mill may not be as fascinating as Smith, but he is clear and logical and abounds in illustration.
4. Or one might read to advantage Walker's Political Economy, which in many respects may be regarded as a simplified and abreviated edition of Mill.
5. Then if your curiosity has been stimulated sufficiently, read some of the representatives of the so-called "modern" (in contrast with the "classical" school of Mill) school, Marshall, Taussig, Fisher, etc.
6. Round out the whole by getting some notion of the Labour viewpoint from Marx and Spargo, and you will begin to have an inkling of what it (the modern unrest etc.) is all about.

ARGUS.

SPORT IN RHINELAND.

Sir,— Does J. W. J. suggest that conditions are any more unsettled at present than they were in the early days of the occupation?

To plead unsettlement as the excuse for the degeneration of sport on the Rhine is wrong. Take your mind back to the comparatively short rests from the line, when a hunt after the leather by teams representative of rival regiments in a brigade was always a tit-bit eagerly looked for.

Then to come to more recent days. What hours have been spent in converting arable land into something like a presentable playing pitch! This was done in many Rhine villages up and down the area by the old Army, so keen were those gallant sportsmen.

Do their successors fall short of that high sporting spirit; or do the cabaret and club make a greater appeal?

REGULAR.

WILL JAZZ GO?

Sir,

Has the jazzy craze come to stay?
Never in your life.
It has nearly had its day.
"Thanks," said the world and his wife.

Turning Rhythm into Rag
Bioscopic tune;
Making dancing quite a fag
It must fade out soon.

Weird and wonderful effects
Help the band along
Then the leader who objects
Bursts forth into song.

Give us back the dainty valse
We're fed up with the jazz.
Want no syncopation false
Like the Darkie has. VAMPY.

PLAINLY MARKED PRICES.

Sir,—I agree with Sapper. It is essential that articles in German shops should bear a plain mark. But even when this is done I have my suspicions that the shopkeeper often marks his goods solely for the benefit of British customers and has a totally different price for the German buyer. SUSPICIOUS.

"TOTE" FOR ENGLAND.

Sir,—If the manner in which the "Tote" was run here in Rhineland is any indication of what we may expect on English courses, then I trust the Jockey Club, which I see is considering its adoption, will not touch the proposal with the end of a barge pole. BOOKIE.

EYES AND NO EYES.

Sir,—There is one little point in "Captain R.A.M.C.'s" letter to which I beg to take exception.

He asks us to emulate the example of the Germans in the matter of comfortable chairs. Your correspondent must have been singulary fortunate in his billets, for my experience has been that in German houses comfortable arm-chairs are unknown. ARM-CHAIRITE.

DON'T BE HARD.

Sir,—It passes one's comprehension that within a year of the close of the greatest war of all times a Minister of the State should be compelled to appeal for the Army and advise his hearers not to be too hard on it, that Army which saved the country from the worst of all possible fates.

What has become of that vast army of stump orators who beat the recruiting drum, the promises held out by the stay-at-homes? Those same individuals now that the danger is passed have disappeared from view. Does the proposed League of Nations permit them to sleep comfortably in their beds? J.T.

WHAT SAY YOU?

Sir,—Will the erstwhile champions of the German and admirer of everything Teuton claim for him first place as regards street cleansing after a fall of snow?

After slithering about in the slush for the greater part of last evening and only reaching home after much difficulty I have come to the conclusion that the sooner the authorities in Cologne formulate an extra by-law on lines adopted by the majority of English municipalities the better. FOOT SLOGGER.

AN OPERA GROUSE.

Sir, — I heartily agree with "Quatre Yeux's" remarks re the annoyance which lady visitors to the Opera cause others by their thoughtless prattle during the performance.

Is it also necessary to extract pieces of chocolate from apparently reams of crackling paper during the acts, or cannot this form of bodily nourishment wait until the interval? STIGGINS.

DREAD OF DEMOB.

Sir,—The case of "Downhearted" is alas typical of thousands. Many fear demob for a variety of reasons.

There is the man who fears his return to a trade because he regards himself as a back number; he whose old job has been closed to him by a class of employer who has become deaf to the appeals of the ex-soldier; the man who sees in his old job something irksome and effeminate; he who is faced with the prospect of resuming civilian life at a pre-war wage on joing the ranks of the unemployed and so on.

For many the future is a nightmare. Meanwhile any minor trading concern competes for the attention of the profiteering element at home. Let the guns roar again and we should I suppose have the same thing over again. What a world! SMILER.

NEWSPAPER PROFITEERING.

Sir,—When about to enter the Modernes Theatre the other evening I counted no less than six German hawkers of newspapers in the entrance. Inside there were two or three more. Is this necessary?

Round the corner at the entrance to the Palace Theatre there were five. The appearance of a patron about to enter one of these places of amusement is a signal for a general rush and one has to face a barrage of all the newspapers and periodicals of the day.

Why not adopt the idea of one stall with the newspapers set out on a rack as is the case at the Officers' Club? It is easy to understand the reason for this Army of newspaper sellers. As a profiteer he is the outside edge, not being content with anything but a margin of 200 per cent. on every newspaper sold. HABITUE.

RECKONING THE MARK.

Sir,—When we Britishers in Rhineland get charged, say, 20 marks for an article or for some service which before we came here was obtainable for perhaps a quarter of the figure, we are apt to say, well, look at the present value of the mark.

Now that is all wrong. A mark to the German hasn't depreciated to that extent. As between one German and another it may not represent quite its old value, but it does very nearly. At any rate it is worth many times more than 1½d or 2d to him.

We are foolish to give one or two mark tips just because we as Britishers are benefitting by the depreciation in the exchange. No native ever does so; why should we?

It may not be necessary to appraise the mark at a full shilling when you spend it, but don't fall into the common wasteful error of throwing it a way on the German as being only worth a penny or two. PERTH.

IN LATE AUTUMN.

Come for a walk; it is so perfect out. We set off through the Sudpark — the sunshine was gorgeous and the sky a perfect blue; if it had not been for the reds and golds of the autumn leaves, it might have been July instead of late October.

Across Lindenallee we go and down the road to No. 8 Veterinary Hospital. How neat it all looks with its white-topped railings and well swept lines. — What a difference, we say, to four months ago.

We notice the rows of stables with the shining backs of the horses in them as we round the corner towards the Golf links and past the rubbish dump of war implements. — What a history is hidden in all those old limbers and scraps — and through the spinney we go, bordering the Links.

A pit-a-pat of falling leaves gives a golden glint as we pass, and in another minute we are out on the other side near the first green.

A tiny lizard scuttles away from under our feet as we step out on to the grass. He too is making the most of the warm sun.

We walk along towards the second green; two subs are just finishing the hole. We must stop a moment to see them drive over the trees from the third tee — Now watch. A good swing and away she goes — No! thud, it has gone right into the dump of empty ammunition boxes on the right; hard lines! Now number two — a beauty! Did you see how it went?

Another five minutes and we are across the course near the new sand quarry hole — we must just see these people drive over it. "Red Tabs!" I am sure he ought to do something.

A fairly high tee — a few swings and the ball is off like a bird, skimming along, rising higher and higher until it sails triumphantly over the top.

Now for the second "Red Tab." Over he goes! No it has dropped at the foot of the quarry. We will not stop to watch his struggles, but leave him with the hope that the first stroke up is a lucky one.

How perfect the air is as we skirt the quarry up the footpath by its side and come out on the top. Not a breath is stirring. A shimmer of heat haze is quivering over the land as we look across to the Seven Virgin Mountains and dear Drachenfels.

On to the top road we go and down past the Golf House. A few early couples are having tea and the sound of tinkling cups through the open door sounds cheery as we pass.

We take the side road to Rodenkirchen, passing over the railway bridge and down to the village. Here we pass over the tram-lines, taking the first turn to the left—such a fascinating little new house has sprung up at the corner, since last we were here,—and in a minute we are down the steps on to the riverside. We lean over our pet railings at the corner and gaze across it.

The fishing boats on the other side are forsaken, and the summer crowd of onlookers waiting eagerly for the nets to be drawn in are no longer there. The yachts below us are rocking lazily anchored up ready for their winter sleep, their white sails tucked away drom the storms and snow.

A huge steamer comes gliding majestically by on the wings of the current, her three huge barges like silent sleuth hounds gliding behind her. In the distance a busy little tug is fighting her way up stream and the sunshine on the water at her bows is turning it to rainbow hues.

Great shadows begin to creep across our pathway as the sun begins to sink behind us, and a little shiver of cold reminds us that it is late autumn and not July; so once more we take the road and follow the towpath towards the city.

The sky now is a golden primrose. With the fast sinking sun and the Cathedral towers silhouetted against the paling sky it makes a wonderful picture to gaze upon as we go on our way.

We walk as far as the ferry boat, then turning up to our left across the tram-lines we take the road through the tunnel of trees now carpeted with the golds and browns of autumnal foliage. We are soon at the Sudpark again and down the roadway to our own gate.

"How perfect it has been," we both say in the same breath; and now for a cosy tea. D. V. O'R.

The Editor will be glad if officers and men of the Rhine Army will contribute to this paper. The need for contributions is the greater now that so many of our regular writers are leaving for home. All accepted articles etc. are paid for and may be on any topic likely to interest the troops on the Rhine.

A TENNIS AFTERNOON

Woeful Experience of Debut at the Courts.

By "NUMBERS."

With that precipitancy and dash that are characteristic of my courageous nature I engaged a short while ago to put up Sunday performances in the Tennis Tournament.

I then purchased a racquet and six beautiful new balls and enquired where the wise men of tennis might reside, that I might learn.

Without having conferred with wise men I put in an undaunted appearance at the tournament on Saturday and proceeded to await my unmasking with equanimity.

Hearing a voice raised often and angrily in reproach and lamentation, I found it to proceed from a gentleman in the shade of a tent sitting with large canvases covered with names in front of him.

Many people were asking him questions and I had frequently to translate his remarks to my fair partner. Approaching him delicately, in the midst of a paroxysm of rage, I beamed ecstatically upon him for a long time.

He glared at me. I still smiled. His frown disappeared, happiness dawned upon his features, and at length his face was lit with the radiance of summer seas. Major Bowes-Lyon was smiling.

He began to look for my name among the many Wimbledon players that figured on the canvas in front of him, but having informed him that that would be the wrong place, and that rather should he look at the list of Handicaps singles, he gave me every information required in the tone of a lamb.

Gracefulness and Brawn.

I then observed a match between an Englishman with a bad liver and a Frenchman with a charming shirt. During the match the most enduring trait of each nation was evidenced—the Englishman was annoyed with his own play, the Frenchman with that of his opponent.

When the somewhat hopeless fight between the gracefulness of Gaul and the brawn of Britain was drawing to a close, I was approached by a gentleman with that appearance usual in middle aged men after an evil life.

This gentleman bore the insignia of a Padre; and further more the neat black crosses on his hat and tunic were underlaid with wings.

I know not if to certain gentlemen of the cloth there is vouchsafed an anticipatory halo. If it be so there must have been some mistake in the issue department in this case. Probably however they were issued in lieu of, and not in addition to, the graces of Heaven to come hereafter.

My attention then became riveted on to the bronzed features, lean long face, and hawk-like eyes of one of our regular officers, who, for long years had served his country gloriously in scorching India.

Ah! these staunch, simple men, whose eyes have pierced the Romance of the East and who deal with millions of swarthy subject people with an authority and ease that Cyrus and Alexander would have envied!

Quite by accident I was introduced to this hero at tea, and found out that he had always been a stockbroker in London.

NORTHERN RUGBY.

Rugby County Championship Teams for Nov. 24th.

LANCASHIRE v. YORKSHIRE.

The following team has been selected to represent Lancashire in the Rugby County Championship against Yorkshire at Aigburth, on Nov. 22:—Ainsworth (Richmond); Jackson (Manchester University), Woodeson (Liverpool University), Cullen (Manchester), Heywood (Waterloo); R. A. Lloyd (Liverpool), Anderson (Manchester University); Wakefield (R.A.F.) Handford (Manchester), Grierford (Manchester), Hashim (Manchester), Annersley (Waterloo), Periton (Waterloo), Cross (Broughton Park), Conway (Cambridge).

CUMBERLAND v. CHESHIRE.

The following team was on Saturday night chosen to represent Cumberland against Cheshire at Whitehaven on Nov. 22: W. H. Postgate (Cockermouth); T. Hood (Aspatria), T. Fletcher (Workington), H. Graham (Carlisle), J. B. Saint (Carlisle); R. C. Saint (Carlisle), J. R. Carruthers (Wigton); Rev. H. Ewbank (Sheffield), Capt. J. R. Morgan (Carlisle and Hawick), J. B. Beattie (Aspatria), J. Robinson (Aspatria and Edinburgh University) J. R. Johnstone (Carlisle and Haddington), G. Cuthell (Workington), R. Lawson (Workington), R. Hanvey (Blennerhasset). The team shows only one change from that which defeated Northumberland. This is forward, where J. Robinson, of Aspatria, a former county man now playing for Edinburgh University, supplants Clark, of Blennerhasset.

RHINE ARMY TROOPS M.T. COY. v. 36th C.C.S.

This match took place on Saturday on the ground of the first-named. The game was fast all through and Cpl. Reasey (centre forward) scored in the first half minute, the second goal coming from Pte. Thompson after one of his usual individual efforts. Before half time, the C.C.S. goalie was beaten four times, two goals coming from Pte. Eatch and another from Cpl. Reasey.

The second half saw the M. T. Coy. slacken down, being satisfied with a five-goals lead, but Cpl. Reasey saw another opening and could not resist it, making the final score of 6—0.

This brought the Rhine Army Troops M.T. Company's goal average up to 36 goals against one for the last four matches.

Number Thirteen.

Jack Jarvis came out of the Army last March, but he did not get a stable of horses together until July, since when he has turned out thirteen flat race winners. His thirteenth was Damaged Goods at Liverpool.

THE THROSTLES.

Little-known facts about West Bromwich Team.

By "TYNESIDER."

The West Bromwich club sprang up through the doings of some sturdy youngsters who played football many years ago, under the name of the West Bromwich Strollers. Eventually they changed their Strollers to Albion, and the name remains to this day. In 1885 the Albion declared themselves a professional club and Jim Bayliss, a stalwart of those days, was appointed captain. They came on by leaps and bounds and are to-day one of the strongest forces in the first league.

They have had their bad times like all other clubs, and in 1900-01 they only won seven matches and retired to Division 2. But it was not long ere they returned to the upper circle.

The Association Cup.

In 1887-8 they met proud Preston for the Cup and defeated the hitherto "Invincibles" by one goal, a performance that will ever rank as meritorious.

Nick Ross, one of the greatest defenders football has ever known, was playing in Preston's team that day, while Reader, Bassett, John Reynolds and Nicholls, all famous names in football history, were assisting the Albion.

It was in 1884 that Tom Smith, taking over the duties of secretary, suggested that a crest should be adopted. Down by the brook where the old "Strollers" had played was a colony of "Throstles", and that this bird should be their crest was a happy suggestion, eagerly approved. From then onwards, they earned the nickname of "Throstles" and this season they are a tuneful crowd. They meet Aston Villa on Saturday at Villa Park. Last Saturday the Villa put a sheck on their conquering career and great interest is being taken in this encounter. It is interesting to note that these great rivals first met in 1884. By defeating their neighbours in 1892 the West Bromwich eleven won the Cup a second time, but Aston returned the compliment in 1895. The Villa have the best record and they should improve this week-end.

FOOTBALL JOTTINGS.

By W. Le. C.

Newcastle United openly state they are out for the Cup and the League. It's a tall order, but their supporters will be content with a repetition of the 1909—10 victory. The Cup appeals more to Tyneside than the League championship.

* * *

There is gloom at Coventry and something drastic must be done there.

* * *

The two Sheffield teams have met on no fewer than 100 occasions.

* * *

With G. O. Smith, the great centre, football was a passion. Once, receiving a wire from a cousin, stating that he had broken his leg in a match he said, "Just like him, he doesn't say who won".

* * *

Rumour is rife that "Napper" Thomson and Macintosh of Dundee will follow Davie Brown to England. But I think this will not be. The northern club cannot afford to part with such players at present.

* * *

James Blair gave his word to the Sheffield Wednesday directorate that when they would give him permission to train in the evening and a suitable situation in Sheffield he would return. That this has occurred is evident from his reappearance with the Wednesday.

* * *

The transfer of Pursell and Aitken of Glasgow Rangers is for this season only. Port Vale are fortunate in having secured such services.

* * *

John McDonald, of Airdrieonians, entered senior football by joining Motherwell. They dropped him after two games. He later joined Airdrie and when Motherwell who still held his league signature found out his worth and skill, approached him again. A blank refusal was his answer. However, they amicably parted with him to the Airdrieonians, and to-day they deeply regret their estimation of this brainy player.

* * *

Leach, of the Villa, is making good headway towards recovery. With his return, Aston should be greatly strengthened where they are weakest.

* * *

Up to date there have been 96 draws in the Southern League. A remarkable state of affairs.

* * *

"Bobbie" Parker again to lead Everton's line. What a surprise for the rumour-mongers!

* * *

Purcell, of Liverpool, is commencing training again. The Merseyside team is anxious for his return to the rear division.

* * *

Johnson, Sunderland's reserve left back, won eight medals while in junior football. He recently received a purse of gold, and a gold watch and chain from his old workmates in recognition of having won the M.M.

Brittain, Cardiff City's captain, is a town councillor.

Queen's Park Rangers are having rank bad luck through injuries to players. But they will come up again.

ARSENAL PLAYER HURT.

Graham, who was at centre-half for the Arsenal on Saturday against Bolton Wanderers, was badly hurt in the last quarter of an hour, and is not likely to turn out again for a month. As Groves was also injured, and Voysey will not be fit to play again until the New Year, the Arsenal are in a difficulty. They hope to have Buckley at centre-half for the match at Bolton next Saturday, and it is probable that a trial will be given to Butler, who has been showing excellent form in reserve matches.

SPORTING SPIRIT

Gives place to Lethargy and Indifference.

RHINELANDERS' LETTERS.

"I read with interest the article of "Old Brigade" in which he asks what has happened to Rhineland sport and notes with regret the diminishing enthusiasm for sporting affairs being displayed by the troops in the Army of Occupation" writes yet another sports officer.

"And I deeply regret that one has no alternative but to agree with him. It has been a source of deep concern to me to see the old keenness which was always associated with what I will call the fighting army, slowly declining and in its stead the slow but sure growth of passiveness, lethargy and indifference in such matters.

In the old days persuasion was never necessary to get men to take part in the sport of the moment; the difficulty was never to obtain enough men for a cricket or football team, but to leave men out without giving offence to keen enthusiasts.

No More Volunteers.

Now, sad to relate, the position is entirely reversed. Men no longer volunteer, but have to be persuaded or driven to participate in the games of the unit. It is unfair, perhaps, to bring all under this heading for there remain a few who have retained what we have chosen to call the Britisher's love of sport and are ever ready, and more than ready, to do their share.

But sport, like everything else, cannot be successfully carried on in a unit with the support of only a small minority.

Even if it is possible to get together a football team from this number they cannot be expected to do their best when they receive no moral support from the remainder of the unit. And many have sunk so low that not only do they refuse to take part in games themselves but have lost all desire to watch and morally assist by their support their company or battalion team.

Sport is essentially a matter for voluntary effort and in this the old maxim applies just as strongly as to the soldier, "one volunteer is equal to ten pressed men."

The Reason.

As has been pointed out in your columns the present unsatisfactory state of affairs may be partially accounted for by the general unrest in Rhineland, and I for one shall look for a marked improvement in the course of the next couple of months.

There is no lack of talent; all that is required is a cultivation of inclination, which I refuse to believe is entirely extinct. I have great hopes of a boom in Rhineland sport later on."

THE OTHER SIDE.

A young soldier, who professes to be indignant at some of the accusations of "Old Brigade" sends us the following:—

Sir,—I beg leave to contradict the aspersions cast upon the young soldier by your contributor "Old Brigade" and maintain that his statements as to the lack of keenness for sport are, generally speaking, without foundation. They may apply to his unit, but I submit that it is not fair to hold up any one unit as an example of the spirit prevailing in Rhineland. In the unit to which I belong there is I am glad to say no such state of affairs. Our fine battalion soccer team receives unanimous support and inter-Coy. rivalry has never been more keen than at present.

When I say that the unit of which I am speaking, is a "young soldier" battalion you will see how erroneous and misleading were the statements made and will not wonder at my taking exception to them.

What is more our eleven is comprised mainly of youngsters, there being no less than seven of them.

I, for one, will not believe that there are not other units equally as keen as ours. The interest taken in inter-battalion matches in the brigade, in fact, proves that enthusiasm is not lacking.

May I suggest that a great deal depends upon the sports' officer of a un it and the method which he adopts.

YOUNG SPORT.

7,000,000 GOLF BALLS.

The demand for golf balls this season has exceeded all previous records, writes Mr. R. Endersby Howard in "The Daily Mail." In the past twelve months one firm—typical of others which produce popular brands—has doubled its output for the twelve months up to August 1914.

Most of the firms are preparing at least to treble their pre-war output. Several will each have sold about 1,000,000 balls by the end of the year—a great increase on former business—but they are hopelessly behind their orders. One, for instance, has outstanding orders for 840,000 balls.

On this basis 7,000,000 is a modest estimate of the number of golf balls now used annually in Britain. Several firms are each laying plans to produce at least 2,000,000 balls per annum.

HUNTING UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

Description of a Run with Army Pack in Turkey.

The British Army occupying enemy territory on various fronts is so far following tradition as to cherish hunting fox, wolf, or jackal, as the case may be, and a correspondent has forwarded us a newspaper cutting which gives an account of a run with the Navy and Army Gymkhana Club Foxhounds in Turkey, in the Mashlak district, says "The Field."

The run was a good one, lasting about two and a quarter hours, only three of the field being up when the pack was called off. The going in places was difficult, "scrambling, slithering, and sliding down hillsides, through bush and bracken, well above your horse's knees at an angle of about 1 in 2 over ravines covered with bush and ferns, which, if not carefully negotiated, certainly meant a Blighty one if nothing else, through nullahs, up precipitous hills covered with rugged rocks, along mountain sides on a small track with a yawning chasm beneath, and once both horse and rider disappeared into a concealed pit."

WINNING HORSES.

"Gee-Gees" that have done well at Flat Racing.

Now that the flat racing season is rapidly drawing to a close, it is interesting to review the principal winning horses.

Some months ago, in giving a few horses worth following, "Jerry M," our racing contributor, mentioned Keysoe and Flying Spear as likely winners of races. The appended list showing the number of races won, with prize money, speaks for itself.

BILLIARDS.

Close Struggle Between Newman and Smith.

Only 147 points divided Newman and Smith at the close of Tuesday's play, the game having resolved itself into a great struggle in which every point is of value.

In their match of eight thousand up level Lawrence continues to have the better of matters with Breed, and leads by 905 points.

Closing Scores:—

Smith 10147; Newman (in play) 10000
Lawrence (in play) 2608; Breed 1703

EPSOM STABLE LADS.

Sequel to Strike at Epsom Police Court.

At Epsom Police Court, four of the Epsom stable lads who are out on strike, Eric Foster, Alfred Blundell, Timothy O'Sullivan, and Harry G. Stone, were summoned for assaulting Walter Nightingall on the Epsom Downs on Nov. 6.

The prosecutor said he was riding one of his father's horses on Six Mile Hill and was travelling about twenty miles per hour when he saw eighteen stable lads ride across the gallop about three yards apart brandishing sticks and whips. Attempts to hit him and his horse were made, the result being that he was nearly thrown.

Evidence having been given by the defendants to the effect that no attempts were made to hit Walter Nightingall and his horse, the Bench decided that a technical offence had been committed.

Foster, who had previously been fined £5 for assaulting a French jockey, was now fined £2. The other defendants were bound over to be of good behaviour for twelve months.

Millwall's Centre-forward.

Walter Davis, the Millwall centre-forward, is to undergo an operation for the removal of the cartilage of the right knee. Davis has not appeared in the League team this season, and when having a trial spin with the second team last month he broke down after ten minutes.

ASSOCIATION CUP.

Draw for the Fourth Qualifying Round.

READING SUBSTITUTE LEEDS.

A meeting of F.A. Divisional Representatives was held at Sheffield on Tuesday, when the draw for the Fourth Round in the Qualifying Competition for the F.A. Cup was made. This resulted as under.

Reading was selected to take the place of Leeds City among the 52 clubs exempted from the Qualifying Competition.

MIDDLESBRO'S LOSS.

J. H. Macintosh, their Popular Manager Joins Everton.

Early next month Mr. J. H. Macintosh, Middlesbro's well-known and popular manager, will depart from the Teeside club and join Everton. He takes over the secretaryship of the "Toffees."

A Durham man, he played right half for Darlington in the Northern league for seven years. He gave up playing to take over duties of secretary to his club in 1902. Darlington since then has never looked back, and when they adopted professionalism none were surprised.

July 1911 saw him appointed secretary manager of Middlesbro. He came at a critical time, but the Boro's steadied, and since his advent, have ever been going forward to prosperity. Witness their position to-day.

Among his many discoveries for Darlington may be mentioned David Taylor, the famous Hearts player, the late R. G. Brebner, a custodian whose fame lives after him, and Richard Jackson, for many years with Sunderland.

He was responsible for the Boro securing Jimmy Windridge, Chelsea's star performer, Andrew Wilson, then but 18 years old, and Stewart Davidson, the renowned Aberdonian.

Joining up in '14, Mr. Macintosh rose to commissioned rank and received a "mention."

What is Middlesbro's loss is Everton's gain; this well-known official will be greatly missed on Teeside, where he was a popular figure.

Sid Scott, deputising for Hanney in Manchester City's half-back line, was "discovered" when playing for Northwich Victoria. He is a player with a future.

THE OPERA HOUSE.

Once more had the performance of the "Elopment from Seragilo" to be deferred on Tuesday evening and instead, Lortzing's charming comic opera "Tsar and Zimmermann" was given. This work of Lortzing is not so well-known in England although it may be considered as one of his best operas. Mozart's influence on Lortzing's music shows here and there especially with some of the accompaniments, as for instance, in the bravour aria of the Burgermaster van Bett which Hubert Mertens executed to perfection.

Tillman Lizewsky's "Tsar Peter" was well sung and played, but the romance in the second act was, with regard to purity of intonation, not all that could be desired. The impression of this was so strong, that we at times expected a misunderstanding between singer and orchestra. Johanna Klempner was a charming Marie and the three ambassadors, Messrs. Batz, Lindlar and Lenz sang and acted their small parts satisfactorily. The orchestra under Weissleder's baton was excellent as usual. C.L.

Opera Changes.

In view of the frequency with which eleventh hour changes have occurred in the Cologne Opera House programmes, the suggestion has been made that arrangements should be made for the booking office to refund ticket money or issue in exchange for booked seats, tickets of admission for a future performance.

At The Palace.

"The Eccentrics" are continuing their successful stay at the Cologne Palace this week where, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Hurley, a delightful two-hours' entertainment is staged each evening. I hear that the party is to go on tour in Rhineland next week when they are bound to be received with great cordiality.

BILLY WELLS AND KID DOYLE.

The outstanding event at The Ring, Blackfriars, next Monday afternoon will be a contest between Bermondsey Billy Wells and Kid Doyle, the Newcastle welter-weight, who are to meet over 20 3-min rounds for £50 a side. It should be an interesting event, and the doings of the young Londoner will be watched keenly, for success over the hardy Doyle will mean another step for Wells towards welter-weight championship recognition. Another attractive match on the same afternoon will be that between Fred Archer, of St. George's, and Dixie Corderry, of Bermondsey, who are to meet in a special 15-round contest.

Chelsea's Casualties.

Chelsea were in a quandary when they had to field a team to meet Queen's Park Rangers in the semi-final of the London Cup. The list of players who were reported unfit for duty included McMillan, Molyneux, Marshall, Brittan, Browning, Bird, Ford, Walker, and Halse.

NINE SHARE NO. 7 PRIZE

English Competitor in the Winning List.

As stated yesterday there was a general failure of competitors in our No. 7 contest. Not one succeeded in forecasting more than eight correct results, out of the ten required.

The prize money amounted to 1782 marks and to this we have decided to add 18 marks, thus making a total 1800 marks.

No less than nine competitors gave eight correct results, and they divide the prize. Each will receive a cheque for 200 marks. Their names and addresses are:—

Capt. J. Long, Rhine Army Reception Camp; C.S.M. L.A. Ward, 18th. K.R.R.C. Ohligs; Cpl. C.H. Williams, R.A.M.C. 25th. Gen. Hos. Wiesdorf; L/Cpl. G. Thorpe, Provost School M.F. Police G.H.Q.; Spr. R. List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.
2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.
3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for any reason, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.
4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.
5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into. Neither will interviews be granted.
6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.
7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, mislaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.
8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.
9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

A Corporals' Club.
In yesterday's issue was published a letter from a Corporal asking for a N.C.O's Club not restricted to W.O's and Sergeants. A rumour reaches me that the N.A.C.B. are working hard on this matter.

The Wrong Department.
Since certain paragraphs about stockings seen in Cologne have appeared in this column I have been inundated with other bizarre experiences from eye-witnesses. I am afraid I ought not to have encroached on Agnes' sphere. "Vanity Fair" is of course our hosiery and frillies department.

Eyes and no Eyes?
An officer who has resided within a stone's throw of the N.A.C.B. club for three days, to my knowledge, was heard yesterday to ask where it is.

Winter's Mantle.
I could not help being struck by the beauty of the scene afforded by the open space known as Gereonsdriesch last evening. The trees carried the snow of the early morning fall, while a brilliant background was afforded by the lights of the Church of St. Gereon.

Crossings to Order.
A Britisher returning to Blighty this week laughingly enquired of a friend if it would be possible to book a calm crossing over the Channel.

His Little Zoo.
A sergeant major who is a keen naturalist has been keeping some snakes and lizards in his billet. Since one of the snakes got loose, wandered into the adjoining kitchen and killed the cat, his popularity with the household has abated.

Universal Providers.
The large stores in the Obermargpforten at which the N.A.C.B. are to sell all kinds of goods from souvenirs to sausages are nearly completed and I hear they will open for business during the next few days.

Economics.
Most of us are interested in Economics, nowadays. We have to be, under present conditions. Those who want to be well informed in the subject should read the series of articles now starting.

Hospital for Families.
A Military Families' Hospital has been established at 28 Stadtwaldgürtel, Lindenthal, Cologne, for the admission and treatment of wives and children of all ranks of the British Forces on the Rhine requiring hospital treatment.

Not for Him.
Passing the Monopol yesterday morning, I heard the bugler sound the General Salute. My friend evidently ignorant as to the nature of the call remarked "I wonder why that always sounds at nine, just as I reach here."

The Latest Poser.
The small son of a sergeant attending the Rhineland children's school was doing his home lessons. To test his father's arithmetic he enquired "Dad, what is 20 and 20." "40" replied Dad "and 40 and 40?" "80" says Dad." "You can't tell me this one, Dad." "I'll try, my boy, what is it?" "What is umpteen and umpteen" Dad is still trying.

With our Help.
You've noticed, of course that practically every genuine grievance is promptly remedied when it is ventilated in the "Post." Moral: Always write to the Editor.

Had a Shock.
"The other evening I was invited to dinner by the people at my billet," said a friend to me. "I was introduced to a fraulein who was of flapper age and looks. But when I started to talk to her, I found her ready to discuss metaphysics and abstruse philosophic problems."

Easier to Spot.
I came across a young officer yesterday industriously working with a brush all round the keyhole of the front door of his billet. He explained that he was applying luminous paint.

The Rush for Fuel.
A cart heavily laden with briquettes pulled up in Friesenstrasse where there was a queue of over seventy women and children to each of whom was doled out four or five "stuck" which they took away in small sacks.

An Amusements Misprint.
"By special request Mr. so and so presents." That was how the "copy" ran, but the German compositor set it up thus: "By special regret."

Memories.
It's worth while to have a look at the windows of some picture postcard dealers. In one the other day, I noticed cards showing Cologne streets decorated and the word "Welcome" profusely scattered about. They were produced nearly twelve months ago, when the retiring German troops, were passing through the city.

Getting Near it.
How long will it be, I wonder, before the mark is worth no more than the paper on which it is printed?

Convenient "Fits."
Are the Germans as a race susceptible to epileptic fits? Anyone who attends the summary Court might think they were, for when it is necessary to explain away the presence of people at 'verboten' hours, the most common excuse is that someone had a fit, and the others had to remain to assist. But the explanation does not always go down with presiding officers.

That Alarm.
The warning bell for the Deutsches Theatre which was suggested in our paper nearly a fortnight ago is now in progress with marked success.

K.C."
The Americans of course have their Y.M.C.A. and Salvation Army, but at Coblenz you will notice one institution, exclusive to the Doughboys, namely the K of C, or "Casey" as it is called. The K of C are the Knights of Columbus, a very influential American Catholic Society, but "Casey's" doors at Coblenz are open to all, irrespective of creed.

A Real Prophet.
One of the winning competitors in our football contest No. 7, the result of which appears on page 3 bears the name of Prophet. Quite appropriate.

A Narrow Escape.
One of the mounted police on duty at the arrival of the French C-in-C had a narrow escape from injury yesterday when a quantity of snow falling behind his horse caused the animal to rear. How he kept his seat was a marvel to the onlookers.

For British Tastes.
Billed in a Cologne shop window:—"Tipperary sauce," "Cheshire Cheese" and "Diverse Sandwiches."

Sorry Now.
I hear of two chums who were arguing about football, for a bet filling up one of our coupons apiece and handing them together with the stakes to another member of their mess. On checking the results it was found that one had succeeded in forecasting nine out of the ten results required. Now the winner of the bet is kicking himself because he did not enter for our football prize.

Take Note.
A sapper in the R.E.s going on demobilization and having a last try for our football prize has been successful in sharing the award. This will be forwarded to his home address.

AROUND AND ABOUT.

NATIONAL ANTHEMS.

Should the competition organised by the Swiss Government for a new National Anthem be justified by results, it will be more successful than similar competitions in other countries. During the war the Prussian Government offered a tempting prize for a national song to displace "Heil dir im Siegerkranz" because of its similarity to "God save the King," but though over 3,000 attempts were received the Committee of Selection rejected the whole lot. Canada and Australia have both tried at times to provide themselves with official national songs, but without success, while the majority of the people of the United states prefer "Dixie" to either "Yankee Doodle" or "The Star-Spangled Banner."

A RESTAURANT STORY.

A good story is being told of a man who dearly loved honey. He never had tea at his favourite café without having honey, and, of course, the waitresses soon got to know of his taste, and put honey on the table as a matter of course.

One day he took his wife with him into the café for tea, and by chance there happened to be a new waitress. When tea was brought the man saw at a glance what was missing, and he exclaimed in surprise, "Er—er—but where's my honey?" "Oh," the girl replied, "you mean that pretty dark-haired girl? She left here last week."

REGIMENT OF MANY TITLES.

The 18th Hussars, who have been inspected by the Queen prior to their departure for India, must surely hold the record among our 31 regular cavalry regiments for the most frequent change of title. Before 1910 they were known as Princess Mary's Own, but this description became, of course, incorrect when the King and Queen succeeded to the throne, and their title was altered to Queen Mary's Own. The question of conferring the honour of "Royal" on the corps was raised before the war, and they were sometimes incorrectly described as such, but it was only at the end of July that the King approved of the last alteration in their designation, which is now the 18th (Queen Mary's Own) Royal Hussars.

THE NEW MILITARY PEERS.

While two of the Army Commanders have adopted titles that recall their war [illegible] on the Western front—Lord Messines and Lord Byng of [illegible]ent with terri[illegible]ve no clue to their services, Lord Horne of Stirkoke being now joined by Lord Rawlinson of Trent. The last-named, who, with Lord Beatty and Lord Byng, will be introduced in the House of Lords on Wednesday, will be acclaimed by the Stuart adherents for his choice. Trent, a village in Dorsetshire, is famous among the Jacobites as one of the reputed shelters of Charles II. during his romantic adventures, including the troopers of Cromwell after the Battle of Worcester. Making his way to Shoreham for the crossing to France after his escape at Boscobel, Charles is said to have lain hidden for a fortnight in Trent House.

WAR SECRETS.

London has now an opportunity to see many of the wonders connected with the Postal Censorship carried out during the war. Most of the exhibits were captured on the high seas, and include every conceivable kind of article, disguised in the most ingenious fashion. Even a Bible was utilised by the enemy to help them in their smuggling. A large part of the interior was cut out, and anyone examining the Bible casually would have believed it complete. But nesting in the hole which had been so skilfully cut were propaganda messages for neutral countries.

WAR CHRISTMASES.

Write your Experiences.

MORE PRIZES FOR READERS.

In addition to the prizes we are offering for short Christmas stories, we invite our readers to send us their personal experiences of the Christmases they have spent since the beginning of the war.

We require one for each of the years 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917 and will give 50 marks for the best short description of a Christmas spent in the Army in each of those years. There will therefore be four prizes — one for each year of the war.

The length of these descriptive articles must not exceed 500 words each.

Typewritten copy is preferred but not essential.

The latest date for receiving them will be November 20th and they must be addressed "Christmas" Cologne Post. A.P.O./S. 40. Rhine Army.

ECONOMIC NOTES ON FINANCE AND TRADE.

INTRODUCTORY.

In commencing a subject such as this the reader should take due note that I am only going to attempt an outline, or if you like, to present a skeleton on which each individual can put his own flesh according to his own fancy. The theory of Industry is a branch of the study of Economics. If you want to know all about Economics I can tell you, to start with, that you will not learn it from these articles. Space, as the Editor will tell you, is valuable, so that all I can do is to outline the subject, give you headings to work from, and advise you how and where to find more and fuller information. The Army College teaches Economics but, unfortunately, we can't all go there and to those who are interested these articles will be of use, I hope.

* * *

First of all the question arises What is Economics? Economics is a study of man in certain particulars. In studying wealth we aim at arriving at a conclusion as to how it originates, how it exists and how it ceases to be. Our study of man is confined to what an average man — 'the man in the street' — would do in given circumstances. The normal man as we know him to-day has become what he is by the force of motives that have taken ages to evolve.

The greatest motive force in this moulding has undoubtedly been that of business and we have evolved two broad distinctions — 'the rich' and 'the poor' —. We hear it said quite commonly, 'Yes, but there is no need for the poor to remain poor! The reason they remain poor is that they have not sufficient brain power to avail themselves fully of the education that is open to rich and poor alike, to fit themselves to become rich, and the reason they have not got the brains, is that generations before them have been poverty-stricken, doomed from birth to uninspiring work to keep body and soul — such as it is — together, overcrowded in unhealthy areas, with insufficient and bad food and general conditions of physical, mental and moral illhealth. Business men are notoriously out for every penny they can get and the modern business man is beginning to ask himself seriously whether he wouldn't get a better and more remunerative return from his workers if these workers had better conditions. The time will come when poverty will be an out-of-date word, when areas like Hoxton in London and the back of Scotland Road in Liverpool will only exist in the memories of great grandfathers.

* * *

It will be my endeavour in further discussions to show how this great national problem of the so-called 'lower classes' has arisen. We shall have to know something of the theories regarding wealth and the three great agents of Industrial Training Efficiency, the necessity of organisation and questions of value and utility will also be dealt with in their return. The wide subject of Finance and Exchanges will greatly interest us. The question of profits and the effects they have on Capital will help us to see how business expansion affects progress in the Standard of Life. Trades Unions have their place in this scheme and a mixture of all these varied subsidiary subjects will enable to us form our own opinions on current and possible future affairs, and it is to be hoped a taste to probe the subject more deeply in our own time.

THE ORIGIN OF THE DEPTH CHARGE.

Admiral Sims of the American Navy has some remarkable revelations to make in his story of the defeat of Germany's submarines. Among other things he tells, in "Pearson's Magazine," how the deadly depth-charge was invented.

The story of the invention of the depth-charge makes clear the part wich it was intended to play in anti-submarine warfare. "Admiral Jellicoe told me the story," says Admiral Sims, "when I asked him who really invented this annihilating missile."

"'No man in particular,' he said. 'It came into existence almost spontaneously in response to a pressing need. Gunfire can destroy submarines when they are on the surface, but you know it can accomplish nothing against them when submerged. This fact made it extremely difficult to sink them in the early days of the war. One day, when the Grand Fleet was cruising in the North Sea, a submarine fired a torpedo at one of the cruisers. The cruiser saw the periscope and the wake of the torpedo, and had little difficulty in so manoeuvring as to avoid being struck. She then went full speed to the spot from which the submarine had fired its torpedo, in the hope of ramming it.

"'But, by the time she arrived, the submarine had submerged so deeply that the cruiser passed over her without doing her any harm. Yet the officers and crew could see the submerged hull; there the enemy lay in full view of her pursuers, yet perfectly safe! The officer reported this incident to me in the presence of Admiral Madden, second in command.

"'Wouldn't it have been fine,' said Madden, 'if they had had on board a mine so designed that, when dropped overboard, it would have exploded when it reached the depth at which the submarine was lying!'

"'That remark,' continued Admiral Jellicoe, 'gave us the germinal idea of the depth-charge. I asked the Admiralty to get to work and produce a mine that would act in the way that Admiral Madden had suggested. It proved to be very simple to construct—an ordinary steel cylinder, filled with T.N.T.; this was fitted with a simple firing appliance which was set off by the pressure of the water, and could be so adjusted that it would explode the charge at any depth desired. This apparatus was so simple and so necessary that we at once began to manufacture it.' The depth-charge looked like the innocent domestic ash-can, and that was the name by which it became popularly known. Each destroyer eventually carried twenty or thirty at the stern; a mere pull on a lever would make one drop into the water."

GENERAL SEELY RESIGNS.

HEAD OF AIR MINISTRY ON THE CONTROL OF ROYAL AIR FORCE

CABINET MINISTERS WIN LIBEL ACTION.

AIR MINISTRY.

GENERAL SEELY RESIGNS ON PRINCIPLE.

Speaking from the Front Opposition Bench in the House of Commons on Wednesday, General Seely explained his resignation from the post of Under Secretary of State for the Air.

He pointed out that his appointment involved his presiding over the Air Council, which was a curious arrangement in view of the fact that Mr. Winston Churchill was really Air Minister. He accepted the office, however, and endeavoured to work under the system of dual control but it soon became apparent that this arrangement would not work, not for any personal reasons, but because by fact and statute the only man who could preside effectively over any Council was a Secretary of State, inasmuch as the Secretary of State could not divest himself of responsibility.

As soon as this became apparent he informed Mr. Bonar Law that the arrangement was bound to be inefficient and wasteful and that he would ask for a change. Mr. Bonar Law asked him to wait until after peace was made and when Mr. Lloyd George returned to England in July, General Seely put the case before him and stated in very precise terms that the existing arrangement was not in the interest of the State and was inimical to the interest of the Air Service. The matter was further delayed by the Premier's absence and by the railway strike but it came up for final decision twelve days ago. The Premier, treated him with the utmost courtesy and consideration and begged him to reconsider his decision but finally told General Seely that he had decided to adhere to the present plan after due consideration and did not propose to vary it. The only possible course, General Seely declared, was for him to resign and be no longer responsible for an arrangement which he was convinced was wasteful and inefficient.

He stated emphatically that there were no personal questions involved between himself and Mr. Churchill, to whom he paid a warm tribute. The whole thing was impossible, he continued, the War Office and Air Ministry being each "whole time" jobs. Still less was there any difficulty in the Air Ministry, for never had a man been so faithfully served as he had been by all members of the Air Council. He maintained that Mr. Lloyd George's decision meant that the Air Ministry was to receive its guidance from a man who could only give a fraction of his time to it. This would involve inefficiency, delay, waste of energy and money. It also meant that the Admiralty was left out and when it wanted Air assistance, would have to deal with the Secretary for War. The arrangement also relegates the Air Ministry to the position of a subordinate office and an annexe of the War Office, which arrangement would be inimical to the Air Council as it meant waste of our commercial possibilities and neglect of the new power which the Air had given us. He therefore felt bound to resign and asked the House to judge of the situation.

Replying to a question Mr. Bonar Law said he desired on behalf of the Government to say how much they regretted General Seely's resignation. It was a question of opinion. General Seely took one view and the Government another. The Government would, however, be guided by the wishes of the House in regard to having a discussion on the whole subject.

TURKISH TREATY DELAY.

WAITING FOR AMERICA.

The reason for the delay in concluding the Treat of Peace with Turkey, said Mr. Bonar Law in the House of Commons on Wednesday, is that unfortunately it had not been found possible to proceed with it until the United States had signified whether or no she will share the responsibility for protecting the peoples inhabiting the former Turkish Empire and for assisting them until they can stand alone.

Replying to another question Mr. Bonar Law said that copies of the second report of the Dardanelles Commission would be available by the middle of next week and that the report would be published without alteration.

ALLENBY REACHES CAIRO.

Lord Allenby, who arrived at Cairo on Tuesday evening, was received with full military honours. A large crowd of notabilities was at the station to meet him. Prior to proceeding to Cairo Lord Allenby saw the Sultan at Alexandria.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer states that a stock of five-shilling notes is being prepared as a precautionary measure, but he hoped it would not be necessary to ask the House of Commons to authorise the issue of the same.

POLITICAL LIBEL.

DAMAGES AND COSTS FOR STATE MINISTERS.

The political libel action brought by Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Sir Eric Geddes, Sir Auckland Geddes and Mr. Walter Long against the "Daily News" was settled yesterday by the defendants agreeing to pay each of plaintiffs 250 guineas and costs. The assertions complained of all related to alleged deals in Russian shares during the war or since the armistice.

One of the alleged libels was that shares were brought by Mr. Austen Chamberlain at the time when he was Chancellor of the Exchequer. All the Ministers concerned went into the box and made public denial of the statements complained of.

The Lord Chief Justice said he was very glad the parties had by agreement arrived at the course they had taken before him. It was perfectly plain that a reflection of that character on men holding such high and distinguished positions as the four plaintiffs was a matter of public concern.

CORNER HOUSE FRACAS.

DEFENDANTS LETTER TO A WOMAN.

At Bow-street Police Court, William Earl, 32, porter, an American citizen, of no fixed abode, was charged, on remand, with committing wilful damage at the Corner House Restaurant, Coventry-street, W. There was a further charge against him of threatening to murder Miss Edith Chilman. The superintendent at the Corner House gave evidence of the prisoner smashing a table with a hatchet.

In support of the second charge Miss, Chilman stated that she first met the prisoner at the Corner House about three years ago, when she was a waitress there and he was employed in the kitchen. She had lived with him for about four months. The threat to murder her was contained in a letter dated October 23.

The defendant told the magistrate that some time ago he saw the girl in company of several black men. He then told her to clear out of the neighbourhood, or he would kill her, his reason being that he wanted to get her away from these men. He wrote the letter with the same object, but he did not mean to harm the girl.

The Magistrate committed the prisoner for trial on both charges.

HINDENBURG IN BERLIN.

There is actually a commission sitting at Berlin and discussing the question of responsibilities in the war. Tirpitz, Bethmann-Hollweg, Helfferich and other prominent personalities have already been heard and examined. Now it is Hindenburg's turn. His reception on his arrival at Berlin was characteristic of the actual spirit of some of the Germans. He arrived on Wednesday last about 9 a.m. General Ludendorff (in civilian clothes and a silk hat) Helfferich and numerous officers were present at the station. Hindenburg (also in mufti) greeted Ludendorff by kissing him on both cheeks.

Patriotic demonstrations took place when he appeared in the street. Shouts of "Down with the committee of inquest" were heard. A company of the Reichswehr brigade performed the goose step.

When the General had left in his motor car some disturbances took place on account of protests by anti-militarists.

LORD BRASSEY DEAD.

Lord Brassey died on Wednesday evening as the result of being knocked down by a taxicab last week. Earlier in the day he underwent an operation to the hand.

The late Peer was greatly loved by those who knew him as a personal friend but did not always agree with those in authority. He was an absolutely fearless upholder of his opinions and possibly this accounted for his lack of apparent success on the troubled seas of politics.

In the South African war he commanded Yeomanry and in September 1914 raised the 2nd West Kent Yeomanry. He was an ardent advocate of devolution for Ireland and a earnest student of Imperial problems. The late earl married, in 1889, Lady Idina Nevill, daughter of the Marquis of Abergavenny and leaves no children and no heir.

ROADSIDE MURDER CHARGE.

At Tonbridge on Tuesday, Ernest Ebenezer Cosman was committed for trial at Kent Assizes on a charge of murdering Beatrice Annie Daws, on the evening of of October 26. The girl's body was found by the roadside at a lonely spot near Edenbridge.

ALIEN ORIGIN.

PHILANTHROPIST'S MONEY REFUSED.

The Richmond (Surrey) Town Council recently accepted five thousand pounds from an anonymous donor for the extension of the local hospital as part of the Borough's war memorial. On it becoming known, however, that the donor was Sir Max Waechter, who is of German origin and a friend of the ex-Kaiser, the Council resolved not to accept the offer as part of the war memorial scheme but expressed the hope that the hospital would not lose the money. This means that the Richmond Town Council wants to keep the money but not as a contribution to the War Memorial.

Here is Sir Max Waechter's record. He was born at Stettin, Germany in 1837 and is therefore 82 years old. He has been twice married to Englishwomen. He came to England in 1859 and was naturalised in 1865. In 1902 he was appointed High Sheriff of Surrey.

Among his benefactions are Petersham Ait and the freehold of Petersham Lodge and grounds to the town of Richmond as free gifts, for the preservation of the view from Richmond Hill. He founded the Victorian Convalescent Home for Surrey Women, also the Princess Mary Memorial Home of Rest, the King Edward VII. Memorial Home for Surrey Children, all at Bognor; and the Queen Mary's Holiday Home for Governesses at Petersham. He also founded the European Unity League.

BERMONDT REINFORCED.

GERMANS DISARM A GARRISON.

According to the latest telegrams received by the Lithuanian delegation in London from the Lithuanian Government, Russo-German reactionaries are still disregarding the demands of the Supreme Council and fresh troops continue to invade Lithuania with the object of assisting Colonel Bermondt. On the 31st October 400 German soldiers arrived at Tauroggen from Germany and disarmed the local militia and garrison. Their commandant then made them take an oath to fight against the new States of Latvia, Lithuania and Poland for the good of Russia. They kissed the Russian colours and sang the Russian National Anthem and "Deutschland über alles". The Lithuanian Government protested to the German High Commissioner at Kovno.

As a result of efforts made by Allied representatives to bring about a peaceable settlement in Lithuanian and Polish relations, negotiations are now proceeding between Lithuanians and Poles with the especial purpose of restoring railway and telegraphic communication between Vilna and Kovno and arranging an exchange.

LOOTERS SENTENCED.

Sentences varying from one to twelve months were passed at Liverpool Assizes yesterday, when eleven women and nine men were convicted of looting on the occasion] of the police strike. Evidence showed that the accused formed part of a mob which attacked a bottling store and stole twelve thousand dozen bottles of beer and stout.

ADMINISTRATOR OF DANTZIG.

In accordance with a decision of the Supreme Council, Sir Reginald Towers, who was until recently British Minister to the Argentine, has been appointed Administrator of Dantzig, pending the appointment by the League of Nations of a High Commissioner.

AUSTRALIAN FLIGHT.

A Vickers-Vimy twin engine machine with Captain Ross Smith as pilot, Lieutenant Smith as navigator and two sergeants as mechanics, left Hounslow on Wednesday morning on the first stage of their attempt to fly to Australia. It was hoped to reach Rome in one nonstop flight.

The French Aviator, Poulet, has reached Karachi.

TRIUMPHS AND TRIALS.

Marshal Foch has sent cordial greetings to the Indianopolis Convention of the American Legion of Veterans of the European war. Recalling the complete surrender of November last year, he declared that the Allies must remain as united in the days of triumph as in days of trial.

OUR CASUALTIES IN RUSSIA.

Our total casualties in Russia were: Killed or died of wounds, 13 officers, 168 other ranks. Wounded: 50 officers, 455 other ranks. Missing, including prisoners: 19 officers, 171 other ranks. In the Caucasus one other rank killed and one missing.

EXIT ROUMANIANS.

An official telegram from Budapesth received in Paris states that the Roumanians have begun to evacuate the city.

The King and Queen accompanied the French President and Madame Poincaré to Euston yesterday to see them off to Renfrew.

ANARCHISTS IN U.S.

HAIL OF BULLETS ON ARMISTICE PROCESSION.

Persons alleged to be members of the Industrial Workers of the World established themselves in the Workers' Hall at Washington on Armistice day, and fired on a demonstration at it was passing the hall, killing four ex-soldiers, mortally wounding two others, and less seriously injuring several more. One man who is alleged to have been firing on the marchers is reported to have been hanged from the river bridge. At least eight suspects have been arrested and are now well guarded in gaol.

The parade, for which the entire populace had gathered, had just swung into the main street when a hail of bullets from an unseen enemy raked the ranks of the marchers, only falling men indicated what was taking place as the blare of a band drowned the cracking of the rifles. Puffs of smoke from the roof of the building, however, showed whence the bullets had come, and the nearness of the Industrial Workers' Hall led to a quick decision. Soldiers quickly broke ranks, and rushed to the roof, but the snipers had vanished. Infuriated soldiers then scoured the town while others were sent to the suburbs, and and rounded up suspects. Meanwhile wives, daughters and sweethearts were busy administering first aid. Excitement is fever high and soldiers are guarding the gaol where the suspects are confined.

THE ARMY IN FRANCE.

REPLY TO CRITICS OF G.O.C.

The Secretary of State for War, by command of the Army Council, has addressed a letter to Lieutenant. General Asser, G.O.C. troops in France and Flanders, with reference to criticisms upon his admistration which have recently appeared in the Press.

The letter expressed on behalf of the Secretary of State and the Army Council their full confidence in the troops, in the women's organisations and in the other personnel under General Asser's command, and proceeds: "The Army Council are fully satisfied that your administration and the conduct and discipline of the troops and women's units under your command have worthily upheld, often in trying circumstances, the best traditions of the British Army."

The cost of maintenance of the British Forces in France and Flanders for the seven months ended 31st October was not four million pounds as stated in yesterday's issue, but forty-four millions.

TRAPPED IN A TUNNEL.

INTERNED OFFICERS ATTEMPT TO ESCAPE.

Twenty German Naval officers who have been interned at Lofthouse Park Camp, near Leeds, since the scuttling of the German fleet at Scapa Flow, made a determined effort to escape by tunnelling. They dug under the floor of the hut and then traversed for a considerable distance but apparently made a miscalculation as they broke surface only a very little way beyond the barbed wire surrounding the camp. A sentry was amazed to see the earth open at his feet. He straightway gave the alarm and the prisoners were discovered almost at the moment of success.

DOCKYARD WORKERS' CHOICE

Following upon the outcry against extensive dismissals from the national dockyards, the Admiralty has decided to offer dockyard workmen a choice of two schemes. Either the work planned for the next year or two shall be anticipated or the dockyards shall be closed one working day each week. Acceptance of either scheme will result in the immediate stoppage of discharges.

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAY.

The Early Closing Association of Management, has agreed to appeal to the wholesale drapers and retail shopkeepers in the dry goods traders (apart from food shops) throughout the country to close from Christmas Eve, December 24. to the following Monday morning, December 29. The board believe that such a national holiday will be largely observed and keenly appreciated by employees whose labours are greatly increased during the Christmas season.

WINTER IN BRITAIN.

Twenty-one degrees of frost were registered in the Peak district of Derbyshire yesterday. Dover had a severe frost followed by snow. An Edinburgh telegram says that snow has been falling for twenty hours and still continues. Such severe snowfalls in November have never been known before in the Highlands. London is as yet free from snow, and is enjoying a clear sky with cold but brisk air.

TALKING IT OVER.

The Miners' representatives at Indianopolis have accepted the Secretary of Labour's invitation to confer with the employers on the wage agreement.

CHEAP SUITS.

MIDDLEMEN TO TAKE FIRST PROFITS.

The Disposal Board is now offering for sale a quarter of a million men's suits in eighteen different sizes. They comprise blue serges and tweeds in pleasing ranges of colour and all are new. They are of the same quality as the old standard suits and have been passed by Government inspectors.

At sixty-five shillings they would command an instant sale among the general public in view of the present high prices, but there is no chance of the public being able to buy them direct as they are to be sold by tender in lots of not less than twenty-five. Each lot contains a fixed number of assorted sizes and it is therefore useless even for twenty-five private individuals to club together to buy one lot as they could never all get fitted.

The suits were provided originally for demobilized soldiers but so many accepted the alternative of 52s 6d in cash that this huge stock was left on hand. Sample suits are on view at forty-five centres throughout the country and tenders may be made for any number of lots or for the whole stock. Tenders are also invited for 76,000 overcoats, pricipally grey cheviots, 110,000 tweed caps and 92,000 soft collars.

PRINCE IN WASHINGTON.

HAPPY SPEECH AT PRESS CLUB.

Speaking at the National Press Club, Washington, on Wednesday night the Prince of Wales said. "It would cause me very great regret if the President's illness had unhappily prevented me from fulfilling my keen desire to visit the United States this year and I therefore rejoice at his improvement."

The Prince then recalled his pleasure at visiting America's gallant forces in Europe last winter and expressed his gladness at now making the aquaintance of "the great people from whom those forces came. The spirit of your soldiers and sailers" he said "appealed to me very strongly. Your institutions, ways of life and aims are as democratic as our own and the atmosphere in which I find myself is the same invigorating atmosphere which I have always noticed in my American friends. I assure you I deeply appreciate your Government's hospuality in inviting me to pay this visit."

The Prince called at the White House during the afternoon and chatted with Mrs. and Miss Wilson. It is expected that he will see the President when he takes tea at the White House on Thursday. President Wilson was permitted to sit up for an hour for the first time since his return from his Western trip.

GOVERNMENT JOBS.

WAITING LIST OF EX-SOLDIERS.

The Ministry of Labour denies the statement which has appeared in print that the Ministry cannot find a sufficient number of disabled ex-service men for employment in Government departments. It says the Government has decided to substitute 12,000 disabled ex-service men, or failing disabled men, demobilised men, having suitable qualifications, for a similar number of men and women in Government departments.

Already 2,500 disabled ex-service men have been so substituted. The remaining 9,500 are being absorbed as rapidly as can be arranged. It is not a fact that difficulty has been expressed in finding the necessary number of men. The Ministry of Labour has a considerable waiting list.

Candidates for permanent employment are dealt with entirely by the Civil Service Commissioners in the usual way and not by the Ministry of Labour.

SANKEY REPORT DEBATE.

The Special Trades Union Congress which is to consider whether action shall be taken to compel the Government to carry out the majority recommendations of the Sankey Commission regarding the Nationalisation of Mines has been summoned for the 9th and 10th December.

HAIG CHEERED BY FELLOW PEERS.

Field Marshal Earl Haig of Bermayde yesterday took his seat in the House of Lords for the first time. He was introduced by the Earl of Scarborough and Earl Derby. There was a large attendance of peers who cheered the new Earl. Such a compliment is a very rare occurrence in the House of Lords.

CONCESSIONS TO ITALY.

In a letter to his electors, Signor Rossi, the Italian Minister for the Colonies, says that the concessions granted by Great Britain to Italy are most important, as Jubaland and Port Kismayo will notably increase the value of Italian Somaliland.

YOU NEVER CAN TELL.

The Socialist Party in Australia has invited Mr. George Bernard Shaw to visit Australia on his own terms.

1914-15 STAR.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS GET THE AWARD.

In the House of Commons on Wednesday Major the Earl of Winterton asked whether any steps had been taken to ascertain the views of combatant officers and men who fought on any front, concerning the decision of the War Office to grant the 1914—15 medal to Y.M.C.A. workers and whether some of the recipients of these medals were afterwards found to be conscientious objectors.

Mr. Winston Churchill, in reply, said that the decision to grant the 1914 Star and the 1914—15 Star to certain personnel of the Y.M.C.A. was taken by the Army Council after full consideration.

With regard to the second part of the question he said the Star was awarded in respect of services rendered during a prescribed period.

The justice of this decision was challenged by a number of members, but Mr. Austen Chamberlain, replying to these, said he did not think the general rule should be altered because of a number of cases which could not exceed a few score.

SECRET DUMP.

GERMAN AMMUNITION AT COBLENZ.

A large quantity of German ammunition has been discovered in a secret subterranean cell below Ordnance Depot No. 301, about four kilometres from Coblenz on the road to Andernach says our bright young junior, the "Ameroc News." Some soldiers who were working in the basement of the building there noticed that the plaster in one place appeared newer than the remainder. They tore down a part of the wall only to discover that it was the entrance to a secret underground passage, leading below the roadway. At the end ofthe passage was a cell in waich was stored a veritable arsenal of high explosive ammunition.

This dump is only one of a large number of similar places in and around Coblenz. Secret passage ways lead from the Q. M. Barracks at Coblenz-Lutzel, which was formerly a barracks for German soldiers, to all important military points in Coblenz. One passage leads to Fort Kaiserin Feste Franz, overlooking Coblenz-Lutzel, another goes clear under the Rhine to Fort Ehrenbreitstein, while still another leads to the Bahnhof.

GERMAN ELECTIONS DECLARED NULL.

The Supreme Council has decided to notify the German Government that municipal elections which have been held in the plebiscite area of Upper Silesia are null and void, as they conflict with the freedom of the impending plebiscite. The Council has decided to refuse the German request for a plebiscite at Eupen and Malmedy. It has also authorised the return of Mackensen (now interned at Salonika) to Germany, in view of his age and the state of his health.

RESCUE FORESTALLED.

A remarkable story was told to the magistrate at Bath Police Court on Tuesday when Major Coall, 31st Brigade, R.F.A., was fined forty shillings for being drunk and disorderly. Evidence was given that after the defendant's arrest the inspector at the police station received information that a party of about thirty-four soldiers were planning to storm the station and rescue him. In order to prevent trouble the prisoner was thereupon released.

M.P.'S SENT TO PRISON.

The nine men arrested on Tuesday at the office of the "Dail Eireann," Dublin, including three members of Parliament, Messrs. O'Mahony, Hayes and Lawless, were charged yesterday with participating in the proceedings of a suppressed association. They were sentenced to two month's imprisonment and there after to find bail in twenty pounds each or undergo an additional month in prison.

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.

The opening was weak, owing to apprehensions of dearer money, arising from the high money rates, which rose to twenty-five per cent in New York. However there was an absence of general liquidations and the market later exhibited resistance and closed with a partial recovery. The disposition was to await events before entering into fresh commitments. General opinion is against the probability of an immediate rise in the Bank rate but is in favour of an increase within a month. Banks now charge from 6½ per cent. to 7 per cent, for loans on Stock Exchange securities.

The Nigerian Government loan of six million sterling at 6 per cent. at par and Armstrong Whitworth's issue of three million sterling shares are being underwritten. The Board of Trade regulations relating to new capital issues have been practically abrogated. Edison Swan issue of 360,000 shares have been oversubscribed several times. Owing to the fall in the American rate of exchange the price of gold is now about one hundred shillings per ounce.

Mrs. Lloyd George has arranged to speak in support of Lady Astor at Plymouth.

THE EX-OFFICER.

Some startling figures were disclosed at a general meeting of the Imperial ex-Service Association, held recently.

Capt. Baird, in advocating the establishment of an Employment Bureau, stated that there were at that moment 33,000 officers, 9,600 widows, 9,100 children of officers and 5,600 other dependents on the books of the Ministry of Pensions, and he was quite convinced that thousands of them were not obtaining their full awards.

He further said that there were 19,000 officers and men of similar education requiring employment, whereas the actual vacancies at the disposal of the Appointments Department were only about 4,000.

The phenomenal pressure upon the staff of the Pensions Department may in some measure be responsible for the state of affairs alleged, but there can be no doubt that the onus to a large extent is upon the officers themselves.

There is a type of officer with whom we are all acquainted, who is of the happy-go-lucky "devil-may-care" disposition, careless in war and equally careless in peace. He accepts everything as a matter of course and questions nothing He probably knows that he is entitled to a pension, cheerfully accepts what is offered and never thinks of finding out for himself.

Small wonder then that many are being insufficiently compensated and are receiving only a portion of their deserts.

Consequently it is unfair to charge the Government with exploitations of ex-service men. There can be no doubt that there is an earnest desire to make up to the disabled, in so far as the drawn up scale allows, for disability sustained in the Empire's service.

How is the difficulty to be solved, and how are the necessary adjustments to be brought about? Only, we suggest, by co-ordination and co-operation in the effort to enlighten the ignorant and to vouchsafe knowledge to those who are disinclined to help themselves.

The question of unemployment is truly a vexed one, to which there are a number of contributing factors. On the one hand employers, in many cases, have failed to redeem contracts, while on the other a number of ex-officers have persisted in seeking employment for which they are entirely unsuited. As long as such a state of affairs exists unemployment must follow in its train.

Generally speaking, however, the employer of labour has failed to discharge the debt which the fighting man has piled against him. Now that the war is over he rules out sentiment and is only too ready to forget what might have been.

Only when the employer realises his responsibility in the matter and when the ex-officer has a true conception of his status in the sphere he has chosen, will the gulfs which are at present separating the two with such disastrous and far-reaching results, be bridged.

YES, YOU CAN!

What shall I write about?

That is the question that hinders many (who probably possess unknown powers of interesting or amusing their fellows) from playing their part in the exchange of experience and thought which is open to them in the "Cologne Post" and which might lead a number to eventual fame—not to mention profit. The world of print, from the great reviews to the Parish magazine, from the "Times" to the Sloppleton-under-Slush Gazette, from the Novel of the year to the short story pages of the Wanglers'-Weekly, is thirsting for the blood of your pen.

You have never written for publication? What has that to do with it? That was once true of every writer, great or merely successful. William de Morgan was well over sixty before his first book appeared. Not that you need wait as long as that. It is never too late; and for that matter never too early. Ask Daisy Ashford.

You don't think you can write? My dear sir, you are irrevelent. That stops nobody. If you read at all you must have noticed that such a consideration is no impediment. The amount printed to-day, and sold and read, would be reduced to infinitesimal proportions were that an obstacle. Possibly you are no orator. But that doesn't prevent you from talking in mess, or club, or home and if you can talk you can write—and probably better than you converse.

"But I have nothing to say!" Oh! Come now! what about that story you told last night?—no, no, not that one; ladies read the "Cologne Post," you know, the other one I mean, which was jolly good and worth telling to a bigger audience. What about that curious experience of yours that others would like to hear of?

What about your views on certain subjects on which you feel strongly and, if you had the power to do so, would legislate strongly? You can make your influence and opinion felt by the readers of your article. You can sign any fancy name that pleases you until you are ready to come out under your own.

What about a description of that very delightful visit you made to somewhere? What of recollections of jolly hours in the mess, of thrilling times on the front, of incidents on parade or in orderly room, in training or on the move? Your mind is full of a hundred such. Or you have a hobby—and many others may have the same, while all will like to hear about it. Don't be selfish. Share it:

And it is not like appearing on a platform—nobody can see you, nobody can interrupt you. You won't regret afterwards that point you might have made and didn't: for you have time to look it all over and add or alter at your will. So (1) you can write (2) so can't many who do, (3) you must begin sometime, and to-night's the night; (4) you can write better than you talk, and I'm sure you can talk all right; (5) there are a thousand reminiscences, thoughts and interests inside you, waiting to be shared; (6) write then—and begin with the "Cologne Post" audience. The Editor's appreciation will be shown in marks, and that of the readers in demands for more.

O. WYNOTT.

A LAD.

I met him on the Rhine bank the morning after I came to Cologne, and remembered him vaguely when he hailed me by name. He told me that he had often seen me at Montreuil, drinking wine with the air of a connoisseur and talking more or less in the air. (This was said with a smile).

Then I remembered how he had once burst into a discussion I was having with a friend on points of Stendhal's style, and I recollected how often I had seen him hurrying hatless across the upper courtyard at G.H.Q., and wondered who he was. We were inclined in those days to think that our own department was a lonely island of culture in a sea of Philistinism.

I had already decided to dislike Cologne—a decision which evaporated later—and told him so, remarking on the beauty and tranquillity of Montreuil, which I had been forced to leave in a burst of wonderful spring weather. But he, being a child of the town, would hear no praise of the country. "At any rate you don't have to feel your way home here at night," he said, and I was silent, remembering the peculiar opacity of the darkness at Montreuil. He took me up to the mess and on the way we abused various people we had known.

The office was never dull as long as he remained there. How staid and dusty it really was we never discovered until he was demobilized. He was of the age when one believes that one's newest pose expresses one's real soul.

His pose just then was one of imitative decadence. Life was all before him, and every flower in the garden — even though his blooms were the lilies and the sunflowers of the forgotten 'nineties — was beautiful.

He read Swinburne with the gusto that one never recaptures after one's early twenties. I could not discover that he touched anything or thought of anything very profoundly. Normal youth has no philosophy beyond the capture of the present emotion, and he thus showed how very normal, beneath his pose, he was.

His desk was littered with the sheets of an opera score, of which he occasionally scratched a few bars. The opera was, of course, to be "Salome," but when he went he had not got beyond a sketch of the overture. The great work should now be proceeding in the ideally uncomfortable home he has made for himself in England, if worried upholsterers have been persuaded to let him have his way.

He steered through bristling difficulties with a favouring wind of what is vulgarly called "cheek." Never did we know him embayed. Who but he, appearing at the office at eleven o'clock one morning would have told an irate chief clerk that they had been re-papering the stairs at his billet early that morning and that he had consequently missed his proper allowance of sleep? It reminded one of Charles Lamb's disarming reply to the director of the India House who remarked: "I notice that you reach the office very late in the morning, Mr. Lamb." "Yes, but see how early I leave."

And who but he would have gone out to the Stadtwald with a huge volume of Schubert and amazed the Germans on the tramcar by humming scores all the way and unconcernedly conducting an imaginary orchestra? This went on all afternoon under the sun-flecked shadow of the trees, until we were ringed by an inquiring circle of children and adults.

And finally who but he would arrange to make up a party to go walking among the Lakes next summer, a party burdened with rucksacks and mandolines and dressed in Tyrolese costume? I am quite sure he will do it—he is still so young. And I rather hope I shall be of the party.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views.

AFRAID OF DEMOB.

Sir,—While sympathizing very sincerely with "Downhearted's" plaint, may I point out that after such a cataclysm as the world has experienced during the past five years such cases are bound to occur, and he is suffering, or likely to suffer, with thousands of others.

He has in his favour what many of us lack, Youth. And to ambitious youth the world cannot say a definite Nay! It may, it does, raise obstacles, it may not be over sympathetic, but youth and ambition heed not these things. How different is the case of the man in his forties, who gave up his job to help to protect it and now finds himself at a loose end.

Has "Downhearted" done all he could, especially during the last twelve months. Nothing could be more comprehensive than the Education scheme of the Army, as was well illustrated by the recent exhibition of work at the Army General and Commercial College, Hansa Ring. Has he tried a course or two at one of the colleges set up by the Army? Has he availed himself of the Army Library or the Correspondence College? Of course he may have tried, but owing to lack of room, may not have succeeded. May the day soon come when the scheme shall have been developed that any man so deserving may be sure of a place and the Army may cease to be a "blind alley" occupation.

Then again, has "Downhearted" so spent the past twelve months as to justify his cry now? Postal facilities with home have not been difficult and Correspondence Schools, good ones, especially in Engineering, are not unknown.

Many of these offered special facilities for members of the Forces. Another question that arises is a difficult one. There are many young officers (is "Downhearted" an officer?) who expect on return to civil life to obtain positions comparable with those they have held in the Army. They are bound to be disappointed, for after all our business men are not expected to be in business from purely philanthropic motives. A man must be able to offer something for his salary and if "Twenty-three" will content himself to take a minor's wage for two or three years he will find that, supposing that he is energetic, fit and willing to work the revised world will find him a place.

In the meantime, if he is not demobilized I would advise him to apply for a course at one of Colleges, through his Adjutant or Education Officer.

FORTY-TWO.

CONCERT AUDIENCES.

Sir,—After reading the plaint of "Wiganite" as to the slow appreciation, and lack of enthusiasm shown by audiences, the only conclusion to which I can come is that your correspondent must be inferior to his fellows in his judgment of what is good or really bad in the concert line. My experience— and it is a very wide one—is that audiences generally speaking are over indulgent.

When the British soldier realises that a man is doing his best to entertain, no matter how weak that best may be, I have never found him lacking when the time for applause came.

A CONCERT COER.

NEWSPAPER PROFITEERING.

Sir,—I cannot see that "Habitue" has much to grouse about. Isn't it a great convenience to find plenty of people ready to provide one with a newspaper? I would rather have too many street sellers than too few. It is much more convenient than to have to chase round to find a stall when you feel like buying something to read.

"Habitue" only speaks for himself, I fancy. I have never heard anyone else complain about the selling of newspapers and as for his statement that these street dealers pocket 200 per cent. on their sales, I would like to know how he works it out. Does he know what they have to pay for them, or does he realise that they are often left with many copies on their hands, which reduces their margin of profit often to very little indeed.

READER.

SPORT IN RHINELAND.

Sir, — The excuses put forward by T.W.T. as the reason for the slump in sport will not hold water.

Does he apply the same argument to the concert parties which continue to render good service despite demobilization difficulties to which he refers? The argument is applicable.

No, I have come to the conclusion that there is something lacking about many of the young soldiers at present doing garrison duty on the Rhine. The one subject is demobilization, and in this connection I quote one who claims to be the champion of the man in the ranks.

He advises those who clamour for demob. that they are likely to qualify for a place in the ranks of the unemployed at home. There is a lot of truth in that.

1915.

STUDYING ECONOMICS.

Sir,—I was very glad to see the advice tendered by "Argus" and intend to act on it myself. I have sent to London today for a copy of Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations" as a start.

It is very timely too, that you are commencing a series of special articles which will teach us all something of the all-important subject of Economics, about which I am afraid the majority of us are very ignorant.

J.E.C.

"QUIETUDE."

Sir,—In view of your suggestion that another room might be found for reading apart from the Music Room in the British Empire Leave Club, I should like to inform you that there is and has always been since the beginning of the Club, a Quiet Room leading out of the Billiard Room, which is at the entire disposal of any of those using the Club.

DIRECTOR GENERAL.

RECKONING THE MARK.

Sir,—I think I can tell "Perth's" nationality not only by his nom de plume but by his ideas.

In the main perhaps he is right. We ought as a conquering army to be getting every possible advantage for ourselves from the fall of the mark, but I have been told by one who has made a careful study of the question that owing to the enormous rise in the cost of living in Germany which is far greater than in our own country, the mark, as a matter of fact doesn't represent more than about threepence, even to Jerry.

If that is so, the prices we see in the shops are not out of the way.

As for tips I am told that before the war five to ten pfennigs was the usual amount to give a waiter. We English are always generous in the way of gratuities and I don't fancy anything "Perth" may say will alter that. But our American friends are even more lavish. What "Perth" gives an unfortunate servitor I dread to think. Perhaps "Nix,"

WILTS.

EYES AND NO EYES.

Sir,—"Arm-Chairite" is just the kind of individual who has no eyes for anything but trivial things. Because, I suppose, he has lived in one billet in Germany which hasn't an armchair, soft and luxurious to loll in, he jumps to the conclusion that the arm-chair is unknown here. This statement is altogether too ridiculous; but even if it were true, does a nation's superiority or otherwise depend upon comfortable chairs?

I am inclined to believe that the arm-chair habit is a curse. It tends to self-complacent laziness. A man goes home, puts on slippers, nestles down in the luxurious recesses of a padded chair, puffs his pipe, quaffs his whiskey, dozes off and forgets everything. It doesn't tend to alertness of mind and vigour of body.

The big men who have made their mark in the world — great thinkers, writers, soldiers, sailors and statesmen were not "armchair" men. They had no time for luxurious lolling in cushioned ease.

"Arm-Chairite" had better try again and see if he can give some more apt instance of national inferiority.

UPRIGHT.

BRITISH FILMS.

Sir,—A notice exhibited outside the Modernes Theatre (No. 2. Army Cinema) states the programme to consist of "all British Films."

I have been present during at least half a dozen performances at this Theatre and on no occasion has a British film been screened.

R. S.

GERMAN AND ENGLISH DRAMA.

Sir,—Some little time ago correspondents were complaining in your columns of not being able to obtain seats at the Deutsches Theatre owing in the inclusion of German women in the audience. These allegations were satisfactorily disposed of, although it was admitted that Germans were actually included but not at the expense of the British soldier.

I happened to overhear the comments of one of these Germans as she was coming out of the theatre after the play, and it struck me at the time that it was a pity that more opportunity should not be given to the people whose territory we are occupying to discover that the Englishman is capable of writing a good play and is just as capable of acting it. We swarm to the German Opera House, and numbers of us patronise the Schauspielhaus and the Opperetten Theatre. The German wants educating in certain directions. Why not let him have the opportunity of being educated in one direction at least.

PLAY-GOER.

NOVEMBER 11. 1919.

The Moving Finger marked the hour, Eleven:
In Town and on the Land, on Sea, or Hill,
Britain at Home, Abroad, on Earth, in Heaven,
Remembered — and was still.

In that great Moment of complete communion,
A Nation's Memories fused in one clear call
To God; and joined in dearest close reunion
With Those who gave us All.

And in that solemn Stillness, while there glistened
Earth's tears of grateful Love and long Regret,
They from the Everlasting Silence listened,
THEY watched our eyes grow wet.

Then, for one sacred Moment, we, united,
Knew our great Heritage below, above;
To THEM, Eternal Peace; to us, new-plighted
Sacrifice crowned by Love.

W. INGE.

WILDE IN AMERICA.

CHAMPION'S GREAT RECEPTION IN NEW YORK.

"BRITAINS GREATEST BOXER"

The fame of little Jimmy Wilde, the "Tylorstown Terror" had long preceded him to America. His contests with Pal Moore and Joe Lynch in England have made the American people very keen to see the man who was able to concede a stone in weight to two of America's best-known bantams.

And if Wilde is able to produce anything like his true form "over there" they will not be disappointed. His programme has not yet been fully mapped out, but he is down for a no-decision bout with Pete Herman, the bantamweight champion, early in the new year, as well as other fights of a similar nature.

But for the war Wilde would probably have paid the States a visit two years ago, but financially he will do much better as a result of the delay.

Boxing enthusiasts on this side of the Atlantic will watch with interest the doings of the Welshman in U.S.A.

New York's Great Reception.

The following cable-gram has been received from New York:—

Jimmy Wilde, the British fly-weight champion, is to have a great reception here to-day. All the morning newspapers hail him as the greatest fighter Britain has ever produced, each devoting a column to him in its sporting page.

Wilde was the guest at a luncheon at the Imperial Hotel after his arrival on the Baltic yesterday, when there were fifty writers on sport present.

A PROMISING ATHLETE.

Fine Performance at Cambridge Freshmens' Sports.

The outstanding feature at the Cambridge Freshmen sports was the very fine performance of H. M. Abrahams, the old Reptonian and a brother of S. S. Abrahams, the old Blue. Although handicapped at present by a somewhat laborious style he did remarkably well and promises to develop into a first ranker.

Within an hour he had carried off the hundred in 10⅕sec., and could probably have done evens if he had been pressed; carried off the long jump with an effort of 21ft 3in, and secured the 440yds in 52⅘sec., beating R. C. Gregory, the Carthusian, who was reported to have an unbeaten record at this distance. Such a record has not been beaten many times in these sports, and his future will be watched with great interest.

FOOTBALL AT LEEDS.

The Football League Management Committee met at Manchester yesterday evening, one of the most important items on its agenda being an application for permission to transfer the Huddersfield Town F.C. to Leeds, with all its rights, assets, and liabilities.

It is asumed that the necessary sanction will be given, and further that no objection will by raised by the Football Association to the change of name that will follow the transfer, and hopes are entertained in Leeds that the whole affair will be so speedily settled that it will be possible for Leeds to have next Saturday the match against Coventry City that is due to be played at Huddersfield. The result of the deliberations had not come to hand at the time of going to press.

MILLWALL'S NEW TALENT.

With the transfer fees of first-class players reaching prohibitive figures Millwall are experimenting with the untried article. In the London Combination game with Queen's Park Rangers, George Reid, a right back, and Nelson and McDougall, a left-wing pair (all Scottish players), were given a run, while W. White, centre-half, and E. Cooke, an inside-right, who have been secured from Dumbarton and Armadale respectively, will appear against the Arsenal at Highbury on Saturday.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

At a meeting of the Southern League Management Committee at Anderton's (Mr. Darnell in the chair) it was reported that a match had been arranged for Monday, Dec. 29, between a representative Southern League team and the Corinthians, to be played on the Millwall ground. The postponed fixture with the Irish League is deferred into the New Year for arrangement.

The Committee decided to grant free transfers to all players of clubs who have seceded from the League. This embraces players of the following clubs: Coventry City, Stalybridge Celtic, Stoke, West Ham, Aberdare, Croydon Common, Cwm Albion, Treharris, and Walsall.

RHINE ARMY SCOUTS' CIRCLE.

The Rhine Army Scouts Circle will meet at its Headquarters in the Y.M.C.A., Lindenthal at 3.00 p.m. on Saturday Nov. 15th. All members of the Rhine Army who are interested in "The Great Scout Movement" are cordially invited.

* * *

On Sunday Nov. 16th a meeting of the circle will take place at the same address at 2.45 p.m. A paper entitled "Wolf Cubs" will be read by one of the members. The parents of the junior section and their friends are invited to attend.

YARMOUTH RACECOURSE.

The Yarmouth Town Council having agreed to sell 28½ acres of land to a local trawling company, which has been acquired by Lord Leverhulme to be used for the canning of fish and other purpose, will, it is stated, involve the transfer of the racecourse from South Denes, to North Denes and steps are already being taken to carry this out.

LOCAL FOOTBALL.

51st N.F.'s 2nd Eleven v. Rhine Garrison School.

FEEBLE EXHIBITION.

This match was played on the School's ground, S adtwald, on Monday, November 10th. The ground was very wet and slippery owing to the heavy rain-fall during the morning. The game never reached a high standard, in fact, it was a feeble exhibition on the players' part. The outstanding players' were Lieut. Peat, left back, and Sgt. Nicholson, right back, for the School. Both these players showed good form and were the backbone of the School's team. The School's goal-keeper, L/Cpl. Berry also saved some good shots.

For the Fusiliers C.Q.M.S. Martin played a splendid game and gave some fine passes to the inside forwards; he was evidently making a desperate effort to be reinstated in the first eleven. Cpl. Newton, the Fusiliers left back played soundly, being very sure and a good kick. Sgt. Porter at right-back also played a steady game.

Shortly before half-time the School scored from a corner kick.

On the resumption the two teams were evenly balanced, until C.Q.M.S. Martin, the 51st outside right got the ball and took it down the wing and gave a fine centre to Sgt. Wood, who shot a pretty goal.

This evidently "bucked up" the Fusiliers as they again visited the home team's goal and Pte. Bowman from just outside the penalty area drove the ball along the ground, completely baffling L/Cpl. Berry, who did several smart things in the home team's goal.

Result:—51st Northumberland Fusiliers. 2; Rhine Garrison School 1.

ENGLISH v. IRISH.

Teams to Represent Leagues at Liverpool.

At a meeting of the Management Committee of the Football League held in Manchester, the following were chosen to represent the English League against the Irish League at Liverpool on Wednesday, Nov. 19:—

English.

Hardy (Aston Villa); Longworth (Liverpool), Cook (Oldham Athletic); Curry (Newcastle United), McCall (Preston North End), Watson (Burnley); Hodkinson (Blackburn Rovers), Stephenson (Aston Villa), Browell (Manchester City), Clennell (Everton), Crisp (West Bromwich Albion). Reserves: Dixon (Newcastle United), Chambers (Liverpool),

The team to represent the Irish League will be:—

Irish.

Liddell (Glentoran); Rollo (Linfield), Barrett (Belfast Celtic); Hamill (Belfast Celtic), Scraggs (Glentoran), McCandless (Linfield); Lyner (Glentoran), Robinson (Distillery), H. Reid (Distillery), McDonald (Linfield), McEwan (Linfield).

WOMEN REFEREES.

Surrey County Association Does Not Favour them.

At a meeting of the Surrey County Football Association, at Kennington Oval on Wednesday, the question of admitting ladies to the Referees Qualifying Examination was discussed. It was pointed out that the Association rules did not provide for women applicants form and it was decided to return this. A resolution was passed that no application form from any lady referee should be entertained.

The discussion arose out of an application from Mrs. Butler, of the Ryde House School, Ripley, for her qualifications to be passed by the Referees' Committes, Mrs. Butler has acted as a football referee for three years and has trained a boys' team.

R.A.S.C. STEEPLECHASE MEETING.

The Royal Army Service Corps inaugural steeplechase meeting will take place on Thursday, January 29, 1920, at Sandown Park. There will be six races. The most interesting will be the Royal Army Service Corps Steeplechase of £100 (for horses five years old and upwards which, on and since January 1, 1920, have been the property, unconditionally and free from contingency, of officers now serving or who have served in the R.A.S.C., to be ridden by officers qualified to enter) and the Allies' Steeplechase of £200 (for horses five years old and upwards which, on and since January 1, 1920, have been the property, unconditionally and free from contingency, of officers now serving, or who have served, in the Allied navies, armies, and air forces, to be ridden by officers qualified to enter.)

INMAN CHALLENGES.

Several challenges have been directed to Inman in recent weeks, but with little accruing in the way of business. We are likely however, to have a crop of money matches ratified in the near future. Inman has informed a "Sporting Life" representative that he was prepared to concede 1,500 in 16,000 up to any player in the world for from £100 to £500 a side. The champion authorizes us to say that it is not exactly a question of first come first served, but that he is prepared to play all his contemporaries on the terms set out.

EPSOM STABLE LADS.

A big effort is being made to end the strike of stable lads at Epsom. One owner of racehorses to-day met the lads' committee and discussed the matter fully with them. He is now going to see the trainers affected, and on Sunday will again meet the stable lads.

NOVEMBER HANDICAP

Twenty-Two Acceptances for Manchester Event.

A GOOD-CLASS FIELD.

There have been twenty-two acceptances for the Manchester November-Handicap to be run up Nov. 29th and, with the weights, they are as follows:—

Queens Square	9/2	Grand Fleet	9/2
King John	8/6	Planet	8/12
Not Much	8/3	Gay Lord	8 5
Royal Bucks	7/13	Golden Fleece	8/0
Aynsley	7/7	Elsinore	7/10
Jack Point	7/3	African Star	7/6
Rothesay Bay	7/7	Alasnam	7/1
Daphne	7/1	William Allenby	7/0
Dionysos	7/0	Challow	7/0
John Jackett	6/13	Wild Fellow	6/10
The O'Neil	6/8	Gotha	6/5

WHAT WILL WIN?

"The Marquis" Forecasts the Derby Cup Result.

"The Marquis," our racing contributor, wiring from England on to-day's Derby Cup prospects, points out that the distance of the race is mid-way between the Cesarewitch and Manchester November Handicap courses, a fact that will have an important influence on previous performances.

Alec Taylor, he continues, is, as might be expected well represented, and with Chat Tor scratched he still has Queen's Square, Elsinore and Palatina left in the race. The first named made but a feeble show in the Jockey Club Cup and has lost a considerable amount of attention from backers in consequence.

"The Marquis" forecasts the result of the race as under:

1, Wildwood,
2, Gay Lord,
3, Elsinore.

The three horses named by "The Marquis" for the Cambridgeshire, which were published in these columns, passed the post second, third and fourth respectively.

DERBY MEETING.

Scatwell Defeated in Markeaton Plate.

There was severe frost at the opening day of the Derby meeting on Wednesday and a mist hung over the course. The going was good and there was a large attendance. In the Markeaton Plate Scatwell started favourite, but was beaten by Corn Sack.

DETAILS.

Breadsall Plate:—1, Shoemaker (15—8 on); 2, Glimpse (8—1); 3, Lall colt (100—7). Eight ran.

Belper Handicap: — 1, Cylgar (7—1); 2, Daniel (100—7); 3, Lady Craigie (20—1). Thirteen ran.

Markeaton Plate:—1, Corn Sack (9—4); 2, Scatwell (2—1); 3, Vice Versa (10—1). Eight ran.

Chesterfield Nursery: — 1, Little Boy (100—9); 2, Paragon (11—4); 3, Catchup (20—1). Seventeen ran.

Rangemore Stakes:—1, Meavaig Bay (11—10); 2, Quilp (100—6); 3, Ruckings Queen (5—1). Fourteen ran.

Doveridge Plate:—1, Rossini (9—4); 2, Clarity (7—5); 3, Willonette (7—2). Four ran.

RACE MEETING STAKES.

Liberal Prize List at Hurst Park Tomorrow.

A great deal has been written lately regarding the alleged failure of racecourse executives to provide adequate stakes, but certainly no such charge can be brought in connection with the Hurst Park meeting on Saturday next says "The Sporting Life." Not one of the six events to be decided there is of smaller value than 400 sovs while two are worth 500 sovs.

Only one race, the Autumn Two-Year-Old Plate, closed before the middle of last month, but it does not appear from the entries that any great desire exists on the part of owners to patronise stakes merely because of their value. Moreover, in the case of the Syon Handicap of 500 sovs, for which it costs 10 sovs to run, there were only twelve acceptors out of twenty-six.

RACECOURSE CLERK'S DEATH.

The clerk of Epsom and Brighton racecourses died at Epsom on Wednesday morning, aged 85. He had been ill for some weeks and recently underwent an operation.

Listowel Meeting Off.

By proclamation signed by General G. E. Williams, the Competent Military Authority at Cork, the Listowel race meeting appointed for to-morrow and Saturday next has been suppressed for the reason that it was likely to cause grave disorder and disaffection.

FOOTBALL GOSSIP.

Exclusive Chat about English Teams and Players.

BY TYNESIDER.

Alan Morton is the proud possessor of the title "Scotlands Box o' tricks." He deserves it.

* * *

McIlvenny, of Bradford City, will take his benefit soon.

* * *

McCracken, Newcastle's famous back, was injured last Saturday at Middlesboro, but continued to "carry on," though obviously unfit.

"The finest goal-keeper in Europe." That was Sam Hardy's expressed opinion of Elisha Scott, Liverpool's famous keeper. What is his opinion of Kenny Campbell?

* * *

Ramsey, the St. James Park winger, found Middlesboro's defence too robust for his liking at Ayrsome Park, but his speed often had Holmes guessing.

* * *

Sidney Bowser did the knocking and Joe Smith the canvassing for Pennington, the "Throstles" popular captain, at a recent election.

Jack Carr, Newcastle United's old defender, is a trainer now to a Northumberland club. He appeared at outside left for them recently.

There are not many clubs in the "upper ten" who can claim that their ground is so near the sea as that of South Shields.

* * *

Donagby, of Middlesboro reserves has so far this season appeared at right back, left half, inside right and centre.

* * *

Hogg, of Sunderland, appeared for his country for the first time at Ibrox, the day the great disaster occurred. That day he faced Doig, McCombie and Watson, the Scottish defence and all of them clubmates.

Lawrence of Newcastle has a broken collar bone. Bradley his understudy has seized his chance well, and is performing with great credit in the Magpie's citadel.

NECK AND NECK.

Smith Gains Further Advantage Over Newman.

Smith and Newman in their 16,000 up match at Thurston's, are now practically neck and neck. On Tuesday, Smith led by 147, but he increased his advantage on Wednesday, finishing the day with a lead of 651. The closing scores were:—

Smith.....11,882
Newman (in play).....11.231

RUGGER RESULTS.

Wednesday's Rugby results were as follows:—

Cambridge 8; Guys Hospital 3;
Oxford 16; Leicester 8;

Association:

Swindon 3; Oxford 0.

SPORT IN BRIEF.

Horses for India,

Bridgend, Braida Garth, and Whit Week, purchased recently by Mr. Dick on behalf of an Indian client, will be shipped to Calcutta in a week's time.

Boxing in America.

Benny Leonard outpointed Sailor Bartfield at Jersey in a six round contest, and Mel Coogan defeated Johnny Dundee.

Paris Race Entries.

For the Two Thousand Guineas of 1921 M. Boussac's Tuberose and Curragh, Mme Bremond's Deserteur, M. Macomber's Net, Baron Rothschild's Hydromel, Vatel, and Lancelot du Lac have been entered.

Licensed Victuallers' Asylum Tourney.

A tournament in aid of the Licensed Victualters' Asylum will take place at the National Sporting Club on Tuesday, Nov. 18, when the programme will include three open amateur competitions at 8st, 9st, and 10st 4lb.

Eastern Counties.

The Eastern Counties have decided not to compete in the South-Eastern Group of the Rugby Union County Championship this season. They will, however, probably engage in friendly matches with the other members of the group during the season.

Tom Noble to Train at Windsor.

Tom Noble, of Bermondsey, who is matched with Tibby Watson, the Australian feather-weight, for a 20 3-min round contest at the Holborn Stadium on Nov. 27, will train from the Star and Garter Hotel, Windsor, and will take up his quarters there with Jack Goodwin as his trainer.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

"Far from the Madding."

"Far from the madding crowd" are the British soldiers in occupation of the large stud farm in the wilds of Rhomerhof, but they get "The Cologne Post" and one of the exiles has sent me the following amusing account of their armistice celebration. Hs says:

Thirty brave warriors of the Rhine Army are stationed miles away from the bustle and glare of wonderful Cologne, often forgotten by the grand old ration man and the petrol merchant on whom they depend for the "juice" for their lighting plant. Often the lonely sentry can be seen patrolling the paddocks with a spluttering candle in a bottle with mud up to his knees chasing wild mules who somehow manage to eat the barbed wire from the compound and s.roll a mile or two over the great stretches of paddocks in the dead of night.

Armistice Celebration.

Suddenly the news came to the little camp that the war had been over for exactly one year; then our officer suggested that for a few hours we should look once again upon the glare of the city. On Saturday night these old heroes forgotten by all the world and almost by the rest of the Rhine army fought their way through the eight inches of mud to a small hotel in Lechenich where the kindly proprietor had prepared a nice little dinner for them. Afterwards it was left to the lads themselves to improvise the concert, and a very jolly evening they had. At ten o'clock the boys made tracks for thei jungle home, delighted with their glimpse of civilisation, and all willing to soldier on for the remainder of the fifteen years of occupation.

Leave Club Debate.

The subject for to-day's debate at the British Empire Leave Club will be "That in the opinion of this House the League of Nations will make future wars impossible", moved by Private F. Kenny R.A.S.C., opposed by L.Cpl. L.McCormack, Dragoon Guards. The debate will be at 6.30 and it is hoped that all other ranks keen on speaking and debates will attend.

B.R.A.D.C. AT COBLENZ.

Large Audiences, But Rather Flat Results.

Take one enormous hall with deep alcoves all round the balcony and fill it with American soldiery; occupy a very nice stage, but one with a space of six feet between the curtain and the footlights and then present a play. This is a recipe about the adoption of which I would confidently give Mr. Punch's famous piece of advice:—"Don't." Doubtless the B.R.A.D.C. will be quite ready to take this advice after their experiences during the first three days of this week at Coblenz.

Man and Superman.

On Monday night "Man and Superman" was played to an audience of 2,000 and to such an accompaniment of coughing as has never been heard even at the Deutsches. The audience melted away after the first act to the tune of about 900 owing to the fact that those anywhere behind about the tenth row could not hear or account of the shocking acoustic properties of the hall and the insistent coughing. Lieut. Percy and his merry company strained their voices and themselves to breaking point in order to combat the difficulties under which they were playing.

Since the last presentation of "Man and Superman" in Cologne there have been two changes in the caste, Pte. Terry playing old Malone and Lieut. Coates as his son. Both these parts were allotted only two nights previous to the production and Pte. Terry is to be congratulated on the ease with which he performed a very difficult task, while Lieut. Coates, although not as word perfect as Pte. Terry, managed to get through safely. I need only repeat of the remainder of the caste what has already been said in these columns, i. e. they gave their usual excellent performance.

Damaged Goods.

On Tuesday evening the Company presented "Damaged Goods." Playgoers who have already witnessed this production will remember the tragic incident at the end of the second act when the wife discovers the real nature of her baby's illness. I am confident that none of those for whose benefit I am writing these words have ever been able to find anything hilariously funny about this curtain, but the audience in the Festhalle at Coblenz succeeded in doing so. They roared with laughter. I will allow that Miss Frances Chisholm's moan was very weak, but it was neither grotesque nor amusing, and anyone who had followed the play closely could not fail to be so worked up as not to realise the terrible situation in which wife and husband find themselves. However!

The Melting Pot.

On Wednesgay night the Melting Pot by Zangwill was presented. Patrons of the Deutsches Theatre will have an opportunity of seeing this production next week, and the criticism will therefore be deferred until next Wednesday.

The entire Company's thanks are due Mr. Eastiman and his assistants of the American Y.M.C.A. who treated their visitors so handsomely. Food and billets were beyond praise, and there was no request made that was not cheerfully and immediately complied with.

Mention should also be made of "Daddy" Gross who was responsible for the stage fittings, scenery, etc. Hospitality was the keynote of the whole visit, and it was not the fault of the American Y.M.C.A. that the company had to play under difficult conditions and to so difficult an audience. I think it quite likely that the wrong sort of play was chosen. The American soldier obviously does not understand Shaw. Apparently someone in Coblenz realised this as witness the following pithy paragraph culled from the top right corner of the front page of the "Ameroc News":—

SAY BUDDIE.

"The plays now being enacted in the Festhalle are of a serious nature cleverly written, but of interest only to thinkers. Those looking for "low brow stuff" will be disappointed. "A word to the wise etc."

Lifting the Veil.

On Tuesday night to a crowded room, at the B.E.L.C. Lieut. Foxley, R.N., gave his intensely interesting lecture on "Anti-Submarine Warfare." The veil was lifted on the doings of the "Mystery" or "Q" Ships, and heroic tales of their doings were told in simple sailor language. Lieut Foxley traced the growth of the Anti-submarine methods, and illustrated his lecture with many interesting slides.

"Tanks" at B.E.L.C.

A varied programme was given on Tuesday night at the B.E.L.C. Owing to the illness of the leading lady the second performance of "The Bath-room Door" was unavoidably postponed until a later date. Miss MacLean opened the programme with a pretily executed Spanish dance, and two solo dances, a Chopin waltz, and Shepherd's dance, were gracefully performed by Miss Bastard. Miss West rendered two violin solos with great charm and expression, and very much appreciated were the solos sung by Major Greenlees in his usual delightful style. The Pipers of the 11th Royal Scots again delighted the audience with selections, and L/Cpl. McDonald was loudly encored for his performance of the Highland Fling. The concert ended with a most amusing farce called "Tanks," which kept the audience in roars of laughter. The scene was a hotel bedroom, the episode that of a short-sighted captain who in a moment of absent-mindedness found himself in a Turkish bath in a lady's bedroom, and was almost suffocated in his attempts to conceal himself. Mrs. Bamford, as Lady Deerly, gave a pleasing representation of a very human character, and Miss Littleton scored a real success as Tutu, her French maid. They were ably supported by Captain Preston as Captain Chancit, who humorously made the utmost of a rather embarrassing situation.

JACQUES.

THE LAST DAY.

Closing Date For Our Football Contest No. 8.

To-day appears the last coupon in our No. 8 Contest. Don't let the opportunity slip, cut it out and post it on to us.

If you are going to be "Demob'd" and wish to have a last shot for our prize, put your "Blighty" address on the coupon. If you are a prize-winner, the award will follow you to your home.

Reviewing the matches, Aston have another chance of putting paid to their neighbours account. They may just get home, albeit the "Throstles" will be all out to wipe off last weeks defeat.

Sheffield Wednesday may score again, while Bradford City will possibly send Everton home pointless. Blackpool have a hard task, as also have Portsmouth. Clyde and their neighbours should provide a rousing battle and Dumbarton should dispel some of the gloom at Boghead. The "Thistles", however, always do well here and may add to the "Son's" drawing record.

Do your opinions coincide? Now is your chance to prove their value.

Coupons must be addressed:—

FOOTBALL CONTEST No. 8,
"Cologne Post",
A.P.O. S.40 Rhine Army.

List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.
2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.
3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for any reason, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.
4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.
5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into. Neither will interviews be granted.
6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.
7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, mislaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.
8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.
9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

FOOTBALL COMPETITION No. 8.

Date of matches, Saturday, Nov. 15th.
Closing date, Friday, Nov. 14th.

Aston Villa	v. West Bromwich A.
Sheffield W.	v. Derby C.
Notts C.	v. Sunderland

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Dancing Lessons Resumed.

I met Miss Paula Desborough yesterday. She looks well after her holiday and tells me that now she is back in Cologne she is getting busy again with her dancing classes.

The Pipes.

The other afternoon in the Hohestrasse I heard the cheering sound of the bagpipes. A detachment of Royal Scots were marching into Cologne.

Pretty Ideas.

Some of the fancy stationery one sees in the shops just now is very artistic and tastefully designed. Have you seen those little silhouette wafer seals for attaching to envelopes? But there are scores of other dainty notions.

Our Dead.

Most of the London papers referred to the Cologne "Remembrance of the Dead." "The Times" had quite a lengthy account of that notable event.

Haunt of the Dutch.

There is an old inn in Cologne down by the riverside where W. W. Jacobs would feel quite at home. It is frequented exclusively by Dutchmen, jolly bargees from Rotterdam, who are no strangers to the ports of London, Hull, Newcastle and Goole.

Indoor Amusement.

With the nights cold and the conditions underfoot very bad, the old mess bridge parties are springing up and the inevitable bridge problems form the topic of conversation between courses at dinner.

Taste for Books.

The presence in Cologne of so many British libraries and bookshops seems to have stimulated a taste for reading among hundreds of soldiers who previously indulged in nothing but weekly snippety bits and Sunday budgets of crime.

The Cologne Coster.

I have just run across a German coster in a coat and waistcoat resplendent with double rows of "pearlies," much like those you see in Shoreditch.

Drifting.

With re-organisation, local messes are receiving many new members, but how many of these birds of passage did what one did? He followed his introduction to the P.M.C. by producing the remnants of his old mess, in the shape of a pleasing collection of very useful articles of food. A walking canteen, in other words.

The New Spirit.

I hear that the British Children's School recently started is running on absolutely democratic lines. The child of a general will sit at the same desk as a private's youngster.

Wonderful Collars.

Taking a place on the front of an electric car the other day my attention was attracted by the wonderful astrakhan collar worn by the driver. It stretched right over his shoulders and looked quite imposing.

Cathedral Steps.

The advent of snow certainly gave pleasure to a number of youngsters who were the other afternoon "sledging" down a banked up mass of snow on the Cathedral steps, of all places.

St. Petersburg.

Looking at some recent photographs yesterday I was surprised to note that the German is still applying the pre-war name, St. Petersburg, in preference to its new name of Petrograd, to the Russian capital.

A Coincidence.

The other night I noticed that one row of seats in the second parquet of the Deutsches Theatre was entirely occupied by Corporals.

Mourning Flags.

The black flags still hanging outside the churches and in most streets of Cologne out of respect for the dead Cardinal, give the town rather a gloomy aspect just now, nor do the grey atmosphere and the sludgy snow make for cheerfulness, either.

Buckshee.

In a large field out at Mulheim I was looking at four large hangars and several huts, deserted by the R.A.F. A German who had been a prisoner of war asked me if they were "buckshee."

A Timely Hint.

"Was the conscientious objector justified?" was the subject of a debate held in one of our hospitals a few days ago. The leader for the affirmative was evidently a bit dubious of his reception, and had the following notice posted up: "Please note that ripe pears are as inexpensive as rotten eggs." The hint was taken!

Any Bids?

I see that an ex-R.A.F. pilot advertising for a job says, "I offer my life to the most interested bidder. Penchant for literature, flying and danger."

At the Farm.

Visiting a German farm the other day I was struck by the amount of British, Canadian, and American manufactured implements to be seen. Imported articles were quite usual on French farms, and they seem to be nearly as common in Rhineland.

A Snow Dog.

Yesterday on the top of a tradesman's van I saw the figure of a dog sitting on its hind legs. It was built up with snow and stood about four feet high.

Silly Questions.

I don't think some of the questions put to "Datas" are quite fair. To ask "When was Julius Caesar inoculated?" may raise a laugh, but a bombardment of such queries only queers the pitch of a unique and very clever exhibition of memory.

Not There.

Notice boards seem strangely out of place at times. I spotted one at the entrance to an Arcade yesterday. It said "No Lorries."

To All and Sundry.

Subscribers and others should be sure to inform the manager if they are leaving the Rhine Army. This will save much correspondence and enable him to keep his books straight. Call, write or phone Our numbers are Army 659, or Civil A. 9513.

The Fancy.

Cologne has its colony of keen pigeon fanciers. They foregather early on Sunday mornings at an ancient inn not far from the Cardinal's palace.

High Up.

A wireman engaged in minor repairs to telephone wires in Cologne running at a high altitude came in for a lot of attention yesterday. A somewhat lofty perch for such a day of snow and frost.

Lost Letters.

I hear complaints of an unusual number of letters containing articles of value and registered, too, that have failed to reach their destinations lately. What is wrong?

Its Funny Side.

A ladder on which a window cleaner was standing slipped and the worker in question was only saved from a dangerous fall by clutching the window sill. Even then it was doubtful if he could have avoided the fall had not two British Tommies dashed up and replaced the ladder in position, thus releasing him from a dangerous predicament They all laughed heartily after the incident.

Slot Literature.

They seem to have a mania in Germany for automatic machines. At Bonn station you can purchase cheap novelettes through this medium and there is quite a selection of publications to choose from.

RHINELANDER.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH WIVES.

A STUDY IN CONTRASTS.

Perhaps he was not an unprejudiced witness, being an Englishman who had married a French wife after long residence in Paris.

"I made the acquaintance of a fair number of girls of both nationalities studying at the Sorbonne and other colleges," he said. "Their ages varied from eighteen to twenty-five. The English girls were prettier—their complexions were mostly charming compared with the more sallow charms of their French sisters. But they were dull, dull, dull! No, they were not stupid at examinations, as learning machines they left little to be desired, but as human beings the majority of them were totally uninteresting, and without personality.

"Now a French girl of that age," he continued, "is an intelligent human being, not merely a collection of raw virtues. She can talk—and does so brightly—on most subjects of ordinary interest, though she knows not the joys of hockey."

"But there are charming English girls," I interrupted.

"Yes," was the answer, "but I wonder why English mothers have a lurking distrust of that elusive quality, charm. I think, if I may say so, English girls, are over-educated, or, rather their heads and legs are educated at the expense of their hearts and minds. After all you can't teach about life, housekeeping, how to make a man comfortable and keep his affection, out of books or in classes."

"Well," I observed, "to our idea the business-like methods of the French mother are rather repulsive, they seem to leave so little to sentiment—"

"Ah, yes," with a twinkle of amusement at his wife, who was making a salad, "the English girl is so often allowed to grow up with the idea that sentiment is more important than a light hand at pastries, and that love will make a leathery omelette digestible.

"Take my sister Gertrude," he continued; "she is twenty-three and engaged to be married; she is going to take a 'three months course of domestic instruction,' as she knows nothing whatever about housekeeping. I don't think it's surprising," he laughed, "if a prospective husband shudders at the thought of being made the subject of experiment by an amateur housewife who, when the first glamour is passed, will bore him to tears with the immaturity of her mind, and poison him with the decoctions of her hands."

"Englishmen are brave," I said as a parting shot, "and some of them, greatly daring, continue to marry their own countrywomen." From the "Globe."

FOR BUSINESS MEN IN RHINELAND.

We have received a copy of the "Uberseer-Post" a new organ for export and import with articles and information in three languages, English, Spanish and German. Being published at Leipzig, however, its contents are mainly in German although there is much of interest to British traders.

* * *

Secretary of State, Rob. Schmidt, speaking in Hamburg on the future of Germany said it was generally believed that foreign credits or loans would be the remedy for German currency struggles, but the problem is an international problem and only an international settlement through an international loan could solve it.

* * *

A drastic re-organisation of the German iron industry is pending. There will be radical changes including revisions of prices and reductions in cost of production. Some combination is aimed at and other efforts are to be made to fight foreign competition.

* * *

The consumption of American chocolate in Germany has reached a very high figure. Big efforts are being made by the German manufacturers to regain their former position. They claim that American chocolate is inferior in percentage of cocoa and cocoanut butter and point out that only the sugar restrictions handicap them at present.

* * *

As a measure against the falling value of the mark the German authorities intend to further control imports and exports and to limit the buying of foreign goods. Commercial traffic between the occupied and unoccupied territory is already severely controlled.

* * *

A significant sign is the increasing banking competition in Cologne. All the biggest Berlin banks now have branches or offices here and many foreign banks are opening up.

* * *

The German Chamber of Commerce in Cologne has secured the publication of an article in several local papers advising German business men to fight against the falling value of the mark by increasing the price of all merchandise sold for export or by arranging prices and payment in sterling, francs or other currency than marks.

* * *

The article points out that Germany is selling too much and at too low a price, consequently she cannot buy enough; and everything she wants increases in price. Such methods are working towards catastrophe.

* * *

The following remarks on the general situation which are by the financial expert of the "Birmingham Post" are interesting He writes:

"The broad general principle is plain—the blockade is over and the Government hopes our trades will resume relations with the enemy. That is, of course, the only possible policy. A trade 'boycott' of enemy countries, even if it had been possible, would have been a doubtful business. And it would only have been possible if all the Allies had agreed to it. As things are, enemy countries have proved, and are likely to prove, an attractive market. No doubt private enterprise will have to bestir itself to create credit facilities, but there can be no doubt Germany and other enemy countries will take and pay for almost anything we care to send them. On the other hand, there is plenty of evidence (from occupied Germany, at any rate) that the Germans are anxious to send us their goods.

* * *

"Undoubtedly there is, in certain quarters, a strong sentiment against the purchase or use of anything of enemy origin, but we do not think that sentiment will often override practical considerations. In this connection it is not to be forgotten that Germany's very adverse exchange will undoubtedly assist her manufacturers and merchants. With the mark at about one-fifth of its war value, it is quite obvious German goods will have an enormous advantage in our own home market and in neutral markets. On the other hand, her purchasing power is severely limited. The truth is that all the exchanges to-day are so tangled nobody quite knows what will happen. All that is certain is that energy in production and interprise in sale will, despite queer monetary phenomena, reap their due reward."

THE NEW SPORTSMAN.

Mr. George Robey, the famous comedian, is fond of telling this story:

Early in September, while a shooting party were out for a day's sport in the Highlands, a raw young sportsman was observed by a keeper to be taking aim at a pheasant running along the ground.

The keeper shouted: "Hi, you there, never shoot a running bird!"

"What do you take me for, idiot? Can't you see I'm waiting till it stops?"—

MORE PRIZES FOR READERS.

In addition to the prizes we are offering for short Christmas stories, we invite our readers to send us their personal experiences of the Christmases they have spent since the beginning of the war.

We require one for each of the years 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917 and will give 50 marks for the best short description of a Christmas spent in the Army in each of those years There will therefore be four prizes — one for each year of the war.

The length of these descriptive articles must not exceed 500 words each

Typewritten copy is preferred but not essential.

The latest date for receiving them will be November 20th and they must be addressed "Christmas" Cologne Post. A.P.O./S. 40. Rhine Army.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

NEW TERMS FOR "THE COLOGNE POST."

Owing to the increased cost of production caused by ever increasing wages and the price of paper, together with the low value of the mark, it is necessary to increase the price of the "Cologne Post" to 50 pfgs. or ONE PENNY.

Subscribing units will be supplied with not less than 24 copies daily at. 40 pfgs. per copy. The rate of subscription will be as follows:—In the Rhine Army—M. 13.— per month. To United Kingdom or British Colonies—M. 20.— or 3s 4d per month.

Present subscriptions will be continued at the old rate, but must be renewed as above.

These terms come into effect on Tuesday November 18th.

Back numbers of the "Cologne Post" can be obtained at the following rates. Nos. 1—100 (where not out of print) 1 mark per copy. 101—present date 50 pfgs. per copy.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

Can you write one?

THREE PRIZES OFFERED.

Christmas will soon be here, and "The Cologne Post" wishes to encourage its readers to write short Yuletide stories suitable for publication in its columns at that festive period.

They can be on any subject and in any vein but they must not exceed 1000 words in length.

We offer prizes of 150 marks, 100 marks, and 50 marks respectively for the three best received and published, and any others we may think worthy of publication will be paid for at our regular rates.

If possible manuscripts should be typewritten, though this is not essential.

The last date for receiving Christmas stories will be November 20th. Envelopes should be addressed "Story Editor" "Cologne Post" A.P.O. S/40, Rhine Army.

RUSSIAN AFFAIRS.

LLOYD GEORGE ON THE SITUATION.

Following his speech on Russia at the Lord Mayor's banquet Mr. Lloyd George was called on to answer a series of questions in the House of Commons. Reading rapidly from a prepared statement he said that as regards the so-called peace advances from the Russian Soviet Republic the Allied Governments had always declined to take any action in respect of communications purporting to come from Governments of hostile countries through irresponsible agencies. They had only taken action on communications emanating officially and directly from such Governments. The British Government did not think it advisable to depart from that practice.

He wished to state categorically that no person or persons had at any time on his behalf or within his knowledge, interviewed representatives of the Bolshevists for the purpose of ascertaining whether and on what terms negotiations for peace might be opened.

He did not agree with the argument which was described by the expression that the Allies "should drop their world-pride and get into communication with the Bolshevists". In his opinion that was not the method whereby peace could be secured in Russia. Referring to a question as to the present position of Admiral Koltchak and the administrative and military causes of his retirement, Mr. Lloyd George said the Bolshevist forces were marching rapidly on Omsk but Koltchak's armies had not evacuated the town, the fate of which would be decided by battles within the next few days.

The causes of Koltchak's retirement were too complicated to be dealt with in an answer to a question, but they indicated those aspects of the Russian civil war which he emphasised at the Guildhall. Since the beginning of the year Admiral Koltchak had retired several hundred miles but Denikin had swept the Bolshevist armies from a vast and fertile region. Denikin had recently lost some ground but he still held the greater part.

In France an army the size of Denikin's would have held a front of about fifty miles with well organised communications, whereas such an army in Russia had to hold a front of 1,300 miles with a vast and thoroughly disorganized country behind it. The great majority of the population felt no ardent loyalty for either side and very quickly changed their allegiance.

There was also the complication of such provincial or national movements as that of Petlura's. The result was that Denikin hitherto has been unable to establish administrative control over the conquered territories, which for the present made trade almost impossible. It was the policy of the Allies to encourage the opening up of trade in those regions. An honourable Member of the House had been appointed to go on special mission to see what can be done in this respect.

The general policy of the Government had been repeatedly stated in the House. He himself had expounded the Government's view in April and Mr. Winston Churchill and Mr. Austen Chamberlain had expressed it more recently. The Government had frequently made it clear that with the crushing financial burden already cast on it by the great war it could not contemplate the assumption of new burdens. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had explained that no provision had been made for such additional expenditure in Russia and if any addition were to be made it would be the responsibility of the House to determine the additional taxation to be imposed in respect thereof.

On the other hand the Government had an overwhelming sense of the importance of bringing peace to Russia. A settlement of the Russian problem was essential to the reconstruction of the world, for Russia was one of the great sources for the supply of food and raw material. The present condition of Russia was one of the contributory causes of high prices and high prices were undoubtedly in all countries a dangerous form of Bolshevist propaganda. There were indications that German reactionaries were using the present position in Russia to strengthen their influence with all the struggling parties there.

From a humanitarian point of view it was no less important that the civil war, which is not only destroying Russia's economic life but is impoverishing the world and slowly decimating an inert population, should be brought to an end as soon as possible. That was why the Government had always been ready to take any reasonable opportunity which might present itself to effect a settlement of the Russian question on conditions which would really bring peace, order and constitutional Government to Russia on terms which would be acceptable to the Russian people themselves. Their views on this subject were embodied in an Allied letter to Koltchak.

THE TWO MACS.

"SCENE" IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

At question time yesterday in the House of Commons the Secretary for Ireland, Mr. I. Macpherson, gave a reply which Mr. J. MacVeagh, the Nationalist Member for County Down (South), took as a suggestion that he sympathised with Sinn Fein. Mr. MacVeagh thereupon shouted "Don't be impertinent. There is too much of it."

The Speaker immediately called Mr. MacVeagh to order for using an unparliamentary expression and asked him to withdraw it but Mr. MacVeagh maintained that Mr. Macpherson should have been called to order for his remark. The Speaker replied that to call any member a sympathiser with Sinn Fein was not unparliamentary and he must ask Mr. MacVeagh to withdraw but Mr. MacVeagh said he could not withdraw his remark, in view of the habitually offensive character of Mr. Macperson's answers and interjections in the House.

In those circumstances the Speaker said he must ask Mr. MacVeagh to withdraw from the House. The irate Irishman agreed to do this, remarking that before many months had passed the whole House would have his opinion of Mr. Macpherson. He then withdrew from the House.

His suspension is only operative for one day.

CARDINAL HARTMANN.

THE LYING IN STATE.

The scene in the crypt of St. Gereon's Church, where the body of the late Archbishop of Cologne, Cardinal von Hartmann, now lies in state awaiting burial, is very impressive in its dignity and simplicity. The low Romanesque crypt, with its rounded vaulting, its dim traces of colour and its faded memorials, is very suited to this solemn scene. Romanesque architecture has about it a peculiar sense of awe and of mortality. This feeling increases as one descends at evening from the space and colour of the splendid church above to the dimly lighted crypt and hears the murmur of prayer from the priests and the Dominican friars, in their habits of black and white, who are chanting the Office of the Dead.

All is very plain; there is no attempt at pomp or splendour. Nothing insults the quiet of death. The space before the a tar of the crypt is cleared and set about with laurel and white chrysanthemums, and the pillars here are spirally wreathed with black. Within the cleared space the dead prelate lies in pontificalia, like an effigy from a medieval tomb. The archbishop lies with his head to the east, as priests are laid in death, and wears purple Mass vestments. The violet shoes of a bishop are on his feet, a white mitre is on his head, and the golden crozier lies in the crook of the arm. Round the neck is visible the pallium, the band of white wool set with black crosses, which is bestowed by the Pope only upon metropolitans. The cardinal's scarlet hat and a golden chalice and paten, emblems of priesthood, are laid at the foot of the bier. Many tapers are burning round the coffin, and near it a boy swings a censer.

All day a procession of people, rich and poor, old folk and children, representative of all Cologne, passes through the church and down to the crypt. And it is observable that very many of these people are not moved to come here out of idle curiosity, but that they have come to pay their last tribute to a father in God.

RUMANIA AND PEACE.

The Presse de Paris states that the Rumanian delegates have received a telegram authorising them to sign the Peace Treaty unreservedly.

It was proposed to hold at an early date an international conference at which Ministers of the Allied and Associated Powers would consider the various outstanding problems which for one reason or another the Peace Conference had so far been unable to settle, and Russia was among these problems. If the House wished for a discussion on the Russian question before the assembling of the Conference the Government would be prepared to give the neccessary facilities. In fact arrangements had been made for such a discussion on the Foreign Office vote on Monday next but he suggested that before the demand was made the House should bear in mind that in difficult and delicate matters of this kind it was not always the best plan to have a public debate in the course of which the Government might be forced, in support of its policy, to give information.

The House might rest assured that the Government would inaugurate no new policy or commit the country to any fresh commitments, without giving the House the opportunity of previously discussing the same.

'PLANE DISASTER.

AUSTRALIAN COMPETITORS DASHED TO DEATH.

The flight to Australia contemplated by the competitors in an Alliance aeroplane, which started from Hounslow shortly before noon on Thursday, terminated in tragedy a very few minutes later. The machine, a biplane with one engine of 450 h.p., was piloted by Lieutenant Roger Douglas, his navigator being Lieutenant Ross. It was fully provisioned for the journey and carried also a large supply of petrol.

The machine left the aerodrome in good style but it had only proceeded as far as Surbiton — about ten miles — when residents in that district had their attention attracted to it by its appearing to be in difficulties. Suddenly the aeroplane nose-dived with great momentum to earth. So rapid and terrific was the speed of its drop that a large tree which stood in the line of descent was levelled to the ground.

The crash was terrible and the machine was completely smashed. Spectators rushed to the scene, police and medical assistance being urgently summoned. Lieutenant Douglas was extricated in a dying condition and he expired almost immediately. Lieutenant Ross was killed outright.

GERMAN TRADE.

BRITISH IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

In reply to a Labour member in the House of Commons who asked for particulars of the volume and value of our export and import trade with Germany since the Armistice, Sir A. Geddes, President of the Board of Trade, said the total imports from Germany amounted to £217,435. Of this total, potash compounds (other than manures) accounted for £53,780. Toys and games figured at £8,631.

The exports of British produce and manufactures to Germany in the period specified amounted to £10,798,973. The principal items in the list are:

Linseed Oil	£1,613,396
Soap	480,437
Cotton Yarn	428,[illegible]
Cotton Manufactures	3,69[illegible],508
Woollen and Worsted Yarn	204,781
Woollen and Worsted Manufactures	1,732,495

The exports of foreign and colonial produce and manufactures exported from Great Britain to Germany come to £5,408,775, made up principally of foodstuffs, rice, oatmeal, bacon (£1,019,669), meat (£679,386), milk, cocoa, coffee, etc. Rubber figures at £374,409, unwrought copper at £57,500, and raw cotton at £355,185. The total of our exports, home, colonial, and foreign, to Germany amount to £16,207,748.

IMPERIAL GENERAL STAFF.

The Parliamentary Army Committee has forwarded to the Government a resolution urging the reorganisation and development of an Imperial General Staff corresponding to the development and military organisation of the Empire. It proposes that it shall be a control body, with local branches for each part of the Empire, on the lines approved by the Dominion representatives at the Imperial Conference in 1907.

The time has come, says the resolution, when the controlling body should be removed from the War Office and freed from the responsibility for administrative details. The Central body should be charged with the duties of inspection.

DEATH AFTER A BALL.

Mrs. Steane, whose marriage with Captain Steane took place two months ago, and who previously was Mrs Alma Hayne, died suddenly on Wednesday morning at her flat, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square. The previous night she and her husband attended the Victory Ball at Claridge's Hotel, and returned at about three o'clock in the morning. Mrs. Steane, who was stated to have been in good spirits, went to her room. Shortly afterwards Captain Steane heard a cry, and, running into the room, found his wife in a dying condition. Medical assistance was summoned, but she died before the doctor's arrival.

GOVERNMENT OFFER TO RAILWAYMEN.

At the conclusion of yesterday's conference between the Premier and the railwaymen Mr. J. H. Thomas announced that the Government had made a definite offer of machinery to deal with disputes in wages. This body would include representatives of the public. The men would also be offered a share in the management of the railways. Both offers will be discussed at a meeting of railwaymen, when the final answer will be decided.

CLEMENCEAU'S SECRETARY FIRED AT.

M. Mardel, who is M. Clemenceau's secretary, was fired at on Wednesday night when leaving an electoral meeting at Bordeaux. The bullet broke one of the windows of his car but M. Mandel was not hit. The aggressor has not yet been identified.

CHANNEL TUNNEL.

MINISTRY PRACTICALLY IN FAVOUR.

The official account was issued on Thursday night of the proceedings at the previous day's deputation to Mr. Lloyd George with reference to the Channel Tunnel scheme. It shows that the Leader of the Labour Party, Mr. Adamson, M.P., who acted as spokesman, strongly advocated the construction of the tunnel but contended that it should be built by the two Governments concerned and not by the railway companies. The deputation said that the opinion of military experts was that precautions could be taken which would prevent the construction of the tunnel involving any military danger. It was pointed out that in the late war such a tunnel would have helped immensely.

Mr. Lloyd George, in reply to the deputation, said that the war had considerably modified the attitude of ministers towards the project. Ministers who previously were absolutely hostile were now prepared to support the scheme, subject to further examination by the Government's naval and military advisers. The Premier then reviewed the immense advantages which a tunnel would have given during the war. On the other hand, he said, the Germans very early in the war could have seized both Calais and Boulogne and if a tunnel had been in existence they certainly would have done so, but even then we could have destroyed the tunnel and we should still have had the sea for the conveyance of troops. These considerations tell on the whole in favour of the tunnel and account for the change in the attitude of Ministers towards it.

We cannot afford, he said, to run any risk of a surprise attack resulting from the capture of the bridgehead, thus converting England into a part of the Continent. We cannot give away the protection which the Channel affords us. Therefore we propose that the problem be again examined very carefully from the military, engineering, naval and air points of view. If the military advice is favourable the Ministry will be prepared to support the scheme on general grounds but if it is the reverse or favourable we could not accept such a grave responsibility.

"I am a believer in the League of Nations," concluded the Premier, "but I should like to see it in working before we put our whole trust in it and before we put the whole existence of our country to the hazard of what is a great experiment, a noble experiment, but still an experiment. We have no right to throw away the advantage if being an island. Apart from that there is everything to be said for a tunnel. The difficulty is not a political one: it is purely a military and naval one."

CORNISH MINE VERDICT.

ACCIDENT DUE TO "FATIGUED" METAL.

The verdict in the inquest on the 31 victims of the Cornish tin mine disaster near Land's End was given yesterday, and was one of accidental death, the cause of the accident being returned as "fatigue of the defective part" of an iron strap of the engine.

Mr. Abbott, Divisional Inspector of Mines, gave evidence following his investigation of the mine, and said the load upon the strap which broke was only one-twenty-third of what it was capable of standing—a very wide margin of safety. That, however, was offset by a defect which developed in the strap, a defect which he did not think could have been ascertained by inspection. The fracture, he considered, was the result of the "fatigue" of the material, against which no reasonable precautions could prevail.

PREMIUM BONDS.

THE SIGN OF FOUR.

Four Independent Liberal members of the House of Commons have put down a motion on premium bonds as follows.

"That this House declines to consent to any scheme of raising a loan which is based upon a gamble with the savings of the people; which involves Government solicitation for a lottery; which will enrich the few at the expense of the many; which will involve a substantial immediate loss of the value of the money invested to all but those who chance to win prizes; which is contrary to the long-established usage of the British Treasury, is in conflict with public policy, and calculated to depreciate British credit."

SILESIA FOR THE POLES.

The official results of the Upper Silesian communal elections reveal a most favourable state of affairs for the Poles, who have secured 64 per cent, of the votes cast in the Hindenburg district, 78 per cent, of the average in the Beuthen rural district, and 89 per cent, in the Tarnowitz district.

BOOM IN WALKING.

The West Sussex Standing Joint Committee has sent a request to the Home Secretary to order that no police officer shall use any publichouse in his own division for refreshment or recreation at any time, except with the permission of his superintendent, which shall only be given in cases of necessity.

"PUSSYFOOT."

LATEST EXPLOIT OF LONDON STUDENTS.

London students, whose pranks were perforce suspended during the war, there being sterner work to do, are apparently resolved to make up for lost time. The German 77 m.m. gun which was removed from the Mall on Armistice day by students from Bart's was collared by University College students just a year later and recollared by Bart's. On Wednesday an explanation was demanded from a daily newspaper on behalf of the wooden effigy of a Highlander which the Gower-street students take as a mascot on their joyous expeditions to Richmond and elsewhere, but on Thursday they went one better.

Extraordinary scenes occurred at the Essex Hall, where the Overseas Club had arranged a debate between the American prohibition propagandist "Pussyfoot" Johnson, and an anti-prohibition barrister, Mr. Mitchell Banks.

Immediately the meeting opened a body of students rushed the doors and created a tremendous uproar, effectually drowning the chairman's voice. Mr. French, chairman of the Overseas Club, appealed for fair play, reminding the students that the Club had collected a million pounds for the war and presented the Government with three hundred aeroplanes.

The students still refusing to allow the chairman to proceed, the latter offered to allow one of the students to state their case. Amid the terrific cheers of his comrades one lusty lunged enthusiast thereupon shouted "We say that the question whether Britain wants to be wet or dry is for Britishers alone to decide. We don't want Americans to come over here and tell us what to do. We won the battle of the Somme on rum and rum only, and the sooner Johnson realises that the better." (loud cheers).

"Pussyfoot" Johnson was then allowed to start speaking but he had barely uttered half a dozen sentences when the students suddenly stormed the platform, pelting the occupants with bags of white powder. A scene of the wildest confusion followed, amid which the students collared Johnson and carried him to the street.

About three hundred of them formed a procession and bore Johnson shoulder-high along the Strand to the quadrangle of King's College, thence through Trafalgar Square and Piccadilly Circus to Leicester Square, unceremoniously stopping all the traffic en route. They then made a move for University College, but when nearing Oxford Circus fifty police appeared and after a ten minutes joyous scrimmage rescued "Pussyfoot" and carried him off safe and sound in a commandeered military motor car. He was none the worse for his adventures, which he took throughout most good humouredly.

The greater part of his journey was made in a newspaper van which the students commandeered after removing the horse.

SHOT ON THE BOAT.

DEMOBILIZED MAN'S SAD DEATH.

The Dover Coroner held an inquest yesterday on Private Lawrence Jossop, a demobilized man of the non-combatant corps, living at Oakland-road, Hillsborough, Sheffield, who was killed on board the steamer Maid of Orleans when crossing from Boulogne to Dover on Tuesday.

A soldier said that during the voyage, on the under deck, he had his attention called to his rifle, the bolt being open. He closed it in the usual way, but it went off. The bullet penetrated the deck roof and struck deceased, passing through his left big toe, grazing his thigh, and then passing through his heart.

Witness had not seen his rifle for months, being on cook-house fatigue. The last time he used the weapon was when he was guarding prisoners at Deauville, and he had no idea it was loaded. A verdict of "Accidental death" was returned.

SANK IN TWO MINUTES.

TWELVE LIVES LOST IN CHANNEL COLLISION.

The British steamer Duneric, New York to Antwerp, collided off Portland with the French barquantine Collert, which sank in two minutes. Two of the crew were picked up by the Duneric but the captain and eleven others were drowned.

FIUME'S "WAIT AND SEE."

Signor Boselli, the former Italian Premier, speaking at Turin, said he thought the Fiume question would best be settled by adopting a waiting attitude. France, he declared, would certainly not intervene and he believed that neither the British nor American people would permit any expedition against Italy.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF GRAVES.

Mr. Churchill, in Parliamentary Papers, states that the total number of photographs of soldiers' graves supplied up to date is 137,877, of which 62,875 have been supplied since the Armistice. There are still 31,632 requests outstanding.

A locomotive entering the Braine-le Comte station collided with a train carrying British troops. Several soldiers were killed.

COMMISSIONS.

PERMANENT ESTABLISHMENTS NOT YET DECIDED.

The War Office states that during the six months ended 30th. September, four permanent commissions in the regular army were given from the ranks to men who served during the war and who were taken prisoner by the enemy; four commissions were also awarded to non-regular officers in the Household Cavalry and three commissions were awarded as the result of special nominations. Commissions were awarded to cadets as follows; from the Royal Military Academy, 70; from the Royal Military College, 159. These numbers were approximately twenty-five per cent less than the pre-war output from the Academy and College.

The grant of permanent regular commissions to non regular officers has been suspended since the armistice with the above exceptions, and no definite policy regarding such commissions can be laid down until the future organisation and strength of the after-war army are determined.

Of officers at present serving in the regular army at least 4,500 are surplus to establishments and in view of this fact it is impossible to foreshadow what number (if any) of further permanent commissions can be awarded, although it is probable that necessity will arise for granting a certain number of regular commissions in the Technical Services, such as the Tank Corps, Machine Gun, Corps, Army Ordnance Department an Technical Engineering Services.

MILCH COWS.

JUSTICE OF FRENCH DEMANDS.

French public opinion has been surprised that sympathy in any quarter of England could have been found for the appeal which has been put forward by the Germans for the supply of cattle to Germany so that the children may not die, while the number of milch kine in France still remains so small in comparison with the population.

The figures which are in the hands of the Ministry of the Liberated Region, and which will shortly be officially published, prove that the state of Germany is no worse than that of France. The German figures are taken from official memoranda. In 1914, per thousand inhabitants, France had 308 head of cattle, and Germany 335. At the end of the war, exclusive of the occupied territory, France had 265 head, of which 134 were calves, whereas Germany had 301 head, with 158 calves. These figures speak for themselves.

In the invaded regions of France 980,000 cattle were taken off by the Germans, of which 528,000 were calves. These districts since the Armistice have been given 60,000 cattle. The cattle in Germany now number 16,957,000. France demands 95,000 - that is, ·56 per cent. These with the 60,000 are hardly equal to one-sixth of the pre-war number per head in France, taking into account the decreased population.

CAPTAIN FRYATT'S SHIP.

BELGIUM OFFERS IT TO ENGLAND.

The Belgian Prize Court, which had before it the case of the late Captain Fryatt's steamer Brussels, decided that, as it had been captured by the Germans, it must rank as a German vessel, and therefore a prize for Belgium. But the Minister of Marine, M. Renkin, has graciously informed the British Ambassador that he will be happy to hand over the Brussels to England if she desires it, on account of the historic interest which attaches to Captain Fryatt's ship—an offer which is unanimously approved in Belgium.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.

For the 93 great towns of England and Wales the births registered last week numbered 8,838, and corresponded to an annual rate of 24.9 per 1,000. The deaths among the civilian population only numbered 4,265, and corresponded to an annual rate of 13.4 per 1,000. In the three weeks ended October 18, October 25, and November 1, the death rates had been 12.5, 13.7, and 12.9.

SIGNPOSTS FOR AIRMEN.

The Air Ministry has issued the following "Notice to Airmen":—

The roofs of the following railway stations are now marked with the name of the place in large white letters:—Redhill, Tonbridge, Ashford (all S.E. and C. Railways); and Hitchin (G.N. Railway).

FORTUNE'S WHEEL.

Scarcely twenty years ago there was a clerk in the War Office without prospects of rank or wealth. By the vicissitudes of fortune, Lord Ravensworth, the clerk in question, came into wealth, and a title at the age of sixty-six. He died yesterday in his 83rd year.

CRYSTAL PALACE DEPOT.

The reunion held last Saturday of R.N.V.R. and R.N.A.S. men who passed through the Crystal Palace Depot during the war, was so successful that it has been decided to make the reunion an annual event, to take place on the nearest Saturday to Armistice Day.

THE PRINCE IN CANADA.

The Prince of Wales' spontaneous and enthusiastic reception right throughout his extended tour of Newfoundland and Canada has been a complete triumph of personality.

The fact that he came as the future Emperor of the world's greatest Empire, of which Canada is a part, was sufficient to guarantee him a courteous and cordial welcome, but the bounds of courtesy and cordiality were far too narrow for the people of the vast Dominion; they were captivated by the Prince's cheery smile, grace of manner, lack of affectation and frankness, and any suspicion of formality was everywhere at once dispelled in a well of enthusiasm. They caught in his eye the light of human sympathy and their response was as speedy as overwhelming.

A Colonial is ever a smart judge of a man—on occasion he has to make up his mind quickly—and the truly wonderful success of the Prince may be taken as an indication of his worth, judged by a sound standard, and leaving aside all claims of birth and rank.

He passed from success to success and from personal victory to yet further victories and we may well feel proud of a Prince of Wales who has given such abundant proof that he is a man as well as a prince.

His visit to Canada can only have the result of yet more strongly cementing the Dominion and the Motherland in the bond of sympathy so firmly established as a result of mutual suffering during the war.

We, who in France and Flanders, came into contact with His Royal Highness, know something of his cherry optimism and magic personality and realise the sincerity of his smile which never failed to brighten and help in those dark days.

And now the Prince has crossed the border into the United States, where we confidently anticipate he will pass to yet further triumphs and serve to strengthen the understanding between the two great English speaking peoples.

"A PRIVATE IN THE GUARDS."

One may doubt whether any book has ever been interpreted to the public in a sense more directly opposite to its doctrine and to the interest of its author than "A Private in the Guards," by Stephen Graham — published by Macmillan and Co. Much correspondence (mainly by those who evidently have not read the work) has appeared in the papers, the readers of which must have formed the conclusion that Mr. Stephen Graham had written an attack on the military — and especially on the Guards — system of training, and that it was an accusation of unnecessary and almost unqualified brutality and vicious offensiveness on the part of those entrusted with that training.

Nothing could be more perversely untrue. The book, while it contains isolated examples of objectionable extremities on the part of individuals, is a paean of praise of the severe training of the Guards and of its incomparable results: and the pride of the writer in his Brigade is the main note of the book. And this mark you, from a man of culture and artistic temperament, who had been through the mill and felt it as only such men can: but whose reasoned judgment pronounces that the method was necessary, effective, and productive of the result needed for the sake of our Country and our cause.

DISCIPLINE FIRST.

Listen to his opening note. His first chapter is on Discipline. He puts that first. Experience and judgment have shown him that it is first. His opening words are—"The sterner the discipline the better the soldier, the better the Army. This is not a matter of debate" And he goes on to develop the point with a clear-sighted reasoning that is irrefutable. And he adduces examples of the disaster that follows upon incomplete training in discipline. He shows too, how and why this training must not only seem but actually be harder in the case of newly raised troops who are accustomed to dwell on their individual "rights" and grievances, and of middle-aged men; he sees that professional men are the hardest to mould into the soldier of unquestioning, unswerving obedience, especially is this true of the artistic professions. "Such verbal brutality and insult as I have seen" he says "applied to men of refinement . . . can all be justified on the higher ground of discipline . . . All manner of men, proud, well-known, respected have been reduced to type for the use of the machine. If they had not been so reduced, where would England be to-day?" That is the view of Stephen Graham—man of refinement and social position, and private in the Guards,—after he had been thus trained, had fought amongst the product of that training, and had time to reflect after Victory.

WHAT WON THE WAR.

His argument is too long to expose here; but it is cool, impartial and leads him to the result we have quoted. "Such habits of patience under suffering have been formed as could not be exhausted". Only such training, he judges, could have kept up the standard of discipline and morale as the war progressed and physically inferior classes were called to the colours. Mr. Graham cannot understand why the discipline and training of his own Spartan division were not applied to the whole of the British Army, and is sure that, had they been, "the Germans would have been defeated in the field earlier and with greater calamity than in November 1918." Discipline won the war—the discipline that lasted longest. The fact that our discipline outlasted that of the Germans is due, says Mr Graham, to the character and leadership of our officers as a whole.

The author passes from his general insistence on the value, the absolute necessity of the sternest and most drastic training, and his recognition of the magnificent result from often unpromising material to the description of the worst side of that training as he saw, and underwent it. This is the chapter which has raised all the outcry among those who knew no better and who were not in the same position to judge as was Mr. Graham. His cool, unprejudiced impartiality inspires respect throughout. He catalogues those drill sergeants who were over brutal and those who were clean-mouthed and sympathetic. He notes how the Brigade sergeant-major watched against the men being struck on parade and against the use of the worst of the filthy language adopted by some instructors.

BUILDING UP THE GUARDS.

But he frankly describes the constant flow of humiliating language and treatment meted out by many of the instructing staff, even while he recognises how under this treatment the men (mostly of the working class in his time and many of poor material) were built up into the magnificent soldiers of the Guards. In effect he says, "It was often horrible, it was a strain on physical and mental endurance, it was to many revolting; but it made the Guards, whose pride was to look like the Guards to fight like the Guards and never to give way."

All this however forms but a small portion of this deeply interesting book in which the author describes his life while training. The history of the Battalion in France, the incidents of military life from Crown and Anchor to a "shot at dawn," French fighting and billet-flirting; he tells illuminating stories of all ranks, discourses on "padres and officers" and writes with a bright soberness on the Great Advance and the subsequent march to Cologne, always with graphic touches and with an absolutely impartial and fearless absence of prejudice. And ever and again rings out the note of pride in the Guards and recognition that their training had made them the soldiers that they were proud to be.

Mr. Graham ends on a fervent note in praise of esprit de corps as a substitute for any unnecessary harshness in training, and as the fine flower of the Army life and brotherhood. W. INGE.

"SOUVENIR COLLECTING."

Whilst in conversation the other day with an old friend whom I had suddenly met, I observed that he carried under his arm a large "O.H.M.S." envelope from which protruded several official envelopes of various sizes which appeared to have been rescued from the waste paper basket.

Unable to conceal my curiosity, I enquired of him the reason for this careful preservation of used envelopes to which he seemed quite pleased to explain.

He informed me that he was shortly leaving the Army, and that he had suddenly thought of a facile way of obtaining as a souvenir of his Army days something that he could keep in years to come as a war collection.

I confess I was mystified as I could not see any apparent utility in the collection of used "O.H.M.S." envelopes.

Seeing my look of puzzlement, he said, "Oh! its not the envelopes I'm after, but I am making a collection of the various official rubber stamp impressions of different units which appear on the envelopes," and diving into his overcoat pocket he produced a small cardboard box which contained quite a pile of neatly cut stamp impressions representing different units of the British Army.

"I've got quite a good collection now," my friend added, "though my only regret is that many Registry Clerks in different offices stamp the envelopes with such haste as to produce an illegible impression making them worthless for keeping."

I must admit that I was much struck with the idea and deemed it a novel collection.

This reminded me of many other curious collections indulged in by different men I have met. I recently knew a man whose collection hobby was the securing of as many sketchings and paintings as possible of the type to be found on the walls of nearly all Army offices.

I was privileged to see his stock which consisted of a large number of different sized sheets of paper of various qualities with punctures showing where some office worker had pinned his effort on the wall.

Another friend of mine, this time a clerk in the Q.M.A.A.C. used to devote a certain period all her evenings to her particular form of souvenir collecting.

When a recent large and important Headquarter's Office was closed down and hundreds of old C.R. files were destroyed, she would go through heaps of them at a time, and cut out from correspondence, signatures of Generals and War Office celebrities until she had a large and assorted collection of familiar and public war names.

Souvenir hunting is a common and natural tendency with everybody experiencing a changing environment, though it is a curious feature to observe the utter difference in the objects coveted. Perhaps this is as well, otherwise there would be many disappointed enthusiastic collecters.

I believe it would be safe to say that the commonest article sought for is the Regimental badge. A good collection in this direction is well worth having. What Tommy with a leather belt studded with different badges would go so far as to part with it?

Next to the badge comes perhaps the familiar "cartes-postales" of varying tastes which adorn the pocket wallet of nearly every Tommy.

Not a little sentiment must be attached to the general craze for souvenir collecting and I venture to think that in years to come some of those souvenirs which to-day seem eccentric and insignificant will prove the most alluring factor in striking a pleasant chord of memory of the days in which we now live.

UNION JACK.

TWO MINUTES.

The eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month! Trafalgar Square is about as near the centre of the Empire as you can get. It was there that I stood for the two minutes pause of recollection.

As a nation, perhaps, we do not do "set pieces" particularly well: it may be because when we attempt them they are so obviously "set."

But what made these one hundred and twenty brief seconds so touching was their spontaniety. As eleven o'clock was on the point of striking, everything stood still.

Five converging streams of traffic glided into immobility. A dozen pavements thronged with pedestrians came to a quiet standstill.

The great road of London's traffic changed suddenly to a great silence. Words cannot express the solemn pathos of this genius-inspired act of reverence.

On the top of every motor-bus the passengers stood up. Every man in plain clothes that one saw bared his head. Officers in uniform came to the salute, men in uniform—and not only men in uniform—stood to attention.

Quite close to me a taxicab driver, cap in hand, the image of "Old Bill" was obviously praying though still in his seat and very red in the face, as any saint in effigy. Women, perhaps a little inclined to show their emotion, seemed to be looking for a sign.

And in every direction as far as the eye could reach, a solid mass of petrified traffic blocked the ways. The booming of the maroons only gave point to this act of homage.

There were no "etceteras." London, in its myriad atoms, was remembering. And one felt that over all the world the Empire was remembering too.

It was a solemn, an unforgettable scene that Nelson looked down upon, and in its quiet, unstudied way no whit unworthy of him.

A pale winter sun—the first sun for days—shone down upon the vast assemblage. When the two minutes were over, life started, quite simply, to flow on again.

An hour and a half later the President of the French Republic drove in state from the Palace through that same Trafalgar Square, and the sky was as clear as, please God, the sky of Anglo-French friendship—so gloriously canopied by these last five years—will ever be. B.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX.

Our Readers' Varied Views.

WAS SHAKESPEARE GERMAN?

Sir,—I have heard it said that the Germans claims Shakespeare as one of themselves. I don't know on what evidence, if any, they base such a claim. It would be interesting to know. Can any readers familiar with German literary opinion give particulars?

Shakespeare was a mysterious personage—so much so, that many won't believe he wrote the plays attributed to him. But I won't venture on the interminable Baconian controversy.

Now I see it is claimed that Shakespeare was of Welsh descent. Mr. Frederick Harries in a recent book argues upon the Welsh ancestry of Shakespeare's mother and says: "It is proved that a considerable number of Welshmen were settled in Stratford-upon-Avon during the days of Shakespeare's youth. Among the names appearing in the town's records are those of Ap Roberts, Ap Rice, Ap Williams, Ap Edwards, Hugh Ap Shon, Howel Ap Howell, Evans Rice, Evans Meredith, and others." He even traces in Shakespeare's Puck the traditional Welsh fairy "Pwcca." Mr. Harries traces in detail through the plays similarities to Welsh thought and tradition.

Although we can't see Shakespeare played in Cologne there are many of us here who are ardent admirers of his genius and it would be interesting to hear more on the subject of the Bard's nationality.

H.H.H.

THE GUNNERS' OWN.

Sir,— Does every officer and man in the Royal Artillery on the Rhine know that some six months ago a monthly magazine and record of the Regiment made its appearance — "The Gunner"?

It is a most readable publication which ought to be in the hands of all ranks entitled to bear the proud motto "Ubique," but from enquiries made among the batteries out here it would appear not to be as well known as it deserves.

Commencing with the forthcoming Christmas number, "The Gunner" is, I understand, to be considerably improved, with Lieut.Col. Ewart (better known as "Boyd Cable") and Major Frank Fox in control; and appealing as it does to the 700,000 individuals who served as gunners during the war it should have a very large sale.

I have received a letter from Lieut. General W. T. Furse, Master General of the Ordnance, who is keenly interested in "The Gunner," inviting all individual gunners, institutes, canteens, clubs, etc., in Rhineland to subscribe to the the Royal Regiment's own magazine. It costs 2d. a month, and it is published at the Royal Artillery Institution, Woolwich.

CHARLES P. SISLEY, Lieut.
Rank Brigade R.G.A., Rhine Army.

WILL THE JAZZ GO?

Sir,

Dancing may have "been a flag"
When the world gyrated
Round and round in corkscrew twirls—
"Waltzing" — it was stated.

It is true you've never been
To the Ewige Lampe?
Choc'late cakes and "Her" I mean—
Dance, not whisky, Vampy?

"Granted Rhythm now is Rag" —
'Tis, you know, intended!
Try and "scan" your doggerel lines,
Broken, flat and rended. KID.

CHEERIO!

Sir,—The cry of the British used to be "Are we downhearted? No!" Many who shouted that gay defiant slogan in the face of discomfort, distress, danger and death are now no longer with us. But have they who defied doubt and fear taken that spirit with them to Valhalla and taken all of it?

For so many who write to find expression in your "Letterbox," complain of such little things, worry so much over small annoyances, nag ever so often at others, or show such dread and doubt of their own capacity to find and enjoy a good future, that one can only hope for a return from this neurasthenic, please-keep-me comfortable attitude to the strong breezy, confident, adventurous way of getting the greatest value out of to-day in work and appreciative enjoyment while preparing with a cheery interest for the unknown to-morrow — the way that has made the reputation and the empire of Britain.

Let us all have a respite from grousing, and looking round see what each of us can do for the whole of us. We are proud to be a brotherhood and community, not an incoherent mass of unattached and unrelated individuals. We are of the Army of Britain and we represent it. Let us each be very careful not to misrepresent it!

It should be unnecessary to insist that neither officer nor man should ever give occasion for bringing dishonour or lack of respect upon the uniform we wear and all that it stands for. That of course.

But we want more, much more. We want the maximum of that real regard, respect and interest, between all ranks which was the pride and the strength of our old Regular Army; we want the highest pitch of that esprit de corps which makes the keenest emulation in smartness, efficiency, conduct and sport of every unit a personal matter of every officer and man in it.

And it seems to me that we must throw away the growing tendency to grouse at small things, and remember that the world was not made for any one of us, but for all of us.

More sport, more esprit de corps, more real pride, more cheery helpfulness, and less individual and useless pleasure seeking, — above all no whimpering, that is what we want. The world is a jolly good place for those who stick together. And all the really best things cost nothing. Are we downhearted? No!

O.W.

[Several letters are crowded out to-day. The Editor is always pleased to receive communications from all ranks in the Rhine Army on any subject of general interest. Letters should be as brief as possible, and to the point.]

FOOTBALL'S SILENT SIGNALS.

Some tricks of the trade by which games are won.

BY

C. M. BUCHAN.

(SUNDERLAND AND ENGLISH INTERNATIONAL INSIDE RIGHT.)

Perhaps one of the most notable features of present-day football so far as the First Division is concerned, is the marked equality of the clubs. Between the team at the top of the League and the teams near the bottom there is really precious little difference in point of ability. If you doubt this statement watch the results week after week. You will find it particularly difficult to "spot the winners" of any particular contest, despite the fact that the opposing teams are a long way removed from each other in the league table.

The clubs being very much on the mark therefore, as regards ability to play the game, it naturally follows that a great deal must depend on what might be called the minor features of the contest. One clever trick successfully tried may mean the difference between a draw and a win, say, and in order to come out on top against opponents of equal skill, it is up to the players concerned to think quite a lot about the game and to develop these minor points to the furthest possible extent.

A TALK IN THE DRESSING-ROOM.

As captain of a side I always think that quite a lot can be done in the way of tending towards victory by carefully and seriously talking over the game beforehand and carefully weighing up the capabilities of one's opponents. Suppose your side is up against a team which plays what is termed the "one-back" game. It is obvious that the thing to do before going on to the field is to consider ways and means of counteracting such tactics. Other similar instances could be given to illustrate the value of a "talk over" before the game, and in fact it would scarcely be going too far to say that many a football match has been won in the dressing room before a ball has been kicked.

Understanding on the field of play too, is a very valuable asset, and many are the dodges which can be practised with good effect. By silent signals a player can very often convey his intentions to his side, and at the same time do a lot to deceive the opposition. As an instance of this, what may be called the pointing finger signal may be quoted. I saw this silent signal worked with telling effect the other day in a match in which we took part.

Our inside left had the ball at his toe, and a full-back came towards him to tackle. As the full-back approached, the inside left stretched out his left hand in the direction of where the outside left might have been expected to run. To the on-coming full-back this pointing hand seemed to indicate that the inside left was about to pass the ball to the outside man, and he so arranged his tackle as to cover such an eventuality. That was exactly what the inside left meant him to do, but, instead of passing, the man in possession of the ball swerved inwards into goal, and before the full-back could alter his move, the inside left had passed him, and had run on to score a very pretty goal. Thus was a silent signal used to deceive a defender.

"JUMPING OVER THE BALL."

Another trick which I have often seen used to produce a goal is what may be called the "jumping over the ball" dodge. This is how it is done. We will suppose by way of concrete illustration that our outside left puts the ball across to the centre of the field. In the ordinary way it would be picked up by our centre forward, and actually, the centre-forward shapes as though to take the ball in his stride. By doing so, he naturally draws the attention of the defenders to him. At the last moment, however, instead of taking the centre he jumps over the ball and allows it to pass on to me. As the centre-forward himself has drawn the defenders, it naturally follows that they are not paying over-much attention to me, and it is quite likely that the dodge of the centre-forward in jumping over the ball, leaves me with quite a possible goal-scoring opportunity.

And writing of jumping over the ball, reminds me of another dodge which must have been pre-arranged in order to be successful. Free kicks to the attacking side given just outside the penalty area are apt to be rendered more or less harmless by the defenders packing their goal. Incidentally, this packing is helped by many referees who do not insist that the players shall conform with the rule which says that they shall not approach within ten yards of the ball when a free kick is being taken.

However, when the opposition lines up to stop a free-kick from going goalwards, the man who apparently is going to kick the ball, makes as though to take the kick. Instead, he jumps over it at the last minute, and another man, who is "wise" to the dodge, dashes up behind and possibly takes the defenders off their guard. I have seen this trick worked successfully more than once, and as I have said that free kicks just outside the penalty area seldom bring any reward in the ordinary way, a dodge such as that mentioned is worth trying from time to time.

A QUICK THROW-IN.

Throws from the touch-line are another of those supposed advantages which very often fail to bring anything tangible, unless some sort of method has been thought out beforehand. For my part I am a great believer in the quick-throw-in, for although this job is usually delegated to the half-back there are many occasions in the average game when the outside wing man can pick up the ball quickly, and throw it in to much better advantage than would be gained by waiting for the half-back to come down the field from some remote spot. Signals to the thrower can very often be communicated too, and some teams seem to have a man or two whose special object is to put the opposition completely off the scent at a throw-in. You will often see this man running hard to some particular spot, and the opposition naturally comes to the conclusion that the ball will be thrown to him. It isn't however, but to some other player who is left uncovered by the anxiety of the other fellows to cover the man who has suddenly started to run.

And so one could continue writing of little dodges which may help to win matches. They don't always come off, naturally, but legitimate tricks are always worth trying. And the dodges done silently are much more likely to prove effective. It is sometimes necessary to shout instructions, but this method of conveying ideas should be avoided whenever possible, for not only does it convey information to your own men, but to the members of the other team as well.

GOAL-GETTERS.

Lane, of Blackpool, heads list with Seventeen.

NORWICH CITY'S RECORD.

Lane, of Blackpool, still heads the list of goal-getters in first-class football, the fine goal which gave his side the victory over Fulham bringing his individual total to 17 for the season.

Broad, of Millwall, and Browell, of Manchester City, come next, each having 14 to his credit.

The latter now takes pride of place in the First League at the expense of Kitchen, the Sheffield United centre-forward, who has been nursing an injury for several weeks. Kitchen and Morris, of West Bromwich Albion, share second place with 12 each. White (The Arsenal), Smith (Bolton), and Buchan (Sunderland) have each scored 10 goals.

In the Second League, Lane holds a lead of four points over the next men, Bliss, of Tottenham, and Cock, of Fulham, each of whom has scored 13 times. Halliwell, of Barnsley, with 10 goals, is the only other player with double figures to his credit.

Broad's Rival.

Broad's most formidable rival in the Southern League is Doran, the Norwich centre-forward, who has scored 12 goals, and is thus only two points behind the Millwall player. It is a remarkable fact that no fewer than 11 of these goals have been scored in Norwich City's five home matches, as follows: v. Newport, 2; v. Northampton, 2; v. Brighton, 2; v. Merthyr, 2; and v. Bristol Rovers, 3. A Norwich correspondent claims that Doran had scored 12 goals prior to last Saturday, when he got another. He is probably counting the point against Crystal Palace at Selhurst on September 20 to Doran's credit. As a matter of fact it was scored by Broadhead.

ENGLAND V. IRELAND.

Who's Who in Team to Represent England.

Writing on the English League team to oppose the Irish League at Liverpool on November 19, "W. Le. C." states: The honour bestowed on Curry, the Newcastle United half-back, has been well earned. This season he has come into the first rank and his displays have gained for him a popular place among Tynesider favourites. He is a splendid tackler, an untiring worker, and his splendidly placed passes have gone a long way to make the Magpies right wing the force it is to-day.

The inclusion of his clubmate Dixon as reserve is also popular on Tyneside. This player has graduated well with the "St. James" eleven.

Hardy for the citadel was a foregone conclusion and the presence of Longworth and Cook in the rear division spells strength. McCall is too well known to excite comment, as is also the left half, Watson of Burnley. The chosen forward line, reads well—on paper. They certainly appear a goal getting quintette.

The presence of Crisp, the popular West Bromwich winger is very gratifying to football followers. He is a player with a great future and his games this season stamp him as a star performer. Pennington likens him to "Billy" Bassett and no greater compliment could be paid.

The Irish team is composed of players who strike me as being well chosen. But the English team should triumph over the sons of Erin, and I confidently expect to see victory rest with the English League.

RUGBY TRAGEDY.

Forward Dies Suddenly During Match.

The Monmoutshire League versus Monmoutshire County Rugby match at Ebbw Vale had a tragic termination.

After ten minntes' play the players formed up for a line-out, when William Jones, the Crumlin forward, who substituted Coram (Newbridge), fell to the ground and was carried off the field.

Dr. Fabury, the Abertillery out-side-half, gave medical assistance, but Jones died from heart failure, and the match was immediately terminated with the League one try to the good.

Another Chapman.

S. Chapman, a brother of the Orient's centre-forward, has signed London Combination forms for the Homerton club. S. Chapman is a full-back, and he, too, has been identified with Southall.

TO-DAY'S MATCHES.

DERBY MEETING.

"Old Sol" Overcomes "King Snow."

A FAIR ATTENDANCE.

A fall of snow during the night at Derby rendered racing very doubtful on Thursday but strong sunshine during the morning improved the elements and, before a fair attendance, there was an interesting days racing. Results:

Hiraston Castle late:—1, Rock Ferry (7-2); 2, Glorette (10-1); 3, Glenbattie (8-1). Six ran.

Foston Plate:—Special walked over.

Osmaston Nursery Handicap:—1, Earofite (100-9); 2, Fair Helen (10-1); 3, Quick colt (2-1). Sixteen ran.

Allestree Plate:—1, Finchale (10-1); 2, Sober Wisdom (15-8); 3, Quick Thrust (100-8). Ten ran.

Chatsworth Plate:—1, Lady Peregrine (11-4); 2, Long Tail (4-1); 3, Caguette (100-8). Six ran.

Hardwicke Plate:—1, Gripest (2-1 on); 2, King Wilfred (7-1); 3, Sandooln (50-1). Three ran.

MANCHESTER HANDICAP BETTING.

Thursday's betting on the Manchester Nov. Handicap was as follows:—Chat Tor 11 to 2; Alaswam 7 to 1; King John 7 to 1; John Jackett 100 to 7. All taken and offered.

As a result of a telegraphic error Challow was given in our list of Manchester Nov. Handicap acceptances. It should have been Chat Tor.

FALKINER'S 3,000 LEAD.

Smith Clings to his Advantage over Newman.

At the close of play on Tuesday Falkiner was leading Inman, the champion, by more than three-thousand and at present stands a really strong chance of winning the match.

Smith is firmly clinging to his advantage over Newman and maintains a substantial lead.

Reece has evened matters up considerably in his match with Stevenson and is now only 500 points behind.

Closing scores:—

Falkiner (in play)	13,666
Inman	10,629
Smith (in play)	13,183
Newman	12,583
Stevenson	13,077
Reece	12,508

Layton, who partners the old Spur's back, Brittain, at Cardiff, is the brother of the old Sheffield Wednesday back of that name. His play is similar to that of his brother, sure, a strong kicker and a great tackler. He has had league experience with Aston Villa and Middlesboro.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

Next Sunday's Concert.

Miss Wanda Achsel, who has already won considerable popularity with Deutsches Theatre audiences, is announced to give a vocal recital at the Disch Hotel, Cologne, on Sunday at 7.30 p.m. The songs selected by Miss Achsel include several of the most tuneful of her numbers.

Bonn Amusements.

I hear that the Audrey Esmond concert party is "doing" Bonn next week, opening at the Grosse Saal on Monday. The artistes should prove a strong attraction, for their repertoire is full of good numbers while each member is a specialist in his or her department. The show is "popular" without being common and is good without being "high brow stuff." Shure thin, its a trate!

To-day's Concert at the "Y.M."

A special opportunity is given of hearing a very strong concert party to-day at the Cologne Central, Y.M.C.A. It is under the direction of Miss Audrey Esmond (contralto) who has sung in the Beecham Opera Company and includes Miss Eva Welda (violin) who has played in public from her fifth year and is under engagement to appear at the London Coliseum; miss Ethel Wilford, who has entertained delighted audiences at the London Queen's Hall; Mr. Charles Compton, a tenor who is well-known by frequenters at the Royal Albert Hall and London Opera House, Mr. James Silcott, who took the part of the Jester in "The King's Messenger;" and Mr. John Draper at the piano, who is capable of providing an evenings entertainment himself. The concert, which will commence at 7 p.m., will be preceded at 6 p.m. by an orchestral concert.

B.E.L.C. to open Skating Rink.

I hear that the British Empire Leave Club will shortly be opening a Skating Rink at the Volksgarten Restaurant, full particulars of which will shortly be announced. It will doubtless be much patronised in the winter months.

At the Club.

Additional supper tickets have been arranged for at the B.E.L.C. and in the morning, between 10 and 12, hot drinks, buns etc. can now be obtained.

"Remounts" Entertained.

A very enjoyable evening was the outcome of Miss Audrey Esmond's party's visit to the Remount Depot on Tuesday evening (by kind permission of the Commanding Officer, Lt.-Col. Lloyd). The concert opened with a piano selection from "Review" ably rendered by Mr. Herman Draper. Mr. Charles Compton then contributed "Macushla" and, as an encore, "Myrra", to the delight of an appreciative audience. Miss Eva Evalda charmed the gathering with lively violin selections, her "Popular Songs with Airs" being tremendously applauded.

Miss Audrey Esmond created a great impression with "Bells of St. Mary's" and then, in company with Mr. Charles Compton, sang two duets, Tosti's "Parted" and "Till we Meet Again." Miss Ethel Fulford's "Neverything," and that old favourite "Lena Schmidt" met with a great reception, and Mr. John Chilcott's "Unions" and "Looks" convulsed the audience.

Mr. Herman Draper accompanied throughout the evening, and did much to make the performance the marked success that it was. The curtain was rung down, apparently all too soon, from the point of view of the audience, with a concerted item entitled "Give me an English Song", all the artistes participating, and the singing of the National Anthem. A promise was given by the party, that they would once again pay the Remounts a visit before they concluded their tour, and whenever that may be, they can be certain of a very enthusiastic reception.

Classical Music "By Request."

Miss Dorothy Nash, of the Cologne Central Y.M.C.A. Staff, who has occasionally given pianoforte recitals in England and Cologne, responded on Monday to a request for a musical evening in the Y.M.C.A. Loreley Hall at which pieces should be rendered by her that were specially asked for by music-lovers in Cologne. Miss Nash's renderings were deeply appreciated and a basket of beautiful flowers was handed to her by a grateful audience.

Y.M.C.A. Posters.

I notice that a hint given by a correspondent of "The Cologne Post" to the Central Y.M.C.A. regarding the setting out of its daily posters has been promptly acted upon by Dr. Francis. The placards now bear across them, in large red type, the word "To-night" and thus the soldiers, who may not be aware that the posters are issued daily with reference only to the day's events, are in no doubt as to the date of such entertainments as they may wish to attend.

Musicians wanted.

I have been asked by the B.E.L.C. to say that the Club would be very glad to have the help of a 'cellist (cello provided) in order to form an Orchestra. Viola, Clarionet and Flute players are also required.

JACQUES.

CHARLES BUCHAN.

The Popular Wearside International Captain.

On this page will be found an article by the famous inside forward of the Sunderland Club. He has had a romantic career in first class football since he graduated with Leyton, the old Southern League team and all the football world knows the story of his transfer from the latter club.

Many covetous eyes were cast on this youth in those days and how near he came to appearing in a London arena is a sore subject Stamford Bridge way. Sunderland saw his worth and booked him for Wearside. Since his first game with them, he has gained many honours. His country recognised his sterling play by selecting him for the international games, but he is perhaps more proud of his league medal gained in 1912-13 when Aston Villa robbed the "Team of all the talents" of the dual honour by defeating them in the Cup final at the Palace. He forms part of the famous human triangle (Cuggy, Buchan and Mordue) and this dazzling combination has appeared for the "Rose," an honour which has seldom (if ever) occurred before.

During the war he assisted Chelsea, and the London club would dearly wish that he was again in their ranks. He had a difference with the Wearside directorate and publicly stated that he would not appear again in the familiar red and white jersey. However, the breach was healed and he is once again appearing for his old club.

His value to them can be estimated from his goal scoring record. There is no more popular player at Roker Park then "Charlie" Buchan, captain and idol of the famous Nor' East Club.

OUR NINTH CONTEST.

The More Coupons Sent The Greater The Chance.

It is now over two months since we began this popular feature. During this period we have paid out in prizes the sum of 15,826 marks and this is testimony to the fact that our contest is appreciated.

To-day we publish our ninth coupon, and competitors have another opportunity of testing their football skill. It is of interest to note that practically all the winners have entered three or more coupons, thus allowing for certain inevitable surprises.

We would point out again that no limit is placed upon the number of coupons submitted. A recent winner had been a competitor from the commencement and his perseverance had its due reward.

Coupons must be addressed:—

FOOTBALL CONTEST No. 9,
"Cologne Post",
A.P.O. S.40 Rhine Army.

List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.
2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.
3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for any reason, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.
4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.
5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into. Neither will interviews be granted.
6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.
7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, mislaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.
8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.
9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

FOOTBALL COMPETITION No. 9.

Date of matches, Saturday, Nov 22nd.
Closing date, Friday, Nov. 21st.

Entertainments at "The Central."

Every evening of this week, an hour's concert is being given in "The Central" by the Gilbert and Sullivan party. A new programme is given each evening and the attendances always fill the great hall. In the absence of one of the Concert Party, through indisposition, Capt. Sykes has very kindly acted as accompanist and taken a part in the vocal quartettes. Each evening, the concert is preceded (from 6 to 7) by an orchestral programme and succeeded (from 8 to 9.30) by a cinema entertainment, new films being shown on every occasion.

GUY'S FLAG LOWERED.

Light Blues break Hospital's Fine Record.

Cambridge played what is likely to be their most important match before meeting Oxford, when they opposed Guy's Hospital, who had beaten the Dark Blues earlier in the term. A very large and enthusiastic crowd saw a really great game, played with all the energy it is possible to put into Rugby, the Light Blues winning by 8 points to 3.

Previously Guy's had taken part in seven matches and won them all, with an aggregate of 203 points to 6. The Light Blues, too, had won seven games off the reel, with an aggregate of 201 points to 14, but they could claim no such achievements as the victories of Guy's over Oxford University and United Services.

Johnstone, the old Palace goalkeeper, who is a native of a village near Nottingham, is keeping goal in great style for Notts Forest this season.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE IN A NUTSHELL.

Garnett's Mount in Derby Cup.
Kroo-boy II., the Lincoln winner, will be steered in the Derby Cup by H. Leader's apprentice, Garnett.

Kid Lewis for England.
A private cable from New York yesterday states that Ted (Kid) Lewis has sailed for England in the Lapland.

No League Match.
Having no League fixture on Dec. 6, Millwall have arranged for a team from the London Command to visit the Den on that date.

French Jockey's Engagement.
W. Head will ride next season for M. Charles Lienart, the Belgian owner who is getting a nice string of jumpers together in France.

Shah goes a-racing.
The Shah of Persia attended Auteuil races on Sunday and was greatly interested. He asked to be presented to two of the owners of winners, M. Wattinne and M. Veil Picard.

Hendren Resumes.
Hendren is expected to be recovered from an ankle injury and to take the outside-right position in the Brentford side against Reading at Griffin Park to-day, and Morley will partner him. B. Rosier, who has signed professional forms, remains at outside-left.

A Break-down.
Condottiere broke down badly in the Breadsall Plate at Derby.

Retention and Sale.
Shoemaker was retained at 400 guineas, and Cylgar sold to Mr. Hugill for 750 guineas at Derby.

Corn Sack's 3lb Extra.
Garnett could not do the weight on Corn Sack in the Markeaton Plate, and Weston, who had the mount, had to put up 3lb, overweight.

Doncaster Racecourse.
The Doncaster Race Committee recommend that new premises be erected to afford accommodation for Stewards' rooms, jockeys' weighing-room and dressing-room, and office for clerks of the course.

Hulme Qualifies.
Hulme concludes his apprenticeship with the Manchester Meeting. First claim on his services in 1920 will be held by his old stable, controlled by R.C. Dawson, and second claim will be held by Mr. Watkin Williams.

Rapid Bookings.
The only available seats for the Beckett v. Carpentier contest at Holborn Stadium on December 4 are a few at 10 guineas and less than 60 at 25 guineas. A large contingent of French sportsmen have booked seats at 25 guineas.

Full Strength.
Preston North End will be at full strength against Chelsea to-day.

"Treasured" Cheque.
West Ham have had framed and hung in the directors' room the cheque with which they paid the £500 fine inflicted upon them by the Southern League.

Another Mare for the Stud.
Lady Juliet ran her last race when making very little show in the Harborough Handicap at Leicester, as it is her owner's intention to put her to the stud next season.

Snow Interferes.
The concluding half of the 72-holes challenge match for £100, in which Whiting (Ilkley) and Gaudin (Alwoodley) opposed Gray (Dewsbury) and Day (Ganton), had to be postponed on account of the Ganton links being covered with snow.

Blackheath's XV.
Against Oxford University on the Rectory Field to-day, Blackheath will be represented by: B. S. Cumberlege; G. F. Wood, R. P. Burgoyne-Johnson, H. W. Taylor and S. W. Harris; H. Coverdale and A. K. Horan; C. H. Pillman, W. S. D. Craven, L. P. B. Merriam, F. W. Mellish, L. W. Haslett, A. P. B. Roberts, E. A. Dussek, and H. Ll. Hughes.

Carslake Goes Home.
Carslake leaves for Australia on December 2, but will return in time for next year's Lincoln spring meeting.

School Success.
At Windsor, Felsted School beat the Imperial Service College by seven goals and one try to nil. The tries were scored by Moller (5), Tomlinson (2), and Hennesy, Fee-Smith converting all but one.

Coleman Thrown.
In the Breadsall Plate Satwell was weighed out for by Coleman, but the horse bolted and threw his jockey and did not come under starter's orders. Coleman was rather badly hurt.

Increased Stakes.
Greatly increased prizes are to be given during the coming jumping season at Manchester. £2,000 will be put up for a hurdle race in March, this being the largest prize ever offered for hurdling in the United Kingdom.

West Ham To-day.
West Ham against Leicester City to-day will have the assistance at outside right of P. Allen, who is now demobilized, while Palmer will be on the opposite wing, Bradshaw being indisposed. As Tresadern is at liberty to play again after his suspension, he will replace Lane at right-half.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Vain Regrets.

One recently demobbed sportsman, writing from Norfolk to continue his subscription to the "Post" says: "Rather afraid I must eventually cease my subscription, as each time I receive your paper I wish I were in Cologne." And I know he is not the only one who occasionally regrets having gone to the Home Front.

What Regiment?

One soldier reading to a friend: "Colonel James, M.F.H. arrived at the meet with his wife." Friend: "M.F.H.? What regiment is that? Never 'eard of it."

An Hospital Cinema.

The patients at the 25th. General Hospital are eagerly looking forward to the completion of the Cinema which is in course of erection. Informal debates, concerts and whist drives are at present the chief sources of amusement, but "the pictures" have a strong attraction and will help to pass the long winter evenings.

Air Literature.

What sort of literary matter does the young German read most on the trams? The daily papers excepted, I will stump for periodicals dealing with aviation.

Chocolate Pictures.

Have you noticed that the German chocolate firms issue small photographs of Rhineland with their products? These I believe are collected by the younger generation much as the popular cigarette pictures were, in England.

Path Obstructions.

It is bad enough to find buckets of refuse left out on the paths late in the morning but when one has to dodge these at night, the amusing side of the game is not apparent.

War Postcards.

A picture postcard shop I know specialises in pictures of the Somme battlefield and my curiosity is aroused by one depicting a French peasant with a wa on and team of horses in the shambles of Bapaume. He is surrounded by groups of German soldiery. When, I wonder, was that photograph taken?

Pears to Munch.

Apropos a correspondent's complaint regarding the sale of newspapers at the entrances to places of amusement I had a bag of pears thrust into my face at the entrance of one last evening. What will it be when fruit is unobtainable? Chip potatoes?

Tickets Please.

A civilian booking office near the Dom issues, so it says, tickets to all the principal stations in "England, Schottland, and Irland." What about Wales?

The Latest Books.

Among the new books just added to the Y.M.C.A. Central Library are Boyd Cable's, The Old Contemptibles; Temple Thurston's, World of Wonderful Reality; B. M. Croker's, Blue China; Henry Newbolt's, The Book of the Long Trail; Jerome K. Jerome's, All Roads lead to Calvary; T. G. Masaryk's, Spirit of Russia; Stanley Weyman's, The Great House; and V. Blasco Ibanez, The Four Horseman of the Apocalypse. Everyday new arrivals come in and any soldier can be sure of keeping up to date when reading if he borrows his books from the Y.M.C.A.

Less Noise.

Many readers ask if a more tranquil spot couldn't be found for the new reading and writing room at the "Earwig" than a few yards from the band.

Spectacled Police.

The German authorities, unlike our own, do not bar a man wearing spectacles from entering the Police force. Just lately I have noticed many of the Rhineland police wearing them.

Any Old Music.

Someone I know saw a film called "Wooden Shoes" at a Cologne Cinema the other day. It was a Dutch subject so quite appropriately the band played Scottish airs while the film was functioning.

Your Weight.

What was especially noticeable in the early days of occupation was that practically every ten-pfennigs-in-the-slot weighing machine, whether at railway station or in restaurant, was "Kaput." Many of them however are again in working order, and the necessary instructions appear in English for Tommy's benefit.

An Enthusiast.

I came across a gunner officer yesterday who told me he had been to the opera forty times in the last two months. Can anyone go one better?

Car Accident.

I noticed yesterday what might have been easily a serious accident. A soldier who was crossing in front of a car slipped and fell under the vehicle. Only the promptness of the German driver in applying his brakes saved Tommy from serious injury.

German Toys.

In the window of a Cologne shop hangs a large card bearing the following announcement: "We have a large selection of toys for English children in Rhineland."

Wanderlust.

I have received a letter from a friend of mine, recently demobbed, in which he points out a harrowing picture of the humdrum existence in Blighty contrasted with what he terms "the glorious days in Cologne." Although he is in a fairly lucrative position the spirit of adventure has taken hold of him, and he is now seeking a position as steward on one of the South African liners.

The Latest Fashion.

I have noticed a great number of Germans lately who have taken to wearing two watches, one on each wrist. Is this the new fashion?

No Sinecure.

The Disposal Board at Cologne has a long and tedious job in front of it. There are tons upon tons of material to sell and hundreds of motor vehicles to ship to England. And the transport difficulty is acute.

Goloshes.

An English wife intent upon shopping donned her goloshes and sallied forth. Slowly but surely it dawned upon her that her feet were coming in for unaccustomed attention. She is now asking her friends if such shoe protection is scarce in Germany. Perhaps because of the rubber shortage.

RHINELANDER.

OPINIONS OF THE MOMENT.

THE PRINCE IN CANADA.

Mr. W. T. Massey, the "Daily Telegraph" correspondent writing from Montreal, says:—Beyond question he is the most popular man who has ever been in Canada. These democratic people regard him as a democratic Prince, and one of themselves, animated by the same ideals, with the same broad and optimistic outlook. I am sure the feeling of Canada to-day could not be better expressed than by those two elderly women, who, standing near the railway track, held a sheet on which were the words: "Better loved ye canna be; will ye no come back again?"

THE NATIONAL THEATRE.

Mr. William Archer pleading for the establishment of a National Theatre says:—The war has made the lack of a National Theatre a more manifest and crying gap in our equipment. It is more than a national, it is an imperial institution that we require—a place of pilgrimage for all who speak the language which Shakespeare has made the most glorious of birthrights. Let us remember that London has a very formidable rival for the primacy among English-speaking cities. Surely the city where, after all, Shakespeare lived and worked has wealth and energy enough to lead the way, instead of ignominiously following suit.

FASTER TRAFFIC.

Sir Eric Geddes, speaking at the annual banquet to the Society of Motor Manufacturers said:—For long distance road traffic there must be suitable roads in this country. The traffic has got to go faster. The man with the red flag on the roads must disappear and slow traffic must no longer interfere with faster traffic. If I can manage it or live long enough in my job to do it—I will get good roads. The first step my Department has taken in this direction is the classification of roads by which means through routes will be established. I think a tax or a levy on the users of the roads is coming.

WHY DOLES SHOULD CEASE.

Col. J. R. Pretyman Newman, M.P., Chairman of the Middle Classes Union, writing in favour of the abolition of unemployment benefit, says:—I am strongly opposed to doles in principle, as they have a most demoralising effect on the recipients. I regard the present system as an emergency device which should be dropped as soon as possible. What I object to is the appalling lavishness of the scheme and the indiscriminate, and too often dishonest, way in which the dole has been dealt out. There is not, I venture to say, any middle class employer of labour, no matter how small, who could not give instances of glaring dishonesty that have come under his notice. If the State can bring forward a well-thought out and actually sound unemployment insurance scheme, to affect all workers who may choose to come under it, and to be contributed to by employers, employees, and the State, in just and equal proportions, we should certainly give such a scheme sympathetic consideration.

SECRET DIPLOMACY.

M. Cambon in a recent address said:—A reproach addressed to diplomatists is that of carrying on secret diplomacy. I own that I have never understood what people mean by secret diplomacy in a free country, where the Governments cannot conclude any agreement of a nature to bind the policy of the nation without having recourse to Parliament. People mean, perhaps, the negotiations preparatory to an agreement, and try to compel us to transact all business in public. Can one imagine in any business, either political or private, negotiations being carried on in the full light of day? Can you see a financier, a manufacturer, a merchant giving his schemes and conversations to publicity?

'BOBBY' AS A MODEL.

Sir Edward Cooper, Lord Mayor of London, writing of the League of nations says:—London, throughout its history, has stood more than any other place for two characteristics of the British people: love of order and resistance to tyranny. Take, for instance, that every-day London spectacle of a policeman regulating traffic at a busy cross-roads. What a complex mass are those vehicles, with their differing speeds, sizes, and directions; and yet how smoothly on the whole they all proceed, and how instinctively they submit to be controlled by that one uniformed man! And what a chaos there would be without him! Why is it that they all so naturally obey him? Well, is it not simply that most of them tacitly recognise that he is acting for the common good of them all, and that if a few are too selfish to realise that they know that behind that policeman is the authority of the law, which all their fellow-citizens are pledged to support? That is the system which we want now to see extended to the whole world, and the League of Nations offers a means for doing it.

WAR CHRISTMASES.

Write your Experiences.

In addition to the prizes we are offering for short Christmas stories, we invite our readers to send us their personal experiences of the Christmases they have spent since the beginning of the war.

We require one for each of the years 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917 and will give 50 marks for the best short description of a Christmas spent in the Army in each of those years. There will therefore be four prizes — one for each year of the war.

The length of these descriptive articles must not exceed 500 words each

Typewritten copy is preferred but not essential.

The latest date for receiving them will be November 20th and they must be addressed 'Christmas" Cologne Post. A.P.O./S. 40 Rhine Army.

ECONOMIC NOTES ON FINANCE AND TRADE.

II. MONEY.

Almost everybody has heard of what are called 'Social Laws.' A Social Law is a statement showing the relations between a man's action and the causes of that action considered in the social group in which he moves. We are only concerned in Economics with those actions the strength of which can be measured with a money price. This immediately brings us into contact with the word 'wealth.'

Speaking very broadly wealth is anything that satisfies a human material want and thus can nearly always be said to consist of material goods. We need not concern ourselves here with the many variations of the use of the word wealth; its introduction here is made because of its obvious relation to value.

Now in Economics we find two meanings for the word value. Firstly we have the Value of the wealth on goods in themselves which is the measure of their Utility, and secondly their value in exchange. It is this latter meaning that we almost invariably use. In ancient times the Phoenicians brought woven cloths to Cornwall and took away tin in return. The purchase was made by exchange of goods for goods known as Barter. This was found in time to be so cumbersome that a medium of exchange was necessary.

This medium of exchange is what we know as money. It may be any substance whatsoever, but most countries have adopted either gold or silver or both. Thus the Phoenicians brought, say, three rolls of cloth and took away 1 ton of tin. That is to say, the value in exchange of 1 ton of tin was three rolls of cloth.

Nowadays we should express it by saying that the value in exchange of 1 ton of tin was £3 and the value in exchange of 1 roll of cloth was £1.

* * *

The phrase value in exchange is denoted in modern commerce by the word price. It is important to notice that price is measured by money, which itself has a price, and we shall see later how this price of money re-acts on prices of goods.

It is the subject of money that I wish to bring to your especial notice. It very soon became obvious to merchants that money must have certain attributes and it was discovered that roughly speaking there were 6 absolute essentials. Of these general acceptability was the most important.

Then came the necessity for some sort of stability of value and the need for this value to be easily recognised by either touch, sight or weight. It must be able to stand a large amount of wear and tear and lastly it must be capable of being subdivided with ease. The first few attributes were easily found in the precious metal gold, and it is in great measure to the forces that fixed our sovereign and preserved its integrity that we find we owe the position that Lombard Street holds in the world's money market.

The reason that our sovereign is accepted everywhere is because it contains 20/- worth of gold.

* * *

In course of time it was discovered that a merchant of good standing could give a 'promise to pay' instead of handing over the real money, and as he was known to be a good reliable man other people would accept this paper promise as "as good as gold." This promise became known as a note.

By further evolution the merchant found that whilst he had £1000 in his coffers he could give out several of these notes. He knew by experience that they would not be presented for payment immediately. The first merchants to do this were the goldsmiths and they made out a statement something like this:—

Liabilities.

Recd. from and due to A . . £1000
Notes not yet presented for payment £3000

The other side showed their Assets.

Gold in hand. £1000
Loans to and recoverable from traders. £3000

We thus see that the trading value of the £1000 in gold has been trebled. In this way a system of credit arose—(Latin verb:—credo, I believe.) It was a system of mutual indebtedness between the traders and the bankers.

MUTUAL CONFIDENCE.

Sir Vincent Caillard, President of the Federation of British Industries speaking of the violent reaction which has taken place since the war says:—It took the form with labour of a rather pronounced attack of strike fever; why should not the results arrived at after a strike be reached before? I believe that so far as employers were concerned, they do not as a general rule take their employed sufficiently into their confidence and let them know what is passing in their minds. The answer to the question, "is the fever spreading?" lies mainly with labour. They had, in the past, been too irresponsible, and did not realize the immense responsibility lying on them to increase, instead of stopping production in a most critical time; they had been trying to go too fast whereas by patience and friendly negotiation they could have gained quite as much as by stoppage.

NO SIGNS OF WAR.

Mr. Ward Muir writing of London today says:—How rapidly, too, are the wounds of war being effaced from London! It is already merely ridiculous to tell your country cousin that, on the exact spot where he is standing, a Zepp. dropped an explosive which killed seven people. You cannot even point to shrapnel holes on the wall. They have been carefully filled in and effaced. No tablet marks the scene of the tragedy. And it is useless to refer back to the illustrated papers of the period; for the censorship forbade the publication of pictures of those occurrences—occurrences so fantastic that, recalling them, we already begin to doubt our memories of the details.

He Won't.

"Shoot!" yelled an enthusiast to a player from behind a goal in the Stadtwald recently. The players so advised did so, and a rocket drive which left the goalkeeper helpless, caught his adviser a beauty, full in the face. "Bet he won't forget that goal "said a nearby spectator.

FROM EVERYWHERE.

No Sales.—Two thousand Cairo shop assistants are on strike.

Strange.—Holborn National Kitchen is being run at a profit.

Brewers Mournful.—There is no hope of a reduction in the licensing duty.

Another Spa.—A hot mineral water spring has been found near Sheffield.

Paris Plight.— Emergency journals are being put on the streets of Paris.

Good News.—The potato crop just lifted at home is unusually free from disease.

Prejudice.—Stepney's new Mayor wears no robes, only his chain of office.

Powerful.—The British Industries Federation claims to represent 18,000 firms.

Plucky Woman.—Sheffield Labour councillors have elected a woman as leader.

Ambitious.—Dublin is ambitious and is about to spend over a million on port improvement.

World's Costliest Ship. — H.M.S. Hood excluding guns, ammunition and stores cost over five millions.

What Then?—The largest Labour conference ever held takes place in London next month to consider nationalisation.

And The Next. — Having tired of tree chopping the ex-Kaiser is said to be writing a play.

Tired Of His Hobby. — Lord Milford Haven is selling his naval medals next month.

Daring. — A Continental cinema actor secured his horse to a balloon from which both dropped to earth by parachute.

Result Of Dancing Craze. — Ostrich feathers are returning to favour with the woman of fashion.

Quite Right.—Insanity is made a ground for divorce in a Bill passed by Victoria.

Their Labours Over.—The American and British delegations to Peace Conference leave Paris early next month.

In Aid Of Restoration.—Lille exhibition is to be held from May to October next year.

The Dole.—The House of Commons is to discuss the question of the continuance of the out-of-work donation next week.

Seekers Of Fortune. — Fifteen hundred ex-Service men are bound for East Africa this month under the Government Scheme.

Select Company.—At a dinner held at Sydney on Armistice Day twenty-seven V.C.'s sat down together.

An Army. — Accommodation for 10,800 Government officials is being provided at Acton, Earl's Court and Alexandra Palace.

Strange. — Although a Battersea man had an income of £300 a year he died of starvation.

The Census. — Preparations for the census which takes place next year are now in hand.

Prince's party. — The Prince of Wales is giving a party to 1,000 New York children aboard H.M.S. Renown.

What L. G. reads.—The Prime Minister's favourite reading in these days is said to be the Russian Wireless.

Wanted.—Owing to shortage of houses the week-end cottage is said to be doomed.

The "Bravest Street".— Three hundred men went to the war from 150 houses in Trafalgar street, Walworth Road, London.

New rich.— Where boys in slums used to pay for things by instalments they now put down a lump sum.

Home.—Four destroyers recently serving in the Baltic have returned to Devonport.

An Offshoot.—The British Military Mission at present in Finland is a branch of the British Mission to the Baltic States.

The Future.—The question of Montenegro's future is at present engaging the attention of the Supreme Council in Paris.

Men in Mauve?—King Alfonso has created a stir in the sartorial world by the mauve evening dress he wears.

Gun as Old Iron.—Clacton's German field gun has been put in the town yard side by side with a disused water tank.

Toy Profiteering.—It is likely that toys will be added to the profiteering schedule before Christmas.

Any Others?—The Government has received £150,000 worth of War Stock for cancellation as a thankoffering for victory.

Britain's Representative.—The British Government will probably be represented at the meeting of the Council of the League of Nations by the Foreign Secretary.

Protection.—A Bill to increase Compensation payable under the Workmen's Compensation Act will probably be introduced next week.

Remembrance Day incident. — A prisoner, who was subsequently sentenced to death stood with bowed head at Nottingham.

Hut Colonies.—Complaints are made at Sheffield that while empty houses are scarce huts formerly occupied by munition workers are standing empty.

Women Employees.—The number of women employed by British Railway Companies on November 11th 1918 was 55,752. That number was reduced by July 30th to 34,545.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

Can you write one?

Christmas will soon be here, and "The Cologne Post" wishes to encourage its readers to write short Yuletide stories suitable for publication in its columns at that festive period.

They can be on any subject and in any vein but they must not exceed 1000 words in length.

We offer prizes of 150 marks, 100 marks, and 50 marks respectively for the three best received and published, and any others we may think worthy of publication will be paid for at our regular rates.

If possible manuscripts should be typewritten, though this is not essential.

The last date for receiving Christmas stories will be November 20th. Envelopes should be addressed "Story Editor" 'Cologne Post" A.P.O. S/40, Rhine Army.

BUSY REGISTRAR GENERAL.

LAST QUARTER'S BABY BOYS AGAIN OUTNUMBER THE GIRLS.

POINCARÉ'S FAREWELL MESSAGE.

BIRTH RATE.

REGISTRAR'S SATISFACTORY RETURNS.

The Registrar General's quarterly return for England and Wales was issued last night. It shows that the number of births during the quarter ended 30th September were 175,367, or 26,545 more than the preceding quarter, and 6,916 more than the corresponding quarter of 1918. Of these no fewer than 11,166 babies were born out of wedlock, being 340 more than the corresponding quarter of 1918. The proportion of male to female children showed a marked increase, being in the ratio of 1,058 to 1,000, while the average proportion in the ten preceding third quarters was 1,041 to 1,000.

Deaths during the quarter under notice totalled 89,112, being 25,106 less than the corresponding quarter of 1918. Deaths of infants under one year of age were only seventy per thousand, being thirty-four per thousand below the average for the ten preceding corresponding quarters and the lowest record for any quarter. The number of marriages during the quarter ended 30th June was 202,142, an increase of 81,866 over the preceding quarter and 67,906 more than in the corresponding quarter of 1918.

ARMISTICE TRUANTS.

FRENCH SCHOOLBOYS TAKE FRENCH LEAVE.

The non-observance of Armistice Day was not at all to the taste of the Paris schoolboys. Some 500 played truant,—they belonged to the Lycées—and held a meeting at which the chief speaker said:—

Shall we allow the great event which to-day commemorates to pass by unnoticed? We ought to have had a holiday. As we were not given one, let us take one. I invite you to go one better than our friends across the Channel and set aside not two minutes but the whole day.

They accordingly took the day.

QUICK CLIMBING.

NEW AVIATION RECORD.

An aeroplane piloted by a warrant officer named Brotce has beaten the record for rapid ascent. At Montecelio Aerodrome, near Rome, his machine climbed successively 5,000 metres in eleven minutes and one thousand metres in forty-seven seconds.

SIR EVELYN WOOD, V.C.

GIVES UP HUNTING AT 82.

Field Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., who has been unwell since Saturday, has decided to give up hunting and is selling his hunters. This is only one of the veteran Field Marshal's strenuous pursuits. He is 82 years of age, and his other recreations include shooting, cycling and lawn tennis!

ORDER YOUR POST NOW.

One of the most gratifying features of our daily post bag is the number of postal subscriptions received from home and elsewhere. Yesterday we received one from Italy, and we have reason to know that we shall have a very large number of subscribers at Danzig. Many soldiers send it home as a daily message, and it is pleasant to know that it constitutes such a firm link between old friends and the many new ones it makes. Can we add your name to the list?

RAILWAY STRIKE AT DUBLIN.

Because one man, already a trade unionist, refused to join a certain other union, 1,400 men in the goods and works department at Dublin of the Great Southern and Western Railway went on strike. The goods service was suspended overnight, and the passenger service has been considerably curtailed.

GRANTS TO DISABLED MEN.

During the week ended November 8, the Council of the King's Fund, Millbank House, 2, Millbank, S.W.1, made 651 grants. Of these, 343 were to disabled officers and men and 308 to the widows and dependents of the fallen. The total thus disbursed was £22,137 16s. 8d.

INQUEST ON LORD BRASSEY.

An inquiry into the death of Lord Brassey, who died after being knocked down by a taxicab, was held on Friday. A verdict of accidental death was returned, the driver being exonerated from blame.

POINCARÉ'S VISIT.

THANKS THE BRITISH FOR HIS RECEPTION.

As President Poincaré went aboard the steamer at Dover on Friday on the conclusion of his visit to Great Britain, he handed to Reuter's special correspondent the following autograph letter.

"I do not know how to try to express to the British people the gratitude I feel for the reception accorded on all sides to the representatives of the French nation. I have delightful recollections of my visit in 1913, but on the present occasion have found something deeper and more serious in the feelings of the British people.

"Our friendship, if I may say so, is being sanctified by our common sufferings and at the same time ennobled by our common victory. This friendship is now strong enough to ensure for the future the collaboration in mutual confidence of both countries. Hitherto the union of the two peoples has been the work of Government and diplomacy, but to-day it is the peoples themselves who have united and who say to their Governments of to-day and to-morrow and of all time, 'never again shall we be divided.'"

(signed) POINCARÉ.

MESSAGE TO THE KING.

On leaving Dover, President Poincaré telegraphed in the names of the French visitors to King George conveying his cordial thanks to His Majesty and Queen Mary for the delightful attentions paid them during their visit. He said that everywhere the British people has shown its sympathy with the French people, with a warmth and unanimity by which he was deeply touched and it made him feel more than ever how indissoluble are the ties uniting the two countries. The brotherhood of arms he said, has become a brotherhood of heart and mind, which will enable the two countries to work henceforth side by side in peace for the good of humanity. The King, in his reply, said the welcome President Poincaré had received was proof not only of his own personal regard for him but of British affection for France, which had been strengthened by brotherhood in arms.

His Majesty warmly reciprocated Poincaré's hopes that the two nations would go forward together in the work of the general re-establishment of peace along the paths of civilisation and progress.

BIG FIRE AT VICTORIA.

SOUTH EASTERN LINE OBSTRUCTED.

Victoria (S.E. and C.R.) Station was in danger on Wednesday night from a fire which broke out at Bishop's Furniture Depository, Pimlico. It continued to rage until six o'clock on Thursday morning, and practically the whole of the wall abutting on the station collapsed. Part of it fell across the permanent way, blocking four sets of metals, with the result that certain traffic had to be diverted to other termini.

At a critical period a call came from another outbreak in Lupus-street, a quarter of a mile away, and here the fire-men were assisted by soldiers and civilians.

The damage will amount to nearly half a million. A considerable quantity of valuable furniture from West End districts had been stored at the depository, and practically everything was destroyed. Some thirty or forty fire insurance companies will bear the loss.

BRITISH GUIANA.

INDIGNANT AT SUGGESTION OF CESSION.

A message from Georgetown (British Guiana) says that responsible public opinion in the colony is outraged at the suggestion of Lord Rothermere that British Guiana and some of the West Indian Islands should be ceded to America in liquidation of British liabilities. The Governor immediately dispatched a telegram to the Colonial Secretary stating that the elected members of the Legislature strongly deprecate Lord Rothermere's suggestion. Such a step would arouse acute resentment of the whole community, who are proud to belong to the British Empire. A resolution will be moved in the Legislature denouncing the project as extremely obnoxious.

UNAVAILING REGRETS.

Another batch of rioters and beer looters was sentenced at Liverpool yesterday. Seventeen women received from one to nine months' imprisonment and thirteen men from four to eighteen months. All had violently resisted the police and military in addition to their extensive depredations. The women received their sentences with shrieks and moans.

PUSSYFOOT'S EYE.

SEVERE INJURY IN STUDENT'S RAG.

Mr. W. E. "Pussyfoot" Johnson informed a Press representative yesterday that he had passed a pretty bad night, with a considerable amount of pain. He could see nothing on Thursday night owing to the injury to his eye but yesterday he could just see, at any rate dimly. His back was also hurt when the students were hoisting him on the stretcher.

The damage to "Pussyfoot's" eye was inflicted by a hard missile, which hit him just at the moment of his rescue by the police. It was not flung by a student but by a hooligan in the crowd. "Pussyfoot" declares that otherwise he enjoyed the whole experience.

BRITISH WHEAT.

BIGGEST HARVEST FOR 25 YEARS.

This year's yield of wheat (7,979,000 quarters) is, apart from last year (the highest on record) and 1915, the highest since 1895. It is nearly half a million quarters above the average for the last ten years. The yield per acre (28·4 bushels), however, is below the average for the last ten years, and 4 1-5 bushels below last year. The wheat was produced from a smaller area than the average.

Barley (5,476,000 quarters) is 600,000 quarters lower than 1918, and, with the exception of 1915 and 1916, in the smallest crop since 1885. The production of oats, with the exception of last year, is the highest for 12 years, but here again the yield per acre is nearly four bushels below the average.

The hay crop, 5,195,000 tons, was the smallest since 1893, and only about three-quarters of last year's yield.

EX-OFFICERS OUT OF WORK.

COMMITTEE OF BUSINESS MEN.

A strong Committee of business men, with Viscount Burnham as chairman, has been formed in connection with the work of the London District Directorate of the Appointments Department of the Ministry of Labour.

The Committee's first business will be to consider the growing problem of finding suitable employment for the large and increasing numbers of ex-officers and others in the London district whose qualifications can only be described as "clerical."

BURIAL OF HERR HAASE.

CEREMONY IN REICHSTAG.

The funeral of Herr Haase at Berlin was made the occasion of a great demonstration by his party friends.

As Herr Haase was shot on the threshold of the Reichstag that building was allowed to be used for the ceremonial preceding the interment. The interior was lavishly decorated with evergreens and the tribunes were hung with the party banners, the prevailing colour being the Socialist red.

The Reichstag was crowded with sympathizers. Speeches were delivered in praise of Herr Haase, after which his ashes were conveyed to the cemetery accompanied by immense crowds bearing innumerable wreaths.

BLOOD-RED.

TROTZKY'S NEW DECORATION.

A Helsingfors telegram says that Trotzky has been decorated with the Order of the Red Banner for his defence of Petrograd. The Emir of Bokhara is reported to have informed Denikin that he is prepared to assist in expelling the Bolshevists from Turkestan.

The latest communiqué from the Russian North West Army states that the White troops in the region of Gdov are making a stand south of Gostitsa on the line Livosjina - Pereves - Gorki - Mastoro-Lovinks - Pantilei - Kovo. In the direction of Gatchina the enemy is attacking along the entire front and has captured the village of Opolje.

INDUSTRIAL COURTS.

A special Conference of Labour delegates from all parts of the Kingdom met at Westminster Hall on Friday to consider the Industrial Court Bill. There was general agreement with the Bill except for two clauses, which render it optional for employers to refer disputes to arbitration and to carry out the awards given. The contention was that in both cases there should be no such option.

After Mr. Arthur Henderson had explained the improvements in the Bill which had already been secured on the second reading it was by a two to one majority decided to approve the third reading. In effect this means that the voluntary character of the measure will be preserved.

General Lord Rawlinson has been appointed to the Aldershot Command as from to-day.

PATHETIC YPRES.

HOW THE SANCTIFIED TOWN IS DESECRATED.

Lieutenant-Colonel Beckles Wilson, late Town Major of Ypres, whose efforts to safeguard the ruined city from desecration are well known, has returned to Ypres. To a Press representative Colonel Wilson gave some particulars of the present condition of the place.

Is the civilian population returning? The hundreds who have come back (he said) have come against their will. They have had no desire to return. They were promised a model village near by, for Ypres is wholly insanitary and utterly unsuited for a modern town. The solution of the difficulty is to give a tract of land in this neighbourhood in which to build a new Ypres.

The plea of rebuilding old Ypres is merely a cloak for a handful of people—many of them not Yprois at all—to hide their money-making ventures. They care nothing for Ypres and are profaning the ruins quite light-heartedly. But in over a million British and Canadian homes Ypres is a sacred place. Had the British Government shown the slightest zeal or firmness about Ypres the Belgians would have met our wishes long ago. Even now their Government is very sympathetic, and I have been assured in Brussels that after the elections the matter will be taken in hand. Remembering the immortal and holy associations of Ypres it should be converted into a vast and beautiful place of sepulchre for our dead. There is room in it for a separate cemetery for every division of the British Army.

No, the original decision of the Belgian Government was a wise one—to leave the pale corpse of medieval Ypres where the vandals had flung her and where she lay, graceful and comely in death, and not to raise her up, galvanize her with noisy estaminets, rouge her marble cheeks with baroque façades, and drag her forth into the universal limelight as an interesting soubrette who had been outraged, and not as a suffering saint who has been martyred.

THE ARMY IN FRANCE.

WORK ACCOMPLISHED SINCE THE ARMISTICE.

The letter of confidence in Lieut.-Gen. Asser, G.O.C. France and Flanders, contained the following interesting details:

Since the Armistice about three and a half million officers, and other ranks, and over twenty thousand of the Q.M.A.A.C. were demobilized, and the administrative arrangements made for the handling of the very large proportion of those that have passed through or been despatched from France and Flanders have, in the opinion of the Army Council, reflected very great credit on General Asser's Staff and the troops under his command.

The value of the stores thrown up for disposal during the period from the Armistice till October 1st amounts to over £116,000,000, including 39 million pounds worth of ammunition, and this result has been achieved under considerable difficulties due to the depletion of staffs, and the unavoidable withdrawal of technical personnel.

Nearly 185,000 German prisoners have been despatched from your Command to Germany, and some 55,000 British prisoners repatriated through France. The smooth working of the complicated transport questions involved has been fully appreciated by the Army Council.

COW'S MILK RECORD.

HIGH PRICES FOR BRITISH CATTLE.

On Thursday, at Tarrant Rushton, near Blandford, Dorset, Mr. J. S. Harding's herd of pure-bred British Friesian cattle was sold. The herd had an extraordinary milk record, 22 cows having the remarkable average of 830 gallons of milk per head for the past 12 months.

Prices were high throughout, 51 head selling for the great total of £10,548, the average price being £206 16s. 7d. The highest price of the sale was 900 guineas for the young cow Bowerchalke Queen II., which in the last 12 months has given no less than 1,300 gallons of milk.

DISCHARGED SOLDIERS' OFFICIAL CONVICTED.

At Nottingham Assizes William Howarth Wood, aged 46, a former secretary of the Nottingham Branch of the Discharged and Demobilized Sailors' and Soldiers' Federation, was sentenced to nine months imprisonment in the second division for embezzling funds of the Federation by altering cheques.

It was stated that the prisoner joined the Army as a drummer boy when he was 13 years of age. He had been awarded the Distinguished Conduct Medal and had a pension of £125 a year.

COLD FEET CAUSES STRIKE.

About 400 colliers and other workmen in Monmouthshire went on strike yesterday because the train which was to convey them to their work was not heated. They declined to enter the compartments and went home.

The King and Queen visited the Olympia motor show on Friday.

The Italian Government has officially raised the blockade of Fiume.

ARMS FOR MEXICO.

PREVENTING SHIPMENT FROM BELGIUM.

The State department at Washington announces that the Government has taken steps to prevent the shipment of large orders of arms and ammunition from Belgium and Spain to Mexico. The American Charge d'Affaires at Brussels has protested that the shipment of arms from Belgium would be a violation of the International Arms Convention. As Spain is not a signatory to this Convention no direct action with Madrid is possible.

NATURAL HISTORY.

BENCH DECIDES THAT A BIRD IS AN ANIMAL.

At Mortlake Petty Sessions Mr. Kendall, was summoned "for keeping noisy animals, to wit, cockerels."

Sir James Szlumper.—I have yet to learn that a chicken is an animal.

A police-inspector.—There is no doubt about it, Sir James. There have been convictions.

Sir James Szlumper.—They may be wrong. The by-laws only mention noisy animals, and say nothing about birds.

Mr. F. W. Lambert, another of the magistrates, said that the Protection of Animals Act defined a fowl as an animal.

The Clerk made some objection.

Sir Charles Rugge-Price, the chairman of the Bench, reading from a dictionary, said:—"An animal is described as a 'living corporeal being endowed with sensations and voluntary motion.' A cockerel is, in my opinion, so endowed." (Laughter.)

Several neighbours said that the cockerels were in the habit of crowing continually throughout the night.

A witness, describing one of the birds, said that he had "a glorious voice, but he taught the young cockerels to sing in strange, shrill tones." (Laughter.)

The defendant said that he had killed all his cockerels except two, and these would now have "to go through it." (Laughter.)

The Bench fined the defendant 20s.

RESPONDENT'S SINGULAR COMPLAINT.

Mrs. Eva Sybil Owen, at Roseita House, Cheyne-walk, Chelsea, obtained a decree nisi of divorce because of the desertion and misconduct of her husband, Major Phillip Sidney John Owen, Arlington-street, Piccadilly. There was no defence.

The petitioner said that she was married in May, 1916, at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge. Her husband, who was in the Royal Air Force, had not lived with her since March, 1917. One of the letters he had since sent to her contained these words:

"I hoped that, after separation for practically a year, you would have settled down and accepted that state as permanent, and that we should without bitterness or animosity have freed each other other. Take one single instance: you arrived at my flat, at which you knew I lived with another woman, and proposed to take up your residence there. To me it is unthinkable, humiliating, and embarrassing."

The petitioner explained that her idea was to turn the woman out, so that she could live with her husband.

TROOPS FROM INDIA.

The War Office states that since 25th October, eight vessels have sailed from Bombay carrying 447 officers and 7804 other ranks. Of the 14 Territorial battalions and 19 Territorial batteries which were in India when demobilization recommenced after the interruption caused by the War in Afghanistan, ten battalions and nine batteries have been released, and the shipping programme arranged by the Indian Government will permit of the embarkation of the remainder of the Territorial Force units before the end of the present month.

PEACE DELEGATIONS TO RETURN HOME.

The American Delegation to the Peace Conference has notified its intention of leaving France early in December. The British Delegation has also given a similar notification.

It is considered from this that the work of the Conference will be concluded by that time.

NO EXTRA CERTIFICATE.

The War Office announces that in view of the great expenditure of time and money which would be involved it has been found necessary in the present circumstances to abandon the proposal to give an ornamental certificate in addition to the discharge certificate to each member of His Majesty's Forces who served in the war.

U.S. TO FEED ARMENIA.

It is reported that the United States has undertaken to provision Armenia until next August.

King's College hospital has opened an evening clinic for discharged soldiers. Two physicians and two surgeons are in daily attendance.

OUTRAGE AT CORK.

SOLDIERS' MEMORIAL WRECKED BY BOMBS.

A third attempt was made at Cork on Thursday night to blow up the memorial cross erected to soldiers who fell in the Boer war.

In order to distract the attention of the police, bombs were exploded in different districts between eight and ten o'clock, but at the latter hour an unmistakable explosion occurred. Some of the tablets bearing the names of fallen soldiers were partially destroyed, but the whole monument was damaged beyond repair.

DOVER PATROL MEMORIAL

ARRANGEMENTS FOR LAYING THE STONE.

Prince Arthur of Connaught, who is to lay the foundation stone of the Dover Patrol Memorial at Leathercotes Point, near Dover, next Wednesday, will arrive at Walmer Castle on Tuesday as the guest of the Lord Warden and Lady Beauchamp. The Prince and his hosts will drive to Leathercotes Point on Wednesday, and the ceremony will begin at 12.15. The Archbishop of Canterbury has been asked to conduct the religious ceremony.

Those invited to be present include the three admirals who had command of the Dover Patrol during the war—Sir Reginald Bacon, Sir Roger Keyes, and Vice-Admiral Cecil Dampier. After the ceremony there will be a luncheon at Dover Town Hall in honour of Prince Arthur, who is to be presented with an address of welcome by the Corporation.

WALWORTH SHOOTING CHARGE.

At Lambeth Police Court, before Mr. Chester Jones, Albert Victor Lawrence, aged 24, a plumber's mate, of Hillingdon-street, Walworth, was charged with wounding his father, John Lawrence, by shooting at him with a revolver.

Detective-Sergeant Peachey said that when he told the prisoner of the charge, he said: "Father struck me two or three times in the jaw. I pulled the pistol out of my waistcoat pocket and fired low down when he was getting the poker. I believe I struck him somewhere in the shoulder. He then ran after me with the poker into another room, and as he entered I hit him on the top of the head with a plumber's dummy. I did not hit him very hard, only just to stop him." The witness stated that the man was progressing favourably. The bullet lodged in his left shoulder.

The prisoner was remanded.

HUNGARIAN CABINET.

ROUMANIANS LEAVE BUDA-PESTH

The bulk of the Roumanian troops were due to leave Buda-Pesth yesterday, and the solemn entry of the new Hungarian Army will take place to-day. As Herr Frederick has failed to form a Coalition Government. Count Albert Apponyi has been summoned to Buda-Pesth, where after a conference with Sir George Clarke, he is endeavouring to constitute a representative Government.

GALLANT OFFICER'S BEQUEST

At a gathering of members of "A" Squadron, 1/1st Surrey Yeomanry, which unit saw service in France, Salonika, and the Caucasus, Captain H. Bell, announced that Major T. Barclay had, by his will, left £250 to be utilized in a manner to be decided upon for the benefit of those who saw active service with the squadron.

Major Barclay was on his way to Salonika when the ship in which he was travelling was torpedoed. With a fellow officer he boarded a floating raft, which subsequently drifted near a man who was unable to swim. Major Barclay jumped into the water and gave up his place on the raft to the helpless man. On being rescued Major Barclay lay down, and some time later he was found to be dead.

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.

Business opened more cheerfully, following the rally on Wall-street, and oils made a good recovery from yesterday's low levels. The market was nevertheless sensitive and any attempts to liquidate in order to forestall dull positions was the signal for lowering quotations. Funds were generally harder, and there were no indications of investors being frightened out of their holdings. There was a disposition afterwards to mark time but towards the close buying of oil shares was in evidence, especially Mexican Eagles, on the announcement that the successful proving of a new oil area was estimated to yield fifty thousand barrels daily. Mexican mines were dull on the Mexican Government's embargo limiting the export of silver. For bar gold 101½ shillings per ounce was paid in open market, the deal being said to be for the continent. Silver declined one penny to sixty-eight pence, on China selling. Marks were quoted at 160 to 160½ per pound.

THE BLOODLESS SACRIFICE.

When a man is compelled for a reason over which he has no control to abandon for an indefinite period his life's aim and ambition and with them his means of livelihood, he is confronted by no mean task, when the period of enforced inactivity passes, to take up the thread where it was broken and endeavour to knit together the past and the future without leaving inneffaceable traces of the rent which the break has occasioned.

And yet, how many as a result of the war have been faced with such a problem. Irrespective of calling, whether office boy, factory worker, business man or engaged in a profession, the experience in greater or lesser degree, has been patent to thousands.

For the period of the war personal aspirations found no place, and energy and effort were concentrated in other directions.

Each month that passed added yet another rung to the ladder of difficulty, until eventually resumption in the pre-war occupation was rendered an impossibility. Men, advanced in years, perhaps have had, and are having, no alternative but to turn their backs upon the past and to place their future hopes of successfully battling with the formidable problems of life in new and untried channels.

Was not this sacrifice of individual prospects one of the greatest made in the interest of the common cause?

We suggest, most emphatically, that it was and would add that it calls for something more than mere admiration and worthless thanks.

Something more is due to those who readily placed this gift upon the altar of their Empire's need.

Much has been said and reams have been written about the more spectacular aspects of war, the risk of death and huge donations to war loans and war funds, for instance, but this unostentatious and bloodless sacrifice has engendered little comment and scant notice. Let us give honour where honour is due.

THE TERRITORIAL FORCE EFFICIENCY MEDAL.

WHO ARE ENTITLED TO IT.

Owing no doubt to the complexity of regulations governing the issue of The Territorial Force Efficiency Medal, many of those who are qualified for it are under the impression that they are not, while, on the other hand, many of those who are not qualified for it are under the impression that they are.

The following explanation of the regulations governing the issue of the medal should help to remove the incorrect impression in both cases.

The medal is granted to warrant officers, non commissioned officers and men of the Territorial Force who complete 12 years' continuous service, with a minimum of 12 trainings, who are recommended by their C.O. Twelve years' continuous service, it should be noted, does not in itself constitute the qualification for the medal; the 12 trainings must also have been rendered.

Service in the Imperial Yeomanry or the Volunteer Force is allowed to count for every year in which the applicant was returned efficient—provided he was serving on March 31, 1918, and enlisted in the Territorial Force before June 30, 1908.

YEOMANRY CONCESSION.

An Imperial Yeoman, who enlisted into the same arm of the Territorial Force, may be awarded the medal after ten years' service and ten trainings in that arm.

Holders of the Long Service and Good Conduct Medal for their services in the Imperial Yeomanry or old Volunteer Force may also be granted the Territorial Force Efficiency Medal if they have qualified for it by service in the Territorial Force.

Men already in possession of the Territorial Force Efficiency Medal, who either were granted it for their past Imperial Yeomanry or Volunteer service on enlistment into the Territorial Force, or have earned it subsequent to such enlistment, and have served for such further period as would qualify them for another efficiency medal, may be awarded a clasp to be worn with the original medal. Service that would qualify for the Colonial Auxiliary Forces Long Service Medal, or the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve Long Service Medal, is allowed to count for the grant of the Territorial Force Efficiency Medal, provided the last five years of the applicant's service have been served in the Territorial Force.

Service rendered as an officer is allowed to count for the Medal in the case of men who were commissioned after service during the war in the ranks of the Territorial Force, and who, within three months of relinquishing their commissions re-enlist, or have re-enlisted, in the ranks of the Territorial Force.

The re-enlistment proviso is waived in the case of those who relinquished their commissions owing to wounds or sickness contracted on service during the war.

Service in a Cadet unit is allowed to count for the medal if it were rendered between the ages of 15 and 17 in a Cadet Corps or Cadet Battalion which belonged to the Cadet organisation in existence prior to May 21, 1910, provided the applicant enlisted into the Territorial Force within six months of leaving his Cadet unit.

BROKEN SERVICE.

Broken periods of service in the Yeomanry, Volunteers, Colonial Auxiliary Forces or Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve will be recognised as continuous service provided that the breaks were not of more than twelve months at a time and that, in the case of the Yeomanry and Volunteers, such breaks were prior to March 31st, 1908.

Men who enlisted from the Territorial Force into the Regular Army, the Navy, or the Air Force for the duration of the war may count that service towards the requisite minimum qualifying service for the medal. Further, in cases where more service must still be rendered to secure the requisite minimum qualifying service, such, Regular Army, Navy, or Air Force service is allowed to count as continuous Territorial service, provided that within three months of the date on which they cease, or ceased, to be required in the Regular Army, Navy, or Air Force, the men concerned re-enlist, or have re-enlisted, in the Territorial Force.

Men who during the war were discharged from the Territorial Force on account of wounds or illness contracted on service who at any time subsequently during the embodiment of the force voluntarily re-enlist, or have voluntarily re-enlisted, into the Territorial Force, will not be regarded as having broken their service; the period during which they were away has to be counted as continuous service for them.

EMBODIED SERVICE COUNTING DOUBLE.

In reckoning service towards the requisite qualifying period of service, and trainings towards the requisite number of trainings, for the medal, the following points should be noted:—Men who were serving in the Territorial Force on August 4, 1914, who were embodied under the Royal Proclamation of that date, and signed an agreement before November 11, 1918, to serve outside the United Kingdom, are allowed to count their embodied service as double, and any period of not less than two months embodied service in each calendar year as the equivalent of two trainings. Not more than two trainings are allowed, however, to reckon in any one year. For instance, a man embodied on the outbreak of war who had performed a training in 1914 before the war broke out is not allowed to count that training in addition to the two trainings for the "not less than two months'" period of embodied service rendered by him between August and December, 1914; he is not allowed to count more than two trainings for the year. Likewise, he is not allowed to count his 1914 year of service as two years; he is only allowed to count the actual embodied period of service as double—just the period in 1914 between August and December. The period of service in 1914 before August 4 simply counts as single.

MEN NOT EMBODIED ON OUTBREAK OF WAR.

Members of the Territorial Force who were not embodied under the Royal Proclamation of August 4, 1914, may only count any period of two months or more embodied service in each year as the equivalent of one training—not two! For instance, a man who joined the Territorial Force in, say, January, 1915, and served the whole 12 months of that year, can only count one training for same, although, of course, that 12 months' embodied service is countable by him as two years' service.

Men released for work of national importance are not allowed to count the periods they were engaged on such work towards the requisite minimum qualifying service for the medal, but, on the other hand, such release is not considered to be a break in the continuity of their Territorial Force service; the service rendered prior to such release counts along with any subsequent service rendered towards the total qualifying service required for the medal.

OUR GREAT DEBATE.

The conditions were not ideal, for our place of assembly was a hut used as a dining hall in a town not far from Cologne. How cold it was! We longed for a fire to warm us up, but alas! alas! there was no stove.

It is wonderful how the men attended; debates are always popular, for we all have a sneaking desire to become orators, and besides there are many future labour leaders and candidates for Parliament in our midst.

Concerts and cinemas are alright and very enjoyable but give us a good rousing set to on the platform by way of a change.

The subject of the debate was, "Is Continental life better than that at Home?" Jock, a sergeant, volunteered to prove up to the hilt that it was, whilst our Educational Instructor Sergeant took up the cudgels for the Homeland.

Both ascended the platform along with the Padre who was to preside, amid rousing cheers.

Jock warmed to his subject. France, Belgium, and Germany were the dearest spots on earth. He had no desire to be demobilized and forsake this paradise of Rhineland for the dismal strike befogged country of ours across the channel.

At this announcement there were many groans and the audience was intensely indignant. It almost looked as if there would be a riot but the Padre threatened to throw a German chair at the first man who approached the platform and that was sufficient to restore order.

Jock was now in great form. The light of battle was in his eye, and his voice rang forth in clear challenging tones. "Can you find", he asked, "any pubs in Great Britain to equal the estaminets in France and the cabarets in Cologne?" "Give me a chance to try th old Red Lion," cried one—great cheers.

"I'm a teetotaler myself" responded Jock. "Question!" cried the audience. "None of your camouflage old sport." Great laughter.

Jock became serious and spoke in earnest tones of the housing conditions here, the wonderful factories, the charming fraulein and a score of other points, and having had his say he sat down trembling with emotion.

His opponent, to use a common phrase, went for him like a ton of bricks. With intense scorn pointing to wretched Jock he cried:

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
This is mine own, my native land"—
(great cheers.)

He painted in glowing terms the glories and beauties of our freedom loving isle We were proud Britons "Think of our pretty cottages with their gardens," he said "the old village lanes, the woodland glades, the winsome lassies." At this point all the men began to weep and Jock's face visibly paled. A man rose to his feet and with the tears trickling down his honest face, sang:

"I want to see the dear old home again.
The cottage in the little winding lane.
I can see the roses climbing and hear the sweet bells chiming
And I'm longing for the dear old home again."

After this a mad rush was made for the demobilization office. Continental life! they had had enough of it, they must go home to that little cottage at once. The officer in charge looked very anxious but being a man of tact he gave each man a woodbine and a rum ration and told them to call at the office at 5.30 next morning and he would get them off by the 6.a.m. train.

A. G. R. O. has been published forbidding all debates on this subject and so at our next meeting we have decided to discuss "How we can provide roast pork for Christmas?" G. K.

MOON SHOOTING.

A NEW SPHERE FOR GUNNERS.

From "Everyday Science" we learn that a French astronomer wishes to take over one or two "Big Berthas" for the purpose of exploring the higher reaches of the earth's atmospheres. The guns would have to be mounted vertically, a difficult problem, and would fire shells to which various scentific recording apparatus registering atmospheric pressure, temperature etc. would be attached. This kind of work has been carried on for years by means of "ballons soudes" but "Big Bertha" properly mounted would carry heavier instruments higher into our atmosphere. With a muzzle velocity of 5,000 feet per second a shell of nearly 500 lbs. weight should travel to height of fifty miles and, as our atmosphere only extends to a height of about 45 miles, we should be able to obtain records of the highest strata, using the "Big Berthas." In all probability the recording apparatus would be smashed on its return to earth for it would be falling at the rate of 1,666 feet per second. Such shells would go beyond our atmosphere but would return to the earth. If a larger gun could be used giving to the shell an initial velocity of 26,000 feet the shells would never return Like the moon they would revolve eternally around the earth as a satellite. Could the muzzle velocity be increased to 36,000 feet per second they would go even beyond that and would join the host of minor planets which revolve around the greater luminary the sun. With guns large enough and powerful enough the gunners could thus provide astronomers with any amount of new "raw material."

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX.

Our Readers' Varied Views.

SPORT IN RHINELAND.

Sir,—I read with interest (and a little doubt) the article of "Young Sport," and can only say how lucky he is to be a member of such a sporting unit.

I can only ask that he discloses his Battn. so that I might have to opportunity of having a talk with his Sport's Officer, and hear his side of the story, and incidentally perhaps he will be able to put me on the right lines of how to carry out my duties as Sport's Officer, to get that "Spirit of Sport" which is so prevalent in his unit and so conspicuous by its absence in most "Young Soldier Battalions." "OLD BRIGADE."

NO REST FROM JAZZ.

Sir,—I see that you have thrown out several hints about the newly started reading and writing room at the "Earwig" Officers' Club.

They are perfectly justified. One has always associated such a room in any club or institute with quiet—a place in which one could think in peace and write one's letters in a congenial atmosphere.

But when I dropped in there yesterday I saw a dozen or more officers trying to keep out of their ears the unearthly din of the jazz band playing only a few yards away. There is nothing to check the horrible clash of sounds but a curtain.

Some were vainly essaying to read and one or two tried hard to collect their thoughts sufficiently to write a letter. It was impossible though and there was no possible escape from the jarring discords.

I am well aware that the N.A.C.B. officials had to abolish the old reading room to make way for the extended Dutch House, but I do hope they will see if some other spot is available for those who are not jazz maniacs and appreciate a quiet retreat for reading and writing. BRIG.

WIVES AND EXTRAVAGANCE.

Sir,—With reference to the interesting subject rewives on the Rhine. I should like to add a few words. Personally I am more than grateful to the "powers that be" for the privilege extended and to justify my existence here. I am trying to make "Home" out of a German Billet, and thus in some small measure make up for the past five years and give my husband a good time. This is what most of us are doing and if we are fond of the shops and spending, I do think that how, when and where, should be allowed to remain.

B. TWEEN OURSELVES.

SMOLLETT'S VERDICT.

Sir,—I borrowed from the Library at the Army Book shop the other day a fascinating book by Smollett that somehow I had hitherto missed in my miscellaneous reading. It was his "Travels through France and Italy." I found it most entertaining. Smollett was a very human person, quarrelsome, intolerant and outspoken.

He has scarcely a good word to say for the French of his time. "If there were five hundred dishes at table, a Frenchman will eat all of them," he says, "and then complain he has no appetite."

And this is a mild statement compared to many with which the book is crammed.

He did not go through Germany in his travels, but if he had I wonder what his criticisms of the table tastes of our late enemy would have been.

X. X. Y.

EYES AND NO EYES.

Sir,—In "Upright", "Capt. R.A.M.C." has a somewhat doubtful champion. He starts off by accusing me of having eyes for only trivial things. A somewhat flattering accusation surely; the big things are obvious to all and sundry, but it is the man who takes notice of the minor and more obscure things who is going to reap the rewards of observation.

I am really sorry for your correspondent. He rules out the armchair as a thing of "cushioned ease" and regards it as dangerous to alertness of mind and vigour of body. I can imagine "Upright" sitting bolt upright in his stiff-backed chair and looking with fearful eyes at the armchair close by which threatens to deprive him of his mental and physical powers. But he must be sorely tempted at times!

I am wondering now if "Upright" avoids the cushioned ease of a bed for the same reason, and whether he uses the floor as such and pillows his heavy and worried head upon his field boots.

No, I am not convinced of the terrible consequences of the use of the "armed" chair, and once again unblushingly sign myself "ARMCHAIRITE."

SKATING APPROACHES.

Sir,—Long skating seasons are the general rule in Germany and those lucky enough to be stationed near Cologne may look forward to some excellent sport during the coming winter months. The object of this letter is to offer a little friendly advice to ice enthusiasts, to whom I say, send home without delay for your skates so as to be ready for the frost as soon as it arrives.

There were many "occupiers" in Rhineland last February—when there was some capital exercise to be had throughout the whole month—who were unable to participate through lack of skates. The E.F.C. offered a supply for sale the day the thaw set in. SPEEDY.

CHESS FOR OFFICERS.

Sir,—I am a keen chess-player whose duties are likely to keep me in Cologne until the spring of next year. My enthusiasm for the game grows the more I play it—despite a recent correspondent's morbid prophecy as to its effect on the mental efficiency of devotees—and I consequently rolled along to the Y.M.C.A. to join their club.

I was informed that officers were not eligible for membership, and diligent enquiries failed to reveal the existence of one where they are. Cannot something be done for officer chess players such as, for instance, devoting a room at the Club for the purpose? CHESS-ITE.

FROM THE SHOULDER.

Critic Hits Out in Defence of Young Soldiers.

MATTER OF ORGANISATION.

In strong terms "Anti-cant" replies to the criticism of "Old Brigade." Inefficient organisation, and not lack of the true spirit, is the cause of the dying enthusiasm, he says. His article is as follows:—

The scandalous libel of the British soldier perpetrated by "Old Brigade" and his supporters must not be allowed to go unenallenged. My own practical experience leads me to contradict his assertions flatly.

I joined a unit at the beginning of the summer and was told by several officers, "We have an extraordinary lot of men without an ounce of sport in them. They have to be dragged out to play games." That this was untrue was proved by the fact that within a month that unit was playing every sort of game every afternoon, and inter-Coy. and platoon rivalry was extremely keen. It was, however, a fact that in the beginniug games were not being played, although a very pretty programme of recreational training was rendered weekly as eye-wash for those who live on it.

Sports Officers Criticised.

Some of the causes of the bad state of affairs were as follows. First of all, there was an alleged sports officer. That appointmeut ought not to exist in any unit for the simple reason that it enab es the unit commander, his staff and particularly his subordinate commanders to shuffle on to other shoulders the responsibility for recreational training which is supposed to occupy half the working day of the Army of the Rhine.

A sports secretary by all means, but not a sports officer. Then the sports officer had always been the education officer. The "E.O." was a war crock unable to play anything more strenuous than ping-pong. Further he had no staff at his back and he was unable to organise competitons in all sports at the same time. Here lies the whole crux of the matter.

Men do not play games for exercise alone unless they are like the public schoolboys and unable through habit to pass a day without all round exercise and still feel fit. These together with the highly skilled experts form the small minority of so-called "sportsmen." Men play games because of the competitive spirit, because they like to excel in in anything in which there are degrees of human excellence and because they feel pleasure in acquiring a skill which enables them to be better than someone else, no matter how small that skill may be.

Organised Competitions.

In order therefore to get all round sports in a unit it is essential that there should be competitions organised in every branch of sport. There must be leagues so that the games are played with a definite object, on definite dates, between definite teams with definite supporters.

Games in the Army being voluntary it is essential that they should not be organised through the usual military channels but by an elected committee consisting of representatives of all units which are to take part in the league competitions to be run by that committee. Therefore do away with the sports officer. On the other hand i is absolutely essential that the commander of every unit should realise that games are an important part of training, and therefore a part of the duty for the performance of which they are paid, that they s ould see that proper committees are formed for every unit, however small, that those committees do their job, and lastly that someone is appointed president of the committee of sufficient authority to co-ordinate recreational arrangements and military duties, in other words to see the sergeant major does not put Pte. Alwaystight on fatigue when he is going to represent No. 9 platoon against the Orderly Room staff.

Hard to Understand.

If games are arranged on an organised, competitive basis and not on the haphazard style of Officers v. Sergeants at two pip emma arranged at one pip emma' it will never be necessary to drag men out to play.

I am at a complete loss to understand the mentality of the sports officer who goes to the trouble of advertising his failure to compete with the attractions of the cabaret, and proceeds to attack the men whose spirit pulled them through the war, charging them with lack of grit. Such an one would do well to enquire whether the officers in his unit from C.O. to the junior "second loot" are making arrangements for games in their own commandos or whether they are the first to reach the 'bier-halle' as soon as parades are over.

It is high time that higher commanders inspected units at play and kicked out officers unable to do the recreational side of their job.

As president of a unit sports committee I did not find that the question of grounds, recreational kit, etc. was all "beer and skittles" as painted by "Old Brigade." As regards kit I was unable to obtain a single cricket bat from the Army even on payment during the whole summer.

I suspect "Old Brigade" of wanting to "put the work out"; the whole thing is a question of organisation, not spirit.

ANTI-CANT.

SOME OF THE REASONS.

Young Soldier Defended: Encouragement Needed.

Another young soldier's champion has come forward and in the following article he advances reasons for their comparative lack of enthusiasm for sport and deprecates comparison between them and the old-timers. He says:—

I am aware of the large percentage of men who do not take kindly to sport in the Y.S. Bns. but I consider it unfair to compare 1914-18, men with the youngsters.

The 1914-18 Army was composed of men of sporting experience, as we all know included champions from nearly all branches of sport, and, not only champions but a large percentage of men who had been schooled in different games, or had put on the gloves—they had been broken in. There was a large precentage, perhaps who had never taken to sport, but when they mixed with the others, they also in most cases 'got going' themselves.

On the other hand the Y.S. are all of one age and, judging from my own Bn., had not taken to any sport except football before joining up.

What these men want is encouragement and instruction. I don't mean to fuss with them, but make them interested by talking on sport; the spirit's there and only wants bringing out.

My battalion has its teams for various sports and the officers are members and I have found them very keen to learn-our boxing instructor is busy.

There is still esprit-de-corps in all our boys and we have a very fine average of men taking part in some kind of sports.

I consider these young men have not the same advantages which the 1914 men had in the way of instruction; this should be given by officers who have had experience in sport.

I trust this will catch the eyes of the young soldiers and they will make an effort, and show that the famous sporting spirit which is the envy of other nations, is possessed by them, as it was by the veteran.

HOME AND AWAY.

Will this Season's Method be Scrapped?

BY TYNESIDER.

There are many voices being raised in protest against the presentseason's method of home and away matches taking place on succeeding Saturdays. This arrangement is not meeting with great approval and in many quarters it is being discussed. Great discontent is apparent among club officials and they have good grounds for it.

One reason is that many clubs benefit by catching a team at its weakest while others will meet the same team later, after it may have been strengthened and thus drop points. This is undoubtedly sound reasoning and no one will gainsay the facts in question.

If we look for an example of this happening we need go no further than Aston Villa. Beaten week after week, they were dropping points all round. Then came new men to their ranks, the weak spots were strengthened and we find them administering defeats to Middlesboro' at Aynsome Park and the "Throstles" at the Hawthorns.

The teams who had met the Villa previous to their recovery certainly benefited by the arrangement at present in force.

Another sound argument is the bad feeling which now and again creeps into the best of games. Tempers become ruffled and bad blood is often created. With the old system in vogue incidents (which to-day rankle and bring others in their train the following Saturday) were almost forgotten before the clubs met again. Heated games are not forgotten in a week and this should weigh in the balance, when a decision comes to be made.

Personally, judging from statements which reach me from usually well informed quarters, I am inclined to the idea, that the new system will not last another season.

The old Fletcher system should again come into operation, and the reversion to this method will undoubtedly meet with approval.

LAWN TENNIS AT OXFORD.

Judging by the numbers of men who have patronised hard courts at Oxford this term, lawn tennis is in a very flourishing condition, and the present hard courts are quite insufficient to meet the requirements of members. The Freshmen's Tournament attracted upwards of 60 competitors, and in the final N. A. Cazalet (Christ Church), the tennis player, b at J. C. F. Simpson (Queen's), after a hard struggle, which lasted an hour and three-quarters, the score being 6—2, 7—5, 7—5. Both played excellent tennis, Cazalet being the steadier of the two.

There was also an entry of upwards of 60 for the open handicap, which was won by C. W. Nicholls (Keble), who received 15, and beat G. U. T. Richards (Magdalen), rec. 15, by 6—3 and 6—1.

SURBITON BUY THEIR GROUND.

Faced by prospective building operations, it has been decided at a special meeting of the Surbiton L.T.C. to purchase the freehold of the courts at Berrylands used annually for the Surrey championships. The ground is over four acres in extent and has accomodation for twenty-four courts. Six hard courts are to be constructed.

RUGBY LECTURE.

Mr. W. M. Douglas, the old Cardiff and Welsh international three-quarter, who is now a member of the Welsh Rugby Union Committee, will address players, referees, and officials on points of the game next Tuesday at the Juvenile Employment Exchange, Cardiff.

HORSES SENT HOME.

When their trainers found that snow was laying thick on the Derby course yesterday morning, they had Light Hearted and Fancy Man sent home.

ALL FEATHER-WEIGHTS.

The novices' competition at the National Sporting Club next Wednesday will be confined to feather-weights, and aspiring boxers.

AROUND THE RING.

Basham Defeats Wells after Thrilling Contest.

JOHNNY SUMMERS RETIRES.

When two boxers of wide experiences and almost equally creditable records meet they cannot fail to attract a huge audience and the meeting of Johnny Basham, the British welter weight champion and Matt. Wells formerly holder of the light weight title, at the Holborn Stadium was no exception to this rule. The bout was one of 20 3 min. rounds and went the whole distance, Basham winning on points.

Wells Dashes in.

Wells, looking much the more burly, dashed into his man at once with a swinging left to the body, which Basham took on his arm. Wells was back at once, fighting hard for the body, and though Basham twice pulled him up with fine straight lefts to the face, the old Lynn boy had a shade the best of the opening round. Wells continued to force the pace in the second, but was several times guilty of holding Basham all the while was posing well, and one of his blows, a hard and straight left flush to the nose and mouth, was particularly telling.

There was no diminution of pace during the fourth round, in which Wells was still holding his own and proving himself to be a most worthy opponent of the champion—fast, strong, a good boxer and fine "general." But the pace of Basham's crisp left-hand punches, generally flush to the face, or a combination of both, told their tale in the fifth round, in which Wells was unmistakably slower, but he managed to open a cut at the corner of Basham's right eye, whether with his head or a left hook was not quite clear.

Wells, apparently gaining his second wind, came back none the worse, and had little the worst of round nine, that was full of excitement. So, too, were the next three rounds. The thirteenth, though not the so-called "fatal" one, was the worst so far for Wells, as Basham, who was boxing coolly and within himself, jabbed him hard with the left to the face several times. and finished up by hooking left and then right hard to the jaw with visible effect.

SUMMER'S RETIREMENT.

Distinguished Boxers at Farewell Matinee.

There was strong evidence of the popularity of Johnny Summers, the ex-welterweight champion, at the farewell matinee which was given for his benefit in the Imperial Palace of Varieties, Canning Town—lent for the purpose by Mr. Archie McDowell.

A good programme of musical items was arranged, and it was a matter of much appreciation to the beneficiare, who has definitely decided to retire from the ring, to see such well-known exponents of the "noble art" as Jimmy Driscoll, Pat. O'Keeffe, Fred Fulton, Pedlar Palmer, Gus Plat, Billy Fullerton, Fred Newberry, Jim Kendrick, Ted Moore, Alf Reed, Jack Farley, Abe Harris, and Frank Wallis in attendance to pay tribute to one of the most popular boxers of his day.

Dec. 4th Contest Referee.

Prior to the big contest on Thursday evening Mr. Cochran entered the ring and announced that he had secured the consent of Mr. B. J. Angle to referee the Beckett and Carpentier contest in that hall on Dec. 4 for the heavy-weight championship of Europe, and then he introduced the two contestants, the pair shaking hands most cordially.

BECKETT AND DEMPSEY.

Denial that American has Signed Articles for Match.

Several days ago a cable was received from America stating that Jack Dempsey, the world's heavy-weight champion, had signed an agreement with Dominic Tortorich, the New Orleans promoter and one-time partner of Tommy Burns, for a contest with Joe Beckett.

Dempsey, it was further stated, was to receive £25,000 as his share of the purse, but no mention was made regarding Beckett's share. On inquiries being made at Southampton, Mr. Bernard Mortimer, Beckett's supporter, said he had not been approached in the matter, and knew nothing of the alleged match. Further information from a reliable American source, is to the effect that Dempsey has not signed up with the New Orleans promoter named above.

SAINTLY MAUDE'S TWENTIETH RACE.

When taking part in the Allestree Plate at Derby on Friday, Saintly Maude was contesting her twentieth race of the season, which says much for the soundness of the daughter of Toussaint. She has won seven races, six in succession.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

Can you write one?

Christmas will soon be here, and "The Cologne Post" wishes to encourage its readers to write short Yuletide stories suitable for publication in its columns at that festive period.

They can be on any subject and in any vein but they must not exceed 1000 words in length.

We offer prizes of 150 marks, 100 marks, and 50 marks respectively for the three best received and published, and any others we may think worthy of publication will be paid for at our regular rates.

If possible manuscripts should be typewritten, though this is not essential.

The last date for receiving Christmas stories will be November 20th. Envelopes should be addressed "Story Editor" "Cologne Post" A.P.O. S/40, Rhine Army.

ALASNAM ATONES.

Wins the Derby Cup by a Head.

EXCITING RACE.

The Derby Cup, run on Friday, was one of the most exciting races of the year. There were nine starters, and Alasnam, Sir Bailey's hitherto unlucky colt, started favourite being backed down to 6-5.

The Midshipmite got well away and led to the last turn when Alasnam forged ahead. Krooboy II then became dangerous; he made a determined challenge but after an exciting struggle Alasnam got home a head to the good. The Planet three quarters of a length in rear, finished third with the Midshipmite fourth. Details:—

1, Alasnam, (6-5), Sir A. Bailey, Weston.
2, Krooboy II, (20-1), Lord Zetland, A. Garnett.
3, Planet, (11-2), Mr. G. Barclay, H. Robbins.

Also ran:—The Midshipmite, Queen's Square, Wildwood, Daphne, Square Measure and Sheriffs Officer. It will be recalled that in Tuesday's "Cologne Post" our racing correspondent gave Alasnam as the winner, emphasing his marked improvement and consistency.

The winner is a bay colt, owned by Sir A. Bailey, by Alpha II—Sunny Lass, and is trained by R. Day.

In his previous performances this autumn he may be said to have been somewhat unfortunate. In the Cesarewitch, Cambridgeshire and Liverpool Cup he showed consistency of form and definite signs of improvement, but was not quite good enough to carry off chief honours.

Other Derby Details.

Going was somewhat hard and snow commenced to fall when racing commenced. The attendance was well up to the average.

Drakelow Plate:—1, Le Verguier (7-1); 2, Thoughtless (9-2); 3, Kalooiah (11-1). Twelve ran.

Stainsby Plate:—1, Ella (11-1); 2, Lady Shamrock (100-7); 3, Manuscript (100-7). Thirteen ran.

Friary Nursery Plate:—1, Princess Margaret (8-1); 2, Daniella (10-1); 3, Marcia (100-8). Eighteen ran.

Chaddesden Plate:—1, Santa Cruz (6-1); 2, Twincat (10-1); 3, Wee Mon (5-2). Thirteen ran.

Quarndon Plate:—1, Le Sund (9-4); 2, Square Meal (2-1); 3, Cryptic (100-8). Four ran.

CAN INMAN RECOVER?

Falkiner sets Champion Tremendous Task.

SMITH MAINTAINS LEAD.

The match between Inman and Falkiner looks at present to be a foregone conclusion for the latter. With only 1176 needed to reach his points he has a lead of 3,747. But Inman never acknowledges defeat and, hopeless as the position now appears, there can be no doubt that he will make a supreme effort to wipe off the arrears. If he is able to accomplish this it will be the finest feat of his career, which bristles with remarkable accomplishments.

Falkiner is undoubtedly a greatly improved player and this latest performance stamps him as a cueist who has by no means reached the zenith of his billiards fame. In the match he was conceded 2,000 start by the champion, and it yet remains to be seen whether he will reach the 16,000 with this margin to spare.

Smith is tenaciously sticking to his lead over Newman, and has, in fact, slightly increased his advantage. Closing scores on Friday evening:—

Falkiner (in play)	14,834
Inman	11,078
Smith (in play)	14,620
Newman	13,207

JOCKEY HOMEWARD BOUND.

Leslie Butcher, son of the Thetford trainer, expects to arrive home from Mesopotamia for Christmas. He writes home to his father, for whom he will ride as first jockey in future, that he has put on very little weight, and hopes next season to go to scale at about 8st.

SCOTTISH REFEREES.

At a meeting of the Scottish Football League in Glasgow last night, it was decided that no applicant for admission to the referee list who is connected as a shareholder or otherwise with any club in membership of the league shall be admitted thereto, and that any referee at present on the list who is so interested shall be removed. It was also resolved that the extra cost incurred by clubs in fulfilling their fixtures during the recent railway strike shall be borne equally by all clubs in the league.

CRICKET IN SOUTH AFRICA.

In a match played recently the Australian Imperial Forces team defeated Natal by an innings and 42 runs.

WAR CHRISTMASES.

Write your Experiences.

In addition to the prizes we are offering for short Christmas stories, we invite our readers to send us their personal experiences of the Christmases they have spent since the beginning of the war.

We require one for each of the years 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917 and will give 50 marks for the best short description of a Christmas spent in the Army in each of those years. There will therefore be four prizes — one for each year of the war.

The length of these descriptive articles must not exceed 500 words each.

Typewritten copy is preferred but not essential.

The latest date for receiving them will be November 20th and they must be addressed 'Christmas" Cologne Post. A.P.O./S. 40 Rhine Army.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

NEXT WEEK'S ATTRACTIONS.

Apropos of "The Melting Pot."

The central idea of "The Melting Pot," which is to be given next week at the Deutsches Theatre, is the fusion of all the races in Europe in the crucible of the new world to form the American. But let no intending spectator run away with the idea that for this reason the play is only of interest to Americans. As the author points out in an afterword to the play, every country has been through the same period of absorbing foreign elements as America is engaged in today. Even in England this fusion is still going on. "In fact," says Mr. Zangwill, "according to Sir Henry Johnston, there is hardly an etheric element that has not entered into the Englishman, including even the missing link." In America this process is magnified to a scale that has no parallel in history. Apart, however, from this theme there is in the play a very strong drama, which is undoubtedly international in its appeal—as international, in fact, as the characters which compose it. Russian and Jew, Irish and German, all enter into the cast, and the play contains only one native-born American character, and that a bad one.

At the Palace.

Mr. Phillip Williams and Mr. Leslie Ross's Vaudeville Company, having made a big success of their visit to the Deutches Theatre this week, will remain in Cologne for a further period, opening at the Palace to-morrow (Monday). The company includes Ross and Hanton in comedy duologues; Phillip Williams, entertainer at the piano; Gerald Williams, tenor; Fabbie Benstead, Australian entertainer; Diana North, contralto vocalist, and Rene Hele, solo pianist.

The Cinemas.

With the inclement weather experienced recently, the warming influence of the picture theatres is in great demand. Splendid programmes are announced for the three Army cinemas in Cologne, as well as at the Leave Club and the Y.M.C.A. "Central."

Empire Leave Club.

The B.E.L.C. programme is as strong as ever. This evening at 6.30 there will be a concert by the band of the Inniskilling Dragoons, while to-morrow an impromptu concert from 5 to 6 p.m. will be followed by a practice dance and German class, both commencing at 6.30.

Topical Debates.

An interesting debate took place on Friday night at the British Empire Leave Club on the subject, "That the League of Nations would make war impossible", the motion being defeated by six votes. Private Kenny, R.A.S.C., proposed, and L.Cpl. MacCormack, Dragoon Guards, opposed, and others followed. Capt. Dennis K.O.Y.L.I. presided. The motion for debate next Friday (6.30 sharp) will be "Prohibition".

Chess at the Leave Club.

Owing to the large numbers of entries for the B.E.L.C. Chess Tournament, matches will be played on Tuesday evenings at 6.30, as well as Thursday at 6.30.

The position of players on 13-11-19 is as follows:

1, Sgt. Yates, 2, Sgt. Kemplin, 3, L/C. Howes, 4, Pte. Wooster has not played, 5, Pte. Duncan has not played, 6, L/C. Harrison has not played, 7, Sgt. Taylor, 8, Gnr. Stanley, 9, Cpl. Jordan, 10, Pte. Hartley, 11, Sgt. Fry, W. H., 12, Sgt. Rogers has not played, 13, C.S.M. Graham has not played, 14, S/Sgt. Hollowell has not played, 15, Sgt. Keight, 16, Cpl. Williams, M., 17, L/C. Whyte, 18, Pte. Scully, A.W. 19, Pte. Harrow, 20, Pte. Peck, 21, Sgt. Lloyd, 22, Dvr. Shaw has not played.

ALTCAR COURSING MEETING ABANDONED.

Although there was a distinct thaw in the early hours of Thursday evening, the frost returned with renewed vigour during the night, and notwithstanding that a considerable company of would-be spectators made the journey out to the place of meet, the Altcar Stewards, after inspecting the ground, quickly came to the conclusion that coursing would not be either possible on that or the following day, so decided to abandon the meeting, and a fresh date will be arranged to bring off this fixture in December.

SPORTS AT OXFORD.

Weather Interferes with Inter-Collegiate Events.

Had the weather permitted, a couple of heads in the inter-Collegiate competition would have been run off on Friday afternoon at Oxford, but what with snow, frost, and sunshine the track was in such a bad condition that racing was impossible. The events to be decided are 100 yds. hammer, long jump, half-mile, hurdles, putting the weight, quarter-mile, high jump, and mile.

The holders of the cup are Brasenose, who won in 1913-14. Seventeen colleges are entered, and the draw is as follows:—

Preliminary Round, Nov. 14.—Queen's v. Worcester.

First Round, Nov. 14.—Hertford v Keble; Brazenose v. Exeter; Magdalen, a bye. Pembroke scratched. Nov. 17: Jesus v. Merton; Trinity v. Lincoln. Nov. 19: Christ Church v. Oriel; Balliol v. St. John's. Nov. 20: New College v. Queen's or Worcester.

ORGANISED SPORTS.

Army Football Association's Project.

We hear on good authority that a number of football competitions—Rugby and Association—are being arranged under the auspices of the Army Football Association. A list of qualified referees is in course of preparation, and various cups will be offered for football, boxing, and cross-country competitions. It is proposed to make a start as soon as Rhineland affairs allow. We hope to publish full details of the proposals in a later issue.

COLOGNE OPERA HOUSE.

DAY	OPERA	COMPOSER	START	END
Sun.	Aida	Verdi	6.30	10.15
Monday	No Performance
Tuesday	No Performance
Wednesday	No Performance
Thurs.	Cosi Fan Tutti	Mozart	7	10
Fri.	Armourer of Worms	Lortzing	7	9.45

Sun.	Flyin, Dutchman	Wagner	7.30	10.30

Central Y.M.C.A. Events.

Every night this week in the Great Hall of the Central Y.M.C.A., the programme will be 6—7, orchestra, 7—8, Miss Michel's Concert Party; 8-9.30 cinema (new films every night). In the Loreley Hall, there will be on Monday a Concert by the Y.M.C.A. Staff and others; On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday folk-dance classes, on Friday the weekly whist drive; and on Saturday a class for modern dances will be opened.

Whist Drive.

There was close scoring at the British Empire Leave Club whist drive on Thursday night. The 1st ladies prize was won by K. Watling, 19th Middlesex, with a score of 165 whilst a score of 161 was reached by three players — the result of the cut being 2nd, W. Civil, 5th Labour Coy and 3rd, J. Johnson, 159 Labour Coy. The three winning gentlemen also tied and cut for prizes — 1st prize, W. O. Cumming, H.Q. Signals; 2nd prize, F. Meighem, M. T. Depot; 3rd prize, R. Stocks, 18th Labour Coy. Lt. Higgins presided.

The old times.

As the late performances on Wednesdays and Fridays at the Deutsches Theater, have not proved successful, the performance commences every evening now at 6 p.m.

JACQUES.

NO RESTRICTIONS.

Send Along As Many Efforts As You Please.

OUR FOOTBALL SKILL CONTEST.

Provided you enclose one mark with each coupon sent in, no limit is placed upon the number of entries for each competitor in our popular football skill contest.

By the time this issue of "The Cologne Post" goes to press, the result of the competition will have been decided, although, of course, it will not be known who is to be the fortunate recipient of our prize-money. The sorting of the coupons and checking of forecasts is a substantial task, but the result, as usual, will be published on Thursday.

The football season having now got well under way, the capabilities of the teams is becoming more familiar, and in the case of some of the matches, at all events, the difficulty of deciding upon a correct prophecy should not be so severe.

In the coupon below, strike out the team you think will lose, or, if you predict a draw, leave both teams standing, add your name and address clearly, place the coupon in an envelope with one mark and send it along to this office. Not very much trouble, is it? Yet the slight effort might be the means of enriching you to the extent of several thousand marks.

Coupons must be addressed:—
FOOTBALL CONTEST No. 9,
"Cologne Post",
A.P.O. S/40 Rhine Army.

List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.
2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.
3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for any reason, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.
4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.
5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into, Neither will interviews be granted.
6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.
7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, mislaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.
8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.
9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

What is it?
The Editor whispers that he has a very important announcement to make almost immediately. It's something to do with Yuletide. That's all he will let me say at the moment.

Snowy Missiles.
In the country areas of Rhineland the troops have had plenty of lively contests in the last few days. Snowball fighting has been the order of the day.

For Music Lovers.
The winter musical season is now in full swing here. The hoardings daily announce new concerts, recitals, klavier and liederabends whilst the Cologne papers are devoting more and more space to matters musical.

A Children's Service.
Beginning to-day there will be a short service for children at 2.30 p.m. in the Lorely Hall of the Cologne Central Y.M.C.A. The Chaplain who was nominated by the A.C.G. to give religious instruction in the Day School and other Chaplains will, it is hoped, take part in these services.

Prefer Heat.
I thought the Indian drivers had left Cologne but I saw a few yesterday. They didn't relish the present inclement weather at all.

They Love it.
A considerable amount of dancing or rather "jazzing" goes on every evening at the German cafes. The French and Belgians in Cologne take a large share in it.

Curious Effects.
Passing the Dom yesterday I was much struck with the gargoyles which are to be seen around the walls. Icicles had formed and these hanging from the mouths of the stone figures gave the impression that they had taken an offensive attitude and were putting their tongues out to passers by.

Not Lagging Behind.
On the bookstalls may be seen a German magazine devoted solely to the aeronautical mail services and development. It is called "Air Post."

Furs Going Cheap.
An officer who was warned that he would be going near the Baltic spent umpteen pounds in buying fur coats, caps, gauntlets and extra heavy underclothing. Yesterday he received his marching orders to—Arabia!

The Latest, But True.
Officer (to orderly) "I shan't be many minutes, if any one calls. I'm just going to visit my tonsorial artist." (Exit). Orderly (to caller) "Capt. Blank won't be long, Sir, he's just gone to see his tonsilitis."

Don't Gamble in Money.
Many soldiers now leaving for home, who had banked on a "certain" rise in the value of the mark now regret their unwisdom and are regretfully cutting their losses. Speculating is an expert's game after all.

A Suggestion.
A late evening club is suggested for those other ranks engaged in work that keeps them employed until seven, eight or even nine at night. The N.A.C.B. has its hands pretty full at present, I should say.

The Prince as Red Indian.
A photograph of the Prince of Wales in the headdress of a chief of Indians forms the frontispiece to at least one German periodical.

Hot Drinks.
I see that many of the Tommies in cafes and cabarets are now drinking coffee. With the advent of the cold weather they appear to find Rhine wine and lagerbeer rather too chilly for the internal regions.

For Renewal.
Quite a large number of British wives will find on examination of their permits that they will want renewing this month. It is surprising how the time slips along.

War Coins.
While I've seen plenty of Düren, Bonn and Coblenz war coins, I don't remember having seen any of Cologne. But then the Cathedral city has issued so much paper money that perhaps nickel was not deemed necessary.

Toys for Kiddies.
An officer dropped off the tramcar in the neighbourhood of the Army Post Office. "Toys" he said tapping a weighty parcel. Will the recipients be told they were made in Germany?

Still Very Cheap.
Don't forget that from Tuesday next the "Post" will cost you 50 pfgs per copy. Although before the war the sum represented sixpence in English money, it is now a little less than one penny.

Christmassy.
The series of ten excellent tableaux shown in the windows of one of the largest department stores here is attracting a deal of attention and admiration. It illustrates episodes from "Siegfried."

"SHOULD AULD ACQUAINTANCE BE FORGOT?"

No., 770003, Private WILKS P., suddenly discovers that the Barber is a Jerry that he "slipped it across" on the Somme.

Quite Like Home.
The old familiar brilliantly coloured Christmas tree decorations in the most fragile of glass are making their appearance in the shops now.

For Ladies.
The Ladies' Corner at the Hohestrasse Arcade Book-room is now ready and replete with all the latest British and continental fashion journals. The German fashion publications, on the whole, do not reach quite so high a level as our own and the French.

Few Patrons.
They tell me that many of the "weinstubes" which blossomed out in Cologne when the A. of O. was at full strength are now experiencing a mild slump.

Not Like the Home Fires.
Many miss the cheery open fire of the regular British home. After all it is not quite the same sitting round a central heating stove apparatus, however ornamental and effective otherwise.

Glass Ware.
Many of our troops going home "Demob'd" are taking articles of glass ware with them as souvenirs, They are good judges.

Snow Shovels.
I noticed in the Waidmarkt, this morning, a youth shovelling the snow away from a shop front with a new kind of shovel. It was an ordinary notice board, cut at one edge, but he was going twice as fast as any of the neighbouring youths who were using hand brooms.

RHINELANDER.

AROUND AND ABOUT.

THE SEDAN CHAIR.

One of the papers remarks on the curious sight of a Sedan chair for sale in a London shop, and certainly the word suggests to most people the age of periwigs and snuff-boxes. But Sedan chairs have persisted in odd corners till quite recent times, and may not even yet be extinct. Bury St. Edmund's had one in public use as late as 1894, which has since been transformed into a wheeled vehicle. Even during this century a Sedan chair is said to have been used within the precincts of Hampton Court. In some ways the Sedan chair was a commodious vehicle, and though Horace Walpole attributes its disuse to the gradually extending distances of London, its decline was more probably due to the growing reluctance of human beings to be used as beasts of burden.

WHO WAS RIGHT?

Two women and a man, started a railway journey, in the same compartment. The man asked leave to smoke, and it was graciously accorded. At the first stop another man entered, and, saying "You don't mind smoking?" pulled out a pipe. The answer was a grunt which said, "We don't like your manners or your tobacco, but haven't the courage to say 'No.'" Presently more men entered. No leave was asked and smoking became general. The bolder of the two women jerked out, "This is not a smoking carriage." "But people were smoking when I came in," he said. A very acid "They asked leave" ended further controversy. The smokers left the compartment at the first opportunity. The women stayed to enlarge on the degeneration of men's manners. Both perhaps had a grievance.

WOMEN IN THE SADDLE.

Woman is certainly coming into her own on the road. In motor-cycling she is advancing rapidly. She is no longer content to take the seat in the side-car shielded by windscreens and rugs. Service with the Forces on light-car and motor-cycle has had its effect, and weekly the number of women on the road—actual drivers, not motor-cycling companions—is increasing. Hail, rain, and cold winds do not keep them indoors, and it is very apparent there is going to be no close season for a large percentage of them. It may be that the autumn glories, the splendid riot of colour in the woodlands, appealed to their artistic sense, but from the motor-cycling point of view it is something more—a developing ardour for motor-cycling for the pleasure of motoring.

PEACE-TIME UNIFORMS.

Although the large majority of soldiers heartily approve of the recommendations in favour of a special uniform for ceremonial purposes, the said uniform to preserve as many of the old distinctions as considerations of economy will permit, it is by no means certain that these recommendations will be adopted. Two factors are likely to operate against them, one being the rooted aversion some of our military authorities have against any changes and the other the possibility of panic economists demanding as dull and drab and cheap a uniform as possible. If the advocates of the latter carry their point it will, in Service men's opinion, be a great pity, for a total abolition of the old "joy rags" of the Army, with all the glorious traditions which they embody, would be most detrimental to esprit de corps and fatal to recruiting.

THE LAW OF NAMES.

If you want to change the name of Smith to the aristocratic one of D'Arcy, nobody can stop you. If you wish to be called Reginald instead of Dick, the law will not permit it.

"People can call themselves anything they like," said the Marylebone magistrate. "You cannot alter your Christian name, but you can the surname, which was only originally a nickname." A Home Office official corroborated this view. Any British-born subject can change their surnames, as instanced by the aliases many criminals choose. But it is not permissible to change the Christian name on your baptismal or marriage certificate.

FAITHFUL LOVER.

A Serbian girl who travelled 1,500 miles to find a British soldier to whom she was engaged has been reunited to him in London, and the marriage is to take place shortly. While serving in the Balkans the soldier fell in love with the daughter of the house at which he was billeted. After the British troops had left the village was raided by the enemy, and the inhabitants were scattered. The soldier made exhaustive inquiries, but could hear nothing of the girl, and gave her up for lost. A few days ago he received a message from the Serbian Minister in London asking if he could verify the story of a girl who had recently landed at Dover. She said she had come to marry a soldier of the same name as himself. On going to London he found that the girl, who was under the care of the Serbian Minister, was his fiance. She had travelled overland from Serbia, knowing but little French and no English.

HUMAN NATURE.

„You cannot change human nature", is the cry of many who stand in the way of the reforms that one longs to see in the world, but at the same time they are among the first to state that an Act of Parliament of such and such a kind will undermine the self reliance of the people.

We know that the elemental constituents of human nature will never change; man will always hunger for food, for love, for God; but while these elements need never be changed, or man's free choice taken away, there are always ways and means of guiding mankind in the right direction.

"Could the England of 1685" says Macaulay "be, by some magical process brought before our eyes, we should not know one landscape in a hundred or one building in ten thousand."

Exactly the same reasoning applies to the social welfare of the people, the change is so great that the men of two hundred years ago, would not recognise the England of to-day.

Human nature we understand has not changed, the desire for freedom on the part of the masses is just the same, the spirit of patriotism that made men fight for their country is still found among us.

Something then has brought that change into the life of England. Something has taken the desires of the people as a standard for advancement in all matters of state, and to-day we find the people of England with greater self reliance and a wider outlook on all matters of every day life. This change has been brought about by a definite policy of operation on the part of those who rule our land.

In the realms of spiritual thought we find men who still hold to the axiom that it does not matter what a man believes. We often hear one man say of another, he has no religion but he is a good man.

Then one may ask, what has changed that man from the state under which his ancestors lived, when the land was called savage, and the only man who mattered was the one who could place so many men in the field to uphold his own so-called rights.

The Human Nature of bygone men is still the same as ours of to-day, and we can only understand that some outside influence has been brought to bear upon the life of the man of the present century. In our own land that influence which has so changed the outlook of individuals, is the power for good which the light of the Christian religion has shed over the lives of men and women whose environment has been changed by the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Either Theism or Atheism must have made the change, for a man must believe in one or the other. We find writers like Van Bien placing before the people what he thinks Atheism has done for mankind, but even that logical writer forgets that Atheism is only a negation, which means nothing, and we know that "Anything" cannot come out of "Nothing," so we are driven back to the fact that all that has helped mankind for the advancement of that life is the outcome of definite policy, and everything points to that policy being the influence of Christianity upon the lives of men.

Then, while we can hold the theory that nothing can change human nature, do not let us forget that the human nature can be influenced and helped towards better things by the power that God gives to men.

C.E.R. WHEELER C.F.

MY LITTLE ARTICLE.

I am an aspirant to literary honours. Although I really am extremely modest about the subject, I "feel it in me" that I can write. Once I had a story accepted for my school magazine. I was twelve then, and when I was fourteen some one said my poetry was "sweet." So you see this feeling of mine is not without foundation.

And then I saw the entrancing question in the "Cologne Post." "Are you literary?" The very thing for me, my chance had come at last! "There is a tide in the affairs"—I thought as I grabbed pen and paper.

Well, I wrote my little article. When I had finished I felt a glow of satisfaction. It was light and dainty; the style was of a crystal clearness, and lacked not charm. It was funny, undoubtedly it was funny, it made me chuckle just to read the title. I had no idea I could write so well—so easily too, just ten minutes by the clock, and this little gem of literature had sprung into being.

Lovingly I re-wrote it, marvelling at my own delicious genius. By the way, what exactly was the correct way to spell parallel? Absurd how writing muddles one's spelling. "Nita, darling" I called to my wife "Two r's in parallel, aren't there?" Nita thinks she is an authority on spelling and it is tactful sometimes to ask her advice.

"Silly old boy, one r and three l's," she said, rubbing my hair the wrong way, and, of course, reading my little article "Oh, let me see, are you writing a story?"

I explained, and watched her as she read my neatly written page. I waited for the peal of mirth, with a sympathetic smile curving my own lips.

"But I don't see the point" she said, wrinkling her brows as she began to re-read the article.

"Did he kiss the wrong girl or was the right one offended?

She wasn't usually so stupid. I explained the point, which of course spoiled the humour and she didn't laugh. "There is a terrible split infinitive," was all she said.

"Bother!" why had I appealed to her at all? Women are always so superior, and I could easily have used a dictionary.

You like it dear? I'm going to send it to the "Cologne Post." I said, writing out an envelope.

"For heaven's sake use a nom-de-plume, then," she said in a perfectly unreasonable and inexcusable panic. "And let me glance through it first, dear old boy. There aren't sixteen s's in successes."

"That will do, Nita," I said coldly. "The article goes in as it is".

I sent my wife from my chair, and my article into the cold, critical world, to stand the test of an editor's eagle eye. That was a month ago and for aught I know, it is still the beam in that eye—for it could never be a mote.

I shall write another soon, and do it all by myself this time.

E.M.S.

U. S. AND THE PEACE TREATY.

SENATE RUINING THE PROSPECTS OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

IMPORTANT CONCESSIONS TO RAILWAYMEN.

PEACE TREATY.

PRACTICALLY ANNULLED BY U.S. SENATE.

For the first time in the history of the United States Senate the principle of the closure has been adopted which limits each speaker to one hour. Under the ruling of vice-President Marshall the closure is effective until the Peace Treaty is ratified or the President notifies the Senate that he does not consent to reservations. The vice-President has further ruled that the rejection of one resolution of ratification of the Treaty would not prevent another being brought up in the hope of effecting a compromise, if the majority of the Senate so desired.

From the moment the closure was declared during the debate on the Peace Treaty the Republican majority of the United Senate overrode all opposition. The Senate had hitherto adopted all but two of the Foreign Relations Committee's reservations, including the reservation to the United States of the right to increase armaments without the consent of the Council of the League of Nations whenever the United States was threatened with invasion or was engaged in war.

The Democrats have called a conference of friends of the Treaty for early this week with a view to finding a compromise.

The following reservation resolutions have already passed the Senate.

The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction. It declares that all questions relating wholly or partly to its internal affairs, including labour, immigration, coast-wise commerce and traffic, and all questions affecting the present boundaries of the United States, its insular and other possessions, cannot under the Peace Treaty be submitted to arbitration or consideration by the Council or Assembly of the League of Nations or to decision or recommendation by any power.

The Monroe reservation says the doctrine is to be interpreted by the United States. It is wholly outside the jurisdiction of the League of Nations and is entirely unaffected by any provision of the Treaty of Peace with Germany.

The Shantung reservation declares that the United States withholds its assent from articles 156, 157 and 158, and reserves to itself full liberty of action in respect of any controversy arising under the said articles between China and Japan.

The reservation on economic boycotts says that the United States reserves the right to permit nationals of any Covenant-breaking State (as defined in Article 16 of the Covenant of the League of Nations) residing within the United States, or in countries other than that violating the said Article 16, to continue commercial and personal relations with Nationals of the United States.

The decision of the Senate in adopting these reservations, thus practically nullifying the Treaty of Peace, has produced a situation which is viewed in London and Paris with the utmost concern, and the illness of President Wilson at this critical period increases the difficulty of forecasting any solution. One uncertain factor is whether the American people approve or disapprove of the Senate in thus overthrowing the whole of the Labour of the President at the Peace Conference.

PROPOSAL TO SELL GERMANY'S RAILWAYS.

A proposal to sell the German State railways to America has been put forward by a "well-known financier" in "Germania", Herr Erzberger's principal organ, on the plea that all other attempts to obtain foreign credits had failed. The railways are estimated to be worth from 90 to 100 milliards of marks (£5,000,000,000).

RUSSIAN INDIGNATION WITH LLOYD GEORGE.

All the newspapers in North Russia says a telegram from Archangel, comment with some aspersion on Mr. Lloyd George's Guildhall speech. One says: "To think that Russians could bring themselves to treat with ruffian commissaries is to be ignorant of the real situation of Russia."

YUDENITCH IN PERIL.

According to a Reval message the Esthonian Government has decided to disarm Yudenitch's Army if it crossed the Esthonian frontier. It is reportes from Helsingfors that Tchicherin has reproached the Esthonian Government with supporting Yudenitch. Bolshevists are violently attacking the Esthonian troops but hitherto have been everywhere repulsed.

The Secretary of State for Scotland has appointed a Committee to hold an inquiry and report on lands used as deer forests.

LABOUR MATTERS.

PRESENT AND FUTURE CAMPAIGNS.

Labour leaders and Trade Union officials were very busy during the whole of last week. There is now no immediate crisis, although the situation is not without anxieties to those concerned. The railway negotiations have yet to be satisfactorily concluded. It was anticipated that the National Union of Railwaymen's Committee would have been able to give a final answer on Saturday to the Government's proposals, but the Committee adjourned until to-day. The railwaymen appear to recognise that the offer to them to share in the Committee of Management of the Railways is a big step and there is little doubt that it will be accepted. One of the questions which caused some discussion was as to whether the proposed Committee will have executive powers or will be merely advisory.

The Special Trade Union Congress which will be held in London on the 9th and 10th December has been called for an earlier date than was anticipated, and it is doubtful whether the Labour representatives who have gone to Washington will be back in time for it. The demand for nationalization of mines will occupy an important place on the agenda and the Congress will be called upon to decide its course of action to induce the Government to carry out the majority report of the Sankey Commission. A campaign in favour of the principle of nationalization is to be launched almost immediately with the full support of organised labour. The cost of living is another important subject which will be brought before the Congress.

Mr. Hill, Secretary to the Boilermakers Society, writes that the question of working hours is likely to give trouble before the winter is over. Formerly the hours in midwinter were only forty weekly but the men are now being asked to work forty-seven hours all the year round.

RAILWAYMEN.

DETAILS OF GOVERNMENT OFFER.

Addressing a large meeting of Railwaymen at Bristol on Sunday, Mr. J. H. Thomas gave a few further details of the Government's offer, which he hoped would be accepted. He said the proposed Joint Board was to consist of five general managers and five representatives of the Locomotive men and the National Union of Railwaymen. These ten would be charged with all negotiations in connection with conditions of service.

In the event of failure of any negotiations the public would be brought in by referring the dispute to another body of twelve. Four of these would represent four of the companies and four the public. One of the last would be a Trade Unionist quite unconnected with the railways, and another would be a representative of the co-operative movement. There would also be local machinery to deal with local questions. Another important concession was that three railwaymen would join the Railway Executive Committee with powers equal to those possessed by general managers.

RECORD SNOWFALL.

Further snowstorms of seven hours' duration in the East Yorkshire Wolds have greatly increased the depths of the snowfall. Roads are being cut for traffic and all outdoor and agricultural work has been stopped. A Berwick message says that never in the memory of living men has such a snowstorm been experienced in the Border districts, where the snow is now lying eighteen inches deep. Snow ploughs are being used to clear the country and sledges are in great demand.

The South and East of Scotland is experiencing from 29 to 32 degrees of frost. Such conditions of Arctic weather have not prevailed at this period of the year for over half a century. Skating, curling and tobogganing are in full swing.

NEEDLE IN THE HEART.

An extraordinary story of the discovery of a needle in a child's heart was told at Shoreditch Coroner's Court at an inquest on Rosina Maud Newton, aged 13 months, the daughter of a leather case maker, of Wenlock-street, Hoxton. The child was taken ill on Wednesday and died in a few hours.

Dr. J. Fettes, said a post-mortem examination disclosed the end of a needle projecting about an inch outside the pericardium, while the tip had penetrated the pericardium and left ventricle. The needle was about 2½ inches in length, and had been there at least some days. There was no skin wound to show where it entered the body.

A verdict of "Accidental death" was recorded.

SOCIETY SUICIDE.

MYSTERIOUS CLAIM TO ROYAL DESCENT.

The mystery surrounding Mrs. Steane the society woman who committed suicide by taking cyanide of potassium after attending the Victory Ball, is attracting considerable attention. It appears that she herself claimed descent from the Crown Prince Rudolf of Austria. When she arrived in England from America about three years ago, Scotland Yard, which was aware of her claims, made an exhaustive investigation. The officials were convinced that her parents were American. She, however, had many believers in Society, in which she soon became a prominent figure.

Extraordinary tales of her antecedents were current, including one to the effect that the Austrian Emperor Francis Joseph gave a priest fifty thousand pounds to have her educated in America, where she was known as Alma Vetcera. After several brilliant seasons in New York she married a Canadian, whom she divorced on grounds of desertion before she came to London.

PENSIONS SCANDAL.

ENQUIRY INTO LOCAL COMMITTEE'S ADMINISTRATION.

The Ministry of Pensions have informed the East Ham War Pensions Committee that they are placing an officer from the Ministry in charge of all the funds entrusted to the committee and to make payments, and also that they are closing the committee's banking account. The Ministry also intend to hold a public inquiry into the administration of the local committee on November 24.

The committee last night considered the letter, and a sub-committee was appointed to go into the details of cases in which it was suggested there had been irregularity, for the purpose of preparing a case for the inquiry.

It will be remembered that the committee took up the case of a W.A.A.C. who appealed for the full allowance made to discharged soldiers, contending that she had been discharged on medical grounds. Despite a recent answer in Parliament that the allowance should not be paid, the committee have continued to pay it.

NO CONSCRIPTION.

TWADDLE AND TROUBLE.

The proprietors of the Aldwych theatre have cancelled the letting of that theatre for the 30th November, when a demonstration of the "No Conscription Fellowship" was to have been held, at which Mr. Smillie, the Hon. Bertrand Russell, Mr. Philip Snowden and Lord Parmoor were expected to speak. It is believed that the theatre authorities are apprehensive of disturbances if the meeting is held.

MONTENEGRO AND BALKAN ALLIANCE.

The Jugo-Slav delegate to the Peace Conference, M. Radovitch, referring to the recent discussion in the House of Commons regarding Montenegro, has declared that the representatives of all regions and of all political parties in Montenegro have expressed their attachment to the new political regime, under which Montenegro has joined the Serbo-Croat-Slovene State.

He denied that Jugo-Slav troops have been used to influence Skupshtina or that Serbian troops were oppressing the people of Montenegro. The troops in question, which were mostly composed of natives of Montenegro and volunteers, were only defending the peaceful population against brigands, who are supported by the enemies of Jugo-Slavia. This unrest would vanish as soon as the foreign troops quitted Jugo-Slavia.

Nobody, he declared, could ever again separate Montenegro from the Serbo-Croat-Slovene State, the basis of which will be definitely settled by a constituent assembly composed of members freely elected by the peoples of the whole State.

IRISH CATTLE FAIR SUPPRESSED.

The cattle and sheep fair at the village of Kilcommon, County Tipperary, which is within a proclaimed area, was dispersed by armed police on Saturday, beasts brought to the fair being turned back. There was no resistance and for a novelty everything passed off peacefully.

LATVIA'S GRATITUDE.

Mr. Lloyd George has received from M. Ullmanes, the Premier of Latvia, a telegram conveying the heartfelt gratitude of the people of Latvia for the assistance rendered by a British squadron in repelling the German attacks on Riga, also for arms, ammunition and equipment supplied. The telegram concludes with an appeal to the British nation to continue to render assistance.

ALLIANCE IN THE UKRAINE.

Representatives of the border states of Poland, the Ukraine and White Russia are discussing the question of an Alliance with a common policy. The best understanding prevails.

'VARSITY NOTES.

ANCIENT GREEK AND MODERN YOUNG WOMEN.

During the past week there have been further developments in the question of compulsory Greek at Oxford. While it is certain that the Greek Committee's amendment to the Responsions Statute (namely, the exemption of scientists, mathematicians and passmen from compulsory Greek) will be moved at the next Congregation, there are signs of a still further compromise. Professor Gilbert Murray has indicated that a new amendment will be moved with the concurrence of the Greek Committee, the net result of which would be to lighten the extent of compulsory Greek by dividing the subject into four compartments and allowing candidates to offer two only. One of the four would be the subject matter of a Greek book studied in English. There is, however, considerable opposition to establishing such a dividing line between Passmen and Honours men, as this charge would tend to increase the number of Passmen instead of reducing them as is desirable.

The University seal has been affixed to the French regime. The Warden of All Souls has been appointed to represent Oxford for the occasion.

At Cambridge the proposed alterations in the length of terms is generally approved except as regards the possibility of an extension of the Easter term affecting the Long Vacation work, the value of which, especially in the case of science men, is fully recognised. Consequently, the proposed charges will be readjusted so as to keep Easter term engagements well within June.

The Union Debating Society now has 1,009 members and all the social clubs are again in good working order. The Historic Amateur Dramatic Club has resumed its activities, but has been financially crippled by the war, during which it has only been enabled to pay rates and taxes, etc., by the guarantee of a few resident old members. This sum must be paid off and the secretary is appealing to old members for contributions. On the other hand its young rival society is doing remarkably well.

It is rumoured that Miss Stephens, Principal of Newnham, and Miss Sedgwick, ex-Principal and now Bursar, are both resigning. Modern young women rather resent the application to them of what they regard as old-fashioned nineteenth century ways, and it is anticipated that when the new appointments are made it will be borne in mind that Newnham is very "advanced."

PRISONERS IN RUSSIA.

BRITISH AND SOVIET ENVOYS MEET.

The representative of the Russian Soviet, Litvinoff, was due to arrive on the Esthonian frontier on Sunday. The British Admiralty are arranging to convey him from Reval to Copenhagen but whether on a destroyer or otherwise is unknown. He will have with him two British prisoners of war and is expected to reach Copenhagen on the 19th, where he will confer with Mr. James O'Grady, the Labour M.P., who has gone to Copenhagen to arrange details for exchange of prisoners, both military and civil.

HOLLAND AND BELGIUM.

NO MILITARY ALLIANCE.

The Dutch Minister for Foreign Affairs, in a speech in the second Chamber, stated that the Netherlands Government identifies itself with the objections which have been made to a military Alliance with Belgium. He further declared that the Dutch Government intends to become a party to the League of Nations as soon as the Treaty embodying the Covenant comes into force. It would not serve any useful purpose, however, for the Government to commit itself at present.

DENIKIN EVACUATING KIEFF.

Reuter learns that Denikin has ordered the evacuation of Kieff. His army is in a very dangerous position and hard pressed by the Bolshevists, while his railway communications have been cut in his rear by Ukrainian insurgents. A Bolshevist wireless message announces that the Reds have occupied Omsk.

GERMAN CONSUL RE-INTERNED.

The former German Consul in Brisbane, named Hirschfeld, who had been released from internment and whose deportation was recently demanded by a meeting at Brisbane of some three thousand returned soldiers, has now been re-arrested and will be re-interned.

ALSATIANS INDEMNIFIED.

It is reported from Strassbourg, via Paris, that Germany has agreed to pay 25,000,000 francs to the French Government to enable the latter to indemnify some 4,000 Alsatians who were arrested during the war for their French sympathies.

The Reverend Draper, Rector of Leeds, has been appointed Master of the Temple in succession to Canon Barnes, whose resignation takes effect in January.

ARMY DISCHARGES.

APPRENTICES AND WIFE DESERTERS.

An Army Order issued on Friday amends the King's Regulations by further provisions for the discharge of:

1. Soldiers claimed as apprentices under Section 96 of the Army Act;
2. Men who made false declarations on attestation;
3. Men claimed as wife deserters.

In the latter case, if the Parish authorities do not send a constable to arrest the soldier he will be held to serve and a portion of his pay will be withheld for his wife's support. If the wife applies for a man's discharge within six months of his attestation and produces the necessary evidence, a portion of his soldier's pay will be withheld for her benefit or summary proceedings will be taken under the Army Act with a view to securing the man's conviction and discharge. If a man has served for more than six months and it is considered desirable to retain him in the service he will not be discharged except on application by the Parish authorities. If he is retained in these circumstances and his wife claims almony, it will be granted.

COLLIERIES CLOSED.

CANNOT COPE WITH INCREASED OUTPUT.

The Welsh Anthracite Miners' Association at Swansea has passed a resolution calling on the Coal Controller to investigate the closing of a number of collieries, having regard to the urgent need from a national point of view for further production of coal and the necessity of keeping the collieries working.

It is understood that the owners have taken the step through lack of transit facilities in dealing with larger output, owing to the considerable railway congestion and the great shortage of railway wagons.

POLICE BARRACKS BURNED.

Coora (Clare) police barracks, at which a conflict took place between police and civilians last week, has been burnt to the ground. When police reinforcements arrived and relieved the besieged sergeant and constable with their prisoners the entire party returned to Kilrush. After their departure a crowd gathered, tarred the woodwork of the barracks, smattered the windows with bullets, and broke up the furniture. The building was then set on fire and burnt to the ground.

As all telegraph wires are cut news is slow in coming through. There is great excitement in the district.

SMART PROFITEERING FINES.

William Goode, of the Railway Hotel, Hinckley, was fined £60 and 25 guineas special costs at Leamington for charging 8d instead of 8d. for Guinness's stout. He was caterer at the Warwickshire Agricultural Show.

For an overcharge of 2½d. on a two-pound packet of Quaker oats, Henry Duncombe, manager, Lethbridges Stores, Eastbourne, was fined £20 and five guineas special costs.

At North London Police Court Alfred Unwin, licensee of the George public-house, Glyn-road, Hackney, was fined £100 and ordered to pay £4 4s. costs for selling four half-pints of bitter ale at 5d. instead of 4½d. per half-pint.

NOBEL PRIZES FOR GERMANS.

The 1918 Nobel prize for physics has been awarded to Professor M. Planck, of Berlin University; the 1919 Nobel prize for physics to Professor Stark, of Greifswald University; and the 1918 Nobel prize for chemistry to Professor F. Haber, of Berlin University. Each prize is worth about £8,000.

FOR THEIR FATHERS' VALOUR.

Himself a holder of the French Military Medal, a very rare distinction for officers, General Sir William Robertson, Commander-in-Chief of the British Army of the Rhine, represented Field Marshal Earl Haig at a ceremony held at the Trocadero, Paris, on Sunday. It was a function organised by recipients of the medal in aid of the children of those other ranks awarded the Military Medal who were killed in the war. Every foreign sovereign who has been awarded the medal was also represented.

M.O.'s DEMOBILIZED.

The War Office states that 4823 medical practitioners have been demobilized from the Army since 1st April last. Approximately 173 medical practitioners holding temporary commissions are still detained under the terms of their contracts in Mesopotamia, 152 in India and 244 in Egypt.

YOUNG SEA-DOGS.

SCHEME FOR EDUCATION AND TRAINING.

The report of the Committee appointed to prepare a draft for a National Scheme of training for the sea service has just been issued. It recommends the establishment of a National Corporation to supervise and administer the scheme of training. Such training should be confined to deck ratings, prospective engine-room ratings, and stewards, who enter the sea service up to the age of sixteen. The primary object of the training institutions should be to give a sound general education concurrently with technical instruction for sea life. The Admiralty must provide the vessels for the necessary work afloat. The Committee are opposed to the acceptance of boys from reformatory schools but are in favour of including boys from industrial schools. The suggested rate of pay during a boy's first year at sea is 25 per cent. of an able seaman's wages and in the second year and until his indentures terminate, fifty per cent.

BOGUS AMBASSADOR ARRESTED.

The New York State Legislative Committee which is investigating the activities of the Radical extremists has issued an order for the arrest of Ludwig Mertens, who describes himself as the Russian Soviet Ambassador, for failing to appear before the Committee.

Mertens ignored the subpoena ordering his appearance, and insisted on his immunity as a diplomatic representative. A later message states that Mertens has been arrested.

Jim Larkin, the Irish Labour leader, has been committed for trial before a grand jury. The chief magistrate, in coming to this decision, scathingly denounced the "Reds."

DEATH OF BARON SWINFEN.

We regret to announce the death of Baron Swinfen, which took place on Saturday. The deceased judge, who will be better remembered as Sir Charles Swinfen Eady, has not lived long to enjoy the recent honour bestowed by the King, as only a few weeks have elapsed since he was elevated to the peerage on his retirement from the Masterhip of the Rolls, which he had held for a little over a year.

Born in 1851, he was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple in 1879. From 1901 to 1913 he was a Chancery Judge and for the next five years a Lord Justice of Appeal.

RUMANIA AND PEACE.

The Supreme Council has decided that the text of the Note to Rumania should only be published in the event of the Rumanian Government making difficulties about its acceptance. In this event the concessions made at the request of the Rumanian delegates will also be published.

The urgent question of revictualling Vienna has been referred to a Committee.

CORDITE FACTORY EXPLOSION.

A series of violent explosions occurred early on Saturday morning at Holton Heats Cordite factory, near Wareham, Dorset. The first explosion was followed by others and the flames of the fierce fire which ensued were visible for miles around. It is reported that one man was killed and several injured.

INCREASED TEMPORARY PENSIONS.

The Minister of Pensions has arranged for payment of temporary pensions to discharged and disabled men at the rate of forty shillings instead of 27s. 6d. per week, as from the 3rd September, during the first four weeks after discharge and thereafter until the announcement of an award, pension or gratuity.

OUR ATHLETIC PRINCE.

The Prince of Wales has arrived at White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, where he is spending a strenuous holiday. On Saturday he walked ten miles over the Appalachian mountains where, after an hour spent at the swimming pool he golfed for three hours and the same evening attended a dance.

CHRISTMAS FRUIT SUPPLIES.

Christmas fruit will probably be cheap this year, says a prominent Covent Garden dealer. Oranges are good and plentiful. There is a good supply of bananas and dealers in general are not charging more than twopence each. Apples, both English and Novia Scotian, and nuts are abundant.

TRIAL OF HUNGARIAN TERRORISTS.

The first hearing of the trial of terrorists implicated in the Soviet regime at Buda-Pesth has been fixed by the Criminal Court to begin on the 24th November, when Joseph Cserby and thirty of his associates will be charged with the murder of Field Marshal Ferry and others.

STAINED WITH BLOOD.

The intensely human document written by a British officer attached to General Denikin's Army in South Russia to his wife in England, and recently published in "The Times," is probably the most gruesome of pen-pictures of the callous cruelties and calumnies perpetrated by the Bolshevist element in Russia that has seen the light of publication.

We had most of us come to regard the Bolshevist as a degenerate being, carried away by the so-called newly found liberty, with sadly distorted ideas of right and wrong, and a suddenly acquired love of lust and loot, but here he is depicted as a monster devoid of all the attributes of humanity, possessed by a maniacal craving for blood, and the outrages and ravages described, stamp him as an agent of the Devil himself.

Beside the stories so vividly told the harassing tales and horrors of the French Revolution pale into insignificance; they are as a dagger driven to the heart as compared with a minor flesh wound.

Britishers who have glibly adopted this devilish title can have possessed but scant knowledge of the organization, or rather the vile collection of depraved knaves, with whom they have associated themselves.

"They have declared war on Christianity; the Bible to them is a counter-revolutionary book, and they are aiming at raising all non-Christian races against the Christian countries," says the writer, and after adding that he hopes to send photographs of some of their most revolting crimes, he adds, "Their horror may make people realise. They must realise. By God, they shall realise."

The letter is a stirring appeal for a crusade against the enemies of real Russia and against the fiends who are out to undermine and stamp out Christianity. While such a pernicious scheme can have no hope of success the possibilities of destructive devilry in the hands of the authors are tremendous. Though doomed to ultimate extinction they will not release their hold until much of the deadly poison in their fangs has been embedded in the wound they have opened in the flesh of Europe.

Such an appeal for help recalls the old cry, "Come over into Macedonia and help us." While active operations against the foes of civilization is possible to but few, perhaps, much good can be done by exposing the vile character of the reptile and losing no opportunity to denounce him.

THE GERMAN STUDENT.

HARD STUDY AND FIGHTING.

One is so frequently asked the reason of University students wearing different coloured caps that the following article will give a short description of their mode of life and duels.

On leaving school the youth proceeds to some such University which in the opinion of his parents will suit his requirements for his early training. Later he has the option at a small cost of moving to other Universities, where he can attend any special lectures he desires.

On coming into the town he either takes rooms to live alone, or he may reside with relations or family friends. His next duty is to pay his entrance and class fees, and be presented to the rector of the University. Now he is at liberty to join one of the many student clubs which exist, be it corps, who wear the peculiar concertina-shaped caps, Burschenschaft, who wear the flat caps, or a Verein, who wear either a small flat cap or none at all, except in their club house or Kneipe, as it is called.

Much misapprehension exists with regard to these Kneipes, many believing that they are clubs in which the students pass the greater part of their day as well as night drinking beer.

DUELS TO FIGHT.

This however is not the case, for the majority of these societies train the young student in the way he should go, and any overlapping on his part brings about appropriate punishment in the shape of reprimands or suspension.

As to which society he shall join depends either on himself or his parents' choice beforehand. If he is well-to-do or a member of the aristocracy then he joins a Corps, if the son of a business or professional man and not wishing to be extravagant in any way, then a Burschenschaft or Verein is chosen. In any case if he joins either of the first two named it is essential for him to fight a certain number of duels.

Each Corps and Burschenschaft possesses club rooms or houses, which are hung round with their colours, photos and swords. Here once or twice in the week they meet for a friendly evening to sing songs and drink beer and oftimes taking their "abendessen."

All members attend these meetings which is presided over by a senior student, who sees that proper order is kept. The senior members also meet on certain nights to discuss amongst the other things the newly joined youth or "Fuchs," as he is so called, and woe betide any delinquents on whom their wrath may fall.

The youthful "Fuchs" must attend his University lectures, and also pass part of his time in the gymnasium learning to become an efficient fencer for the time when he will fight his first duel and not disgrace his fellow members.

Corps and Burschenschafts keep severely apart, never associating or fighting with one another except in the case of quarrels.

THE DAY OF THE FRAY.

The time now comes for the duels to take place and arrangements have been made to pit one Corps or Burchenschaft against another.

On arrival at the chosen spot one finds all preparations have been made, the surgeon has his lint and bowl ready, the Club steward has seen to the swords or schlägers, which consist of long thin blades with razor-sharp edges, protected by canvas covered with the society colours, at the hilt.

The fighters are being dressed for the fray, thick leather pads protect their right arms, chests and iron goggles the eyes. The opposing parties in the meantime have also arrived, both sides courteously bow, but otherwise do not associate.

A timekeeper and two seconds take up their position and the word is given: "Auf de Mensur binde che Rhinge". The arms which are held upright are now relinquished and the two swords are crossed, vertically; as this is done the umpire says "gebunden sind" and followed at once by "los", and immediately the two go at it hammer and tongs.

Presently a tuft of hair flies up or a streak of blood appears on the face, and the seconds knock up the swords with their own, with which they are provided calling a sharp halt.

The surgeon steps forward with a sponge, and if not serious the battle again recommences but with the same ceremonial as at first. The fight continues until one has received so severe a cut that the doctor thinks he will lose too much blood, but in no case is it carried on longer than 15 minutes.

The two opponents then retire, thoroughly tired out, to their respective chairs, where their wounds are sewn and bandaged up, and where they receive the congratulations of their friends.

THE COURT OF HONOUR.

Three to four duels are as a rule fought in the course of the morning and then all return home to their mid-day meal.

Having fought his requisite number of duels the "fuchs" is entitled to wear the narrow riband across his breast, worked in society colours.

Apart from these organised fights other duels take place brought about by quarrels. These may either be fought with a schlager, sabre or pistol, according to the seriousness of the occasion. If either of the latter weapons are chosen then a "Court of Honour" sits beforehand to decide if the fight is necessary, and in the case of the death of one of the opponents, which some times does occur, the matter is brought before the authorities and the delinquent awarded punishment by imprisonment in a fortress for six months.

Generally speaking the students are hard-working and attend their lectures regularly, for it is considered a great disgrace to themselves and families should they fail to pass a good examination.

As in other similar communities one comes across the lazy and dissolute, but with them the university authorities deal if they overstep the mark, and a prison is kept in the University precincts to which youths are committed.

From this short description one may see that beer drinking is not the chief occupation of a German student, and although to us their duels may appear somewhat foolish affairs, yet to their idea they are regarded with all seriousness.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views.

EXCESSIVE CIGARETTE SMOKING.

Sir,—Has it ever occurred to your readers that there is far too much cigarette smoking indulged in by our youthful Army of to-day, and specially by the lads who comprise the majority of units in this Rhine Army?

It is no exaggeration to state that, on an average, from 15 to 20 cigarettes are smoked daily by every man in this Rhine Army (non-smokers are reckoned in striking the average).

You see these fine looking lads at all hours of the day, in billets, and out of billets, on duty and off duty, in trams, or walking the streets of Cologne and other towns, invariably either sucking a cigarette, or with one stuck behind the ear ready to be consumed. As for the latter common practice, nothing could look more slovenly or unsoldierlike, but no one seems to take any trouble to stop it.

Before the war at home, no cigarette smoking was ever allowed in Regular Units before the dinner hour and never on the line of march. The old fashioned and wholesome pipe was allowed on the march at certain stated periods. Why has this excellent order been allowed to slide into abeyance?

It is an undisputed fact that excessive cigarette smoking by growing boys and girls is extremely harmful to health and especially to the nervous system; bad for the heart and the wind.

This is proved by the fact that all athletes in training for any particular sport or game invariably reduce, if not completely "knock off" all smoking, and our chief aim is to keep this young Army fit for war. Medical officers will also tell us that it is going to have a very pernicious effect on the future birth-rate, if indulged in to excess. My opinion is that cigarette smoking is indulged in to excess by our youthful Army on the Rhine; and that it is going to have a very injurious effect on the future life of the nation when these lads return to civil life.

Another very important reason against it is that these lads cannot afford it. They are getting good pay now, but this money is not given to them to fritter away in cigarettes and cinemas. They should be encouraged to save money and think of the days ahead when they will want all they can find to get a home together.

This excessive smoking habit is directly due to the war. It is one of the greatest evils resulting from the war. When the war was on, a generous country provided by many agencies (such as the Y.M.C.A., Church Army and private societies) our fighting men with all the little extra comforts that could reasonably be given to them; tobacco and cigarettes were very properly given free and to a liberal extent. No sane man could object to that. I know many men who could not have endured the hardships they did without the comforting assistance of a pipe or cigarette during those weary watches in the trenches, or even in the fights itself. But that is quite beside the point.

Those days, thank God, have gone, and we are now dealing with quite a different kind of soldier — a growing boy in his teens — who should be encouraged to exercise self-control in smoking just as in other ways. It would be interesting to calculate the hundreds of pounds puffed away weekly by our soldier lads, mostly under 21 years of age, in aimless cigarette smoking. There is an organisation called the A.T.A. (Army Temperance Association) which has done wonderful work in the past, and especially in India, to encourage partial and total abstinence from drinking.

It is a matter for congratulation and a source of pride to know that our lads in the Army to-day do not drink to excess, in fact hundreds of them are total abstainers. Why cannot some organisation be started to encourage, at any rate, a reduction in this pernicious evil of excessive smoking of cigarettes? No young soldier keeps his wits about him if he is an excessive smoker; nothing is more calculated to deaden his senses and addle his brain.

Will anyone give the lead to start this organisation? Something ought to be done, and done quickly, if the future of the race is to be saved from the effects of this universal evil.

A SENIOR OFFICER.

RECKONING THE MARK.

Sir,—After reading "Wilts" article re above I have come to the conclusion that he must be a very bigoted man, who while singing his own praises regarding gratuities to waiters cannot resist hurling an insult at a nation. When next he writes I would advise him to substitute British for English and so prevent ill-feeling.

As regards the value of the mark to Jerry it is much the same as before the war.

Wages have risen practically on the same scale as prices. It is not the scarcity of marks but the shortage of foodstuffs, which he feels most.

As for tips, does "Wilts" mean to suggest that while he gave a shilling in civil life he now gives 1s 6d? If so I think he must stand alone. MARKER.

UNRESPONSIVE AUDIENCES.

Sir,—I went with my wife the other evening to an entertainment given at the Deutsches Theatre. I was most unfavourably impressed by the unsportsmanlike attitude of the stalls. The show was excellent and the artists worked like Trojans—in vain. The other ranks unfeignedly enjoyed themselves while the stalls for about an hour and a quarter preserved an air of awful impenetrable and highly respectable aloofness.

There were, thank goodness one or two who laughed, but these were looked at askance by their neighbours. Let us for Heaven's sake "cut out" this sort of thing and be natural. That kind of thing died in 1870.

HONESTY.

THE CHILDREN.

Sir,—In your issue of Sunday you stated that a children's service would be held at 2.30 p.m. on Sundays at the Cologne Central Y.M.C.A.

That was our intention. We have heard, however, that it was announced in the Garrison Church yesterday that a Sunday School is to be opened there; and of course we are glad that the Chaplain finds it possible to undertake the religious instruction of the children which was our concern only so long as the Church was not in a position to undertake it.

We have therefore decided not to start the children's Sunday afternoon service. Instead we shall do our utmost to persuade the day school children to attend the Sunday School in the Garrison Church.

We have had no communication of any kind from any quarter upon this subject. This strikes us as being one of the many illustrations of the excellent relations that exist between those who are striving in separate spheres and various ways, to promote the interests of the troops.

A.F., For the Cologne Central Y.M.C.A.

A "HARD" CASE: SHALL WE COMPLY?

Sir,—Would it be asking too great a favour to suggest that I might be put on your free list to receive "The Cologne Post" daily?

I know intimately at least two members of your staff and my name frequently appears in your paper in reports of concerts, sports, events, and so on.

Naturally I have a very great interest in seeing the "Post" regularly, much more so than the average man, unknown to fame in cold print.

I sent a notice of a dance I am organising to you last week and should be glad to know if same has appeared, as I am anxious that the dance should be a great success and I have not seen a copy of your paper for a week. I should hate to be seen buyng a copy at a bookstall, it looks so unprofessional, but as I live not a stone's throw from your office perhaps it would not be any trouble for you to have a copy left daily at my billet.

Needless to say if you would see your way to render this little service I shall be only too pleased to continue sending notices of any interesting affairs I am promoting without expecting payment at your usual rates. Wishing your paper every success and a rising circulation.

CONSTANT READER.

P. S. About three or five months ago my name was mentioned in the report of a concert or football match or something, I forget exactly what. Could you please look this up and let me have a few dozen copies as I should like to send these to my people?

WHY NOT WRESTLING?

Sir,—It was with the keenest delight that I read the suggestion put forward by "Cumberland" in regard to wrestling in the Rhine Army.

The Cumberland and Westmoreland style is a fine sport and provides excellent exercise, bringing into play all the muscles of the body.

Why not form a Wrestling Academy? There may not be any such wonders as the Brothers Armstrong of Newcastle or Grahams of Haltwhistle, but plenty to form an Academy.

Come along, the North Country chaps, and give "Cumberland's" appeal the support of which it is worthy.

CROSS BUTTOCK.

Sir,—I read with pleasure the suggestion of "Cumberland" as to encouraging wrestling. Although criticised over my letter recently about boxing films because I ventured to say boxing is a brutal, degrading thing, I am not a narrow-minded anti-sport at all, and except those so-called "sports" that entail cruelty such as stag and fox hunting, coursing hares, etc., I am as keen as anyone.

Now, wrestling doesn't, in my view, come under the heading of a brutal sport. It brings out the endurance, and skill of a man, and ought to be fostered.

I am afraid it will need a lot of encouragement, however for it is far from popular at the present time.

ANTI-BOX.

CHESS FOR OFFICERS.

Sir,—If it was here (the Cologne Central Y.M.C.A.) that your correspondent found himself when he "rolled along to the Y.M.C.A. Club" and was informed that "Officers were not eligible for membership" I can assure him that he was misinformed.

We hold these vast premises in trust for any and all of His Majesty's Forces who may wish to use them. From none of our events and from none of our halls is anyone who wears his Majesty's uniform excluded by us.

From some, I cannot imagine from which of them, officers may exclude themselves, under the pressure of their own sense of "the fitness of things," but the fact that your correspondent and all other keen chess-players, recognise the propriety of inclusiveness in this royal game prove, not only that it cannot be justly said of chess that "that way madness lies," as some of your correspondents have sought to maintain, but also that one of the many positive benefits of chess is that it intensifies sanity.

May I add that our staff, and all who frequent our premises, are glad to notice that an ever-increasing number of officers and their wives are availing themselves of the advantages offered by our reading room and our general and music libraries?

ALEX FRANCIS.

REST FROM JAZZ.

Sir,—May I take up a few lines of your space to answer "Brig" and "Speedy" who voiced their complaints in Sundays' issue of the "Cologne Post."

In reply to "Brig," at the No. 2 Club, upstairs there is an excellent reading and writing room, far away from the "Jazz" he complains of, there he can indite still further letters to the "Post" without distractions of any kind.

Reference Skates, in reply to "Speedy," I would inform him that the N.A.C.B. stores in Glockengasse have a plentiful supply on hand. GUNNEREX.

CAN YOU WRITE?

We pay for all literary contributions to "The Cologne Post," and are pleased to consider articles, humorous sketches and poems by members of the Rhine Army. No article should exceed 500 words, and even shorter ones can be submitted.

RHINE ARMY PROPOSALS.

Arrangements for Ambitious Sports Programme.

We publish below details of a conference held at G.H.Q. at which the question of future sport in Rhineland was discussed and preliminary arrangements made for an ambitious programme to be opened as soon as circumstances allow.

Those present included a representative of the Training Branch G.H.Q., A.I. of P. and R.T. School and one representative from every unit of the future Rhine Army.

A Central Committee.

It was decided, in accordance with rules laid down in a new book recently published by the Army Football Association at home, to which the Army of the Rhine becomes automatically affiliated, to form a Rhine Garrison "Central Committee" including one representative from every playing unit in the Command.

For the purpose of settling minor details in connection with sports programmes etc. it was decided to form a Branch Committee, which shall be called the "Garrison Committee."

Battalion Equivalents.

The Rhine Garrison will form Battalion equivalents representing the following:—

Battalions of Infantry, Pioneers, M.G. and Cavalry Regt.

R.A.M.C. plus any attached R.A.S.C. authorised on the establishment for Field Ambulance.

R.E's. (excluding Sigs.)

R.E's. (Sigs.)

R.A.S.C. (excluding those attached on establishments of Units and M.T.)

187 Bde. R.F.A. including Bde. Amm. Col.

Headquarters Troops (excluding those mentioned above.) Employed men attached from Battns. to Bde. H.Q. and T.M. Batteries to play for the Unit to which they belong.

H.Q. Bn. Equivalents.

Headquarters Troops are to form Battn. equivalents as follows:—

121 Heavy Battery R.G.A.

Engineers. Signal Service, Rhine Signal Battn. Provost Marshal. R.A.S.C. Medical. R.A.O.C. Labour Corps. Transportation. Tank Battn. R.A.F.

Boxing.

It was decided that there should be boxing competitions as follows:—

Novices competitions of three categories.

(a) Those who had never won a Coy. Competition.

(b) a Battn.

(c) Bde.

Team Competitions.

Individual Championships.

The extra ½ mark for a plucky fight will be given in the Novice Classes only.

Bayonet Fencing and P. T.

Bayonet fencing on a platoon basis to be confined to Battns. of Infantry, Pioneer, M.G., and Cavalry Regt. will be organised whilst Physical Training Teams are to be open to Battn. Equivalents.

As regards the platoon basis, it was agreed that the numbers to compete in each platoon should be decided later when the reorganisation of Battns. of the Rhine Garrison was more advanced.

Football.

Association:—There will be two leagues formed consisting of the Rhine Garrison and Headquarters Troops, and in the final the winning team of each league will play one another.

A knock-out competition will be played in addition.

The date of starting the league is to be decided by the "Garrison Committee," the date being dependent on the Rhine Garrison being settled in permanent quarters.

Representatives present were requested to submit the names of qualified referees and those wishing to become qualified as soon as possible to G.S. (T.), G.H.Q. with a view to compiling a register of referees.

Rugby.

A Rugby competition is to be run on a knock-out system.

Hockey.

Hockey is to be excluded from a competitive point of view.

Cross Country Running.

In cross-country running the question of marking is to be considered later by the Central Committee, but 20 runners and 15 to count as a team were decided upon.

Provisional dates for the various competitions could not be decided, but it was settled that the League Association Football should be started as soon as possible.

Cups by Y.M.C.A.

The Y.M.C.A. have intimated that the five Cups which they are presenting should be given for:—

Association Football; 1. Rugby; 1. Boxing; 1. Cross Country Running; 1. P.T. Competition; 1.

The Garrison Committee will decide at a later date what additional cups and medals shall be given from Army Funds.

BOXING-NIGHT BOXING.

At a dinner given at the Criterion London, by Mr. Redmond and Mr. Hubert Barry, and presided over by Lord Leveden, it was announced that the first of the series of tournaments has been fixed for Boxing night. The programme, on paper, is a wonderful one. The contests include:

Joe Beckett (champion of England) v. Dick Smith (the undefeated cruiser-weight champion), over the full championship course.

Pal Moore (America) v. Charles Ledoux (France), also over 20 rounds.

Johnny Griffiths (Akron) v. Francis Charles (France), twelve rounds.

HORSEMEN CUEISTS.

Jockeys v. Corinthians in Charity Billiards Match.

The annual charity billiards match between Jockeys and Corinthians will be played at the Regent Hotel, Deansgate, Manchester, on Nov. 21, which is the eve of the November Handicap race at Castle Irwell. The following teams will represent their respective sides:—

Jockeys.—S. Donoghue (capt.), B. Carslake, F. Lane, A. Smith, E. Wheatley, P. Jones, G. Colling, F. Slade, T. Burns, Jas. Burns, F. Fox, H. Robbins, E. Crickmere, V. Smyth, W. Saxby, H. Buxton, H. Allsop, H. Jelliss, R. Stokes, G. Duller, J. Evans, R. Cooper, and F. Winter.

Corinthians.—Ex-Cpl. James Hutchinson, V.C., Capt. W. H. Stewart, O.B.E., Ex-Capt. Lancelot Todd (Dewsbury F.C.). John Bromilow (champion bowls player), E. Hales, J. Goodier, Jas. T. Renilson, Ferd. Plaisant, J. Hindle, C. H. Wheeldon, E. Black, A. Valentine, Herbert Turner, H. Devenport, C. A. Farell, W. Huntley, P. Lavin, Conny Watts, O. Cliffe, J. Wilson, W. E. Turner, and Harry Mather (capt.).

The games will be 100 up on level terms. A gold medal will be presented to the jockey cueist compiling the highest break on behalf of the horsemen.

HAMILTON FOR CHELSEA?

It is rumoured that Mick Hamill, the old Manchester United half-back, who is now playing for Belfast Celtic, is likely to change his quarters. Two clubs are mentioned—Glasgow Celtic and Chelsea—and it is interesting to note that Hamill assisted Celtic occasionally during the war. He is, of course, a very fine half-back indeed. Hamill is particularly happy in international matches.

BANNING GERMAN FOOTBALL.

At a meeting held at Derby yesterday representatives of the English, Irish, Scottish, and Welsh Football Associations, Mr. J. C. Clegg presiding, it was resolved to send delegates to the proposed Paris conference with instructions to support resolutions of the English Association declining to join any federation to which clubs belonging to the late enemy countries are admitted to membership.

GOLF.

On Saturday, Stoke Poges beat Oxford University in a singles competition at Stoke Poges by five matches to four, one being halved.

In the whole of the day's play, taking singles and foursomes, Stoke Poges won eight matches and Oxford five, two of these being halved.

HURST PARK RACING.

Hot Favourite wins the Autumn Plate.

At Hurst Park on Saturday in fine, but cold, weather, excellent sport was witnessed by a large attendance. Results:—

Mitre Nursery: — 1, Blot (7-1); 2, D'Annunzio (7-1); 3, Nareesh (6-1). Eleven ran.

Petersham Handicap:—1, Cylenius (7-1); 2, Rocksplit (6-2); 3, Porton (5-1). Nine ran.

Autumn Plate:—1, Longstop (20-11 on); 2, Loveite colt (3-1); 3, Hapsend (10-1). Eight ran.

Syon Handicap: — 1, Aris (5-4 on); 2, Challow (6-1), 3, Muscovite (10-1). Nine ran.

Weybridge Nursery:—1, Santoquest (9-1); 2, Pelops (10-1); 3, Twine (5-1). Fourteen ran.

Mortlake Plate: — 1, Clarion (13-8); 2, Powerful (11-2); 3, Hanway (8-1). Four ran.

LAWN TENNIS.

French Champion Defeated by Swiss in Paris.

At Paris, the lawn tennis covered courts championship of the world took place yesterday. In the singles, Gobert beat Sabbagh 6/3, 6/0, 6/4; Simon beat Germot 3/6, 6/4, 6/4.

Mens doubles:—Dupont and Hirsch beat Sorbee Abamart and Vansittaet 6/0, 6/3 6/2. Partlock and Mishu beat Martin and Simon 3/6, 7/5, 6/2, 6/2.

The surprise of the day was the defeat of the old French champion Germot by the Swiss champion, Simon.

Woolley's Soccer Success.

Frank Woolley, the Kent and England cricketer, is again playing football. His long legs carry him over the ground at a great pace, and he knows well the geography of the goal. He turned out for Tunbridge Wells Rangers just recently, and scored three fine goals.

FOOTBALL RESULTS.

Sheffield Wednesday show an Improvement.

COVENTRY'S TWELFTH FAILURE.

The "Throstles" are once again chirping a merry tune, their re-arranged forward line putting on four goals to Aston's two at Villa Park. This came as a great surprise after the Villa's win at the Hawthorns. Another result which was unexpected was Burnley's victory at Old Trafford. This brings them well into the limelight and they are making a bold bid for the leadership. Arsenal's away record was improved by their draw at Bolton. If only they could win their home matches they would soon be among the leaders. Sheffield Wednesday showed a marked improvement by defeating Derby; while Manchester City again trounced Blackburn, this time by four to one.

SECOND LEAGUE.

Fulham did well to draw at Blackpool, and Stoke's victory over Bristol City was a fine performance. Huddersfield's quintette against Coventry was not surprising. This was the City's twelfth defeat, and their goal average of four against thirty-five tells its own story. The Spurs put "paid" to Bury and atoned for their previous week's fall, but they had to fight hard for their victory. The defeat of Barnsley emphasises the draught they are feeling by allowing so many good men to leave their ranks. For a team who on their own confession are all out for Division one, this attitude is inexplicable. Birmingham, by winning over the Wolves (played at Birmingham on West Bromwich ground) rise to second place on the table. West Ham are steadily climbing and more will be heard of the Upton Park lot before long. Their narrow victory over Leicester was deserved.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

Queen's Park Rangers scored well at Brighton. The Rangers deserve sympathy. Only ill luck lost them their recent matches, but they are again to the fore. Reading's defeat by Brentford is explained away by the fact that they were far below strength. Swindon, always a popular side in the Metropolis, surprised the "Lions" at New Cross, and bagged both points. Harold Fleming figured at outside right, quite a change for the International to operate in this position. The "Canaries" sang a joyful air, when they accounted for Southampton. The local Derby at Newport was deservedly won by Cardiff who were full value for their win. Portsmouth returned to a winning mood by defeating Exeter, but Plymouth Argyle got no change from Watford.

SCOTTISH LEAGUE.

Celtic have not been so unreliable and unbalanced for years. They only drew at Ayr, where the "Honest men" gave them a fright and almost snatched the spoils. Glasgow folk are much concerned over their pet team's form. They will have to buck up, for they cannot allow Rangers to slip far ahead. Dumbarton again failed at home, only drawing with Partick. This was their eighth drawn game this season. Hearts' win at Edinburgh was well deserved and Dundee sprang a surprise by defeating Raith, who were operating with ground advantage.

Appended are the results:—

BILLIARDS FINALS.

Falkiner Beats Champion in "Victory" Tournament.

SMITH'S SUCCESS.

The champion billiardist, Inman, was defeated by Falkiner at the Burroughes Hall on Saturday by 4,030, the final scores being:—

Falkiner (rec. 2,000) 16,000
Inman 11,970

The match, which was played in connection with the Burroughes and Watts "Victory" Tournament, attracted considerable interest from the start and its progress was characterised by Falkiner steadily increasing his lead practically at every session.

SMITH AND NEWMAN.

At Thurston's, a close 16,000 up match was concluded between Smith and Newman. Smith got ahead at the start and maintained his lead throughout, being threatened, however, several times towards the end. Final score:—

Smith 16,000
Newman . . . 15,088

STEVENSON AND REECE.

A match that in its course has been witnessed by a very large number of billiards enthusiasts at Manchester also came to an end on Saturday with the final scores reading:—

Stevenson . . . 16,000
Reece (rec. 500) 14,545

FALKINER'S FORM.

Greatest Exponent of close cannon Game.

Falkiner is to be congratulated upon his showing against the champion, who, by the way, has never yet scored a victory over him, says S.J.S. in the "Sunday Express." I was very glad to see in an article written by Inman a handsome tribute to Falkiner as an exponent of the close-cannon game. No player now before the public has such mastery over the balls when they are close. Only the other afternoon Falkiner made a nursery of fifty-six cannons, and in doing so moved them only half-way across the table from the top left-hand pocket to the spot. Inman was greatly impressed.

In other respects, Falkiner has consolidated his game, and is a sounder player now than at any previous period of his career. Moreover, he seems to have shaken off some of that nervousness which always detracted from his play when he was in danger of falling behind. The knowledge that he had never been beaten by Inman may have had something to do with this, but there is no getting away from the fact that Falkiner wants a lot of stopping when his eye is in and he is reaching his schedule points session after session.

MATCH POSTPONED.

The First League match between Newcastle United and Middlesbrough, which should have been played at Newcastle on Saturday had to be postponed on account of the state of the ground.

SCENE AT VILLA PARK.

Early in the first half of the Aston Villa v. West Bromwich Albion match the huge crowd got on to the field and play had to be suspended for five minutes until they had been got back over the touch line. The gates had to be closed before the game started.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

Bonn Amusements.

On Thursday evening at Bonn Y.M.C.A., in the Market place, the band of the 52nd D.L.I. (by kind permission of Lt. Col. Frizell) gave an excellent concert under the able and careful direction of Bandmaster Etherington. Although a large number of the band are young soldiers they reflect great credit to their trainer and there is no touch of the amateur about them. The programme was of a light and popular nature and was much enjoyed by a large audience. Sgt. Farchild gave a very good account of himself in the exceedingly difficult euphonium solo, and Boy Etherington (one of the yongest members of the British Army) in addition to his instrumental work sang A Cosy Corner' very pleasantly. In the middle of the programme was a very charming variation — three songs sung by Mrs. Mory-Josef, who is deservedly very popular in Bonn. The Y.M.C.A. is to be congratulated on securing such an excellent evening's entertainment, and it is to be hoped that the 52nd D.L.I. will be heard again in the precincts of Bonn. This is the first occasion on which its walls have resounded to the strains of a British military band.

Minister for Reconstruction.

If the "Tabs and Tonics" Concert Parties are to be reconstructed upon Rex, the latest victim of our tame caricaturist, to him will fall the lot of having to make bricks with precious little straw. It is rather a formidable task, and it really looks as if Rex and his few remaining entertainers will have to remain distinguished single turns after all. Rex, or to give him the name on his late lamented A. B. 64, "Greatorex," is a useful and dashing light artiste and juvenile lead and a still better heavy burlesque comedian, or at least thats my opinion. He knows more than just something about producing. He has been in the film business and has experience in South America and hopes to go there again — that is if he can drag himself away from Cologne. He was a prominent member of "The Gamecocks" and had a good time at Roubaix last winter.

A Pianologist.

This clever little diagram by a French caricaturist is an impression of Mr. Warwick Pryce, a sort of memory you carry a way from the theatre whilst chuckling over his little funniosities. Mr. Pryce spends quite a lot of time amusing London audiences at Maskeleyn and Devants, but is also in great demand for private house entertainments. He relates many funny anecdotes in connection with this private entertaining. One occasion he was invited to entertain at a private function. Discussing the matter with the servant who delivered the invitation he inquired if there was a good piano. "Good piano" replied the menial, "I should think we have; I never saw such a brilliant polish, the case shines like a mirror," On another occasion after entertaining at a nobleman's mansion, his Lordship approached him saying "Well now, Mr. Pryce, you've worked very hard and must need something to drink. Which would you prefer, coffee or cocoa!" Mr. Pryce writes and composes all his own items so that one is always sure of hearing something new and original.

Y.M.C.A.

On Saturday night, I dropped in at the Y.M.C.A. Central and there found between 2,000 and 3,000 fellows enjoying themselves thoroughly. The entertainers were the Audrey Esmond Concert Party with the occasional assistance of Dr. Francis. The latter, even when asking for a collection, is always highly appreciated. The concert party is good; their programme is so well mixed up and balanced, and often each time the audience demanded several encores. Miss Esmond and her companions are having a great time this week although they appear at the Leave Club to-night and we hear that they are likely to be at the Palace Theatre next week.

Leave Club Events.

To-night, an impromptu concert from 5 to 6 p.m. will run simultaneously with a dancing class, while at 7 p.m. Miss Audrey Esmond will appear at the theatre.

COLOGNE OPERA HOUSE.

DAY	OPERA	COMPOSER	START	END
Tuesday	No Performance
Wednesday	No Performance
Thursday	No British Bookings.
Fri.	Armourer of Worms	Lortzing	7	9.45
Sat.	Carmen	Bizet	7	10.30
Sun.	Flying Dutchman	Wagner	7.30	10.30

This Week's Opera.

As shown in our programme, there is no performance at the Opera this week until Thursday, and we are now informed that Thursday's performance is restricted to German civilians. So the first opera to which troops will be admitted this week will be "Armourer of Worms" on Friday night.

A Clever Concert Party.

Through the instrumentality of the Y.M.C.A., Miss Muriel Mitchell's concert party gave an entertainment at the Wiesdorf Cinema a few days ago for the benefit of the patients of the 25th General Hospital. I was privileged to be present and spent a delightful two hours listening to a feast of music and song. The members of the party are all ladies and every one of them is an artiste of more than average ability. The visit was arranged at rather short notice, and as a result no programmes were available, so that I am unable to give the names of the artistes. One young lady, a gifted raconteur, related some highly diverting stories anent the canny proclivities of our Scots friends. Some of the "Jocks" in the audience were beginning to feel rather uneasy, but she restored them to good humour with her last story.

Classic and Rag-time.

I was fortunate enough to be at the B.E.L.C. on Sunday night for a concert given by the Inniskilling Dragoons Guards Band. A wonderful programme ranging from "Schubert's Dramatic Symphony" to the latest Rag-times showed to advantage the power and scope of this splendid band. The soloists of the evening were Miss Trimble, who sang "Out of the Darkness" and "The Promise of Life" with great expression and Lieutenant Ingell, baritone, whose renderings were artistic and dramatic.

JACQUES.

FOOTBALL COMPETITION.

Games Again Stopped Through Weather Conditions.

Again it has occurred that the full number of matches set for decision in our football competition has not been played. Snow interfered with four matches on Saturday last, and as two of these, Clyde v. Clydebank and Third Lanark v. Motherwell were on No. 8 contest coupon, competitors had only ten results to forecast.

This is the second week in succession that such an event has happened. Last week, our winners had only to give eight correct results to obtain a share of the award. Will this occur again in No. 8 contest?

West Bromwhich's win upset many, and the four draws which resulted among the games on the coupon have caught numerous competitors.

Seven of the teams figuring on the coupon below were also on No. 8 coupon, so that competitors have a good guide as to the form of the clubs.

Efforts must reach us by Friday's mail. Don't delay your entries; send them in now.

Coupons must be addressed:—

FOOTBALL CONTEST No. 9,
"Cologne Post",
A.P.O. S.40 Rhine Army.

List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.

2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.

3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for any reason, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.

4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.

5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into. Neither will interviews be granted.

6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.

7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, mislaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.

8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.

9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE IN A NUTSHELL.

For Charity.

The London Association has decided to allocate £1,000 at once for charitable purposes.

Mobbs Memorial.

The annual Mobbs Memorial match will be played at Northampton on Boxing Day, when the East Midlands will be opposed by an All-England XV.

School Tennis.

Although the question of playing lawn tennis is under consideration at Harrow, it is authoritatively announced that it is not being discussed at Eton College, where its adoption is very unlikely.

Weekly Shows at Hackney.

Billy Williams, the Bethnal Green boxer, and Ernest Sanderson will stage a weekly show at the Drill Hall, Casterton-st., Hackney, which has been lent free to the promoters by Colonel De Lara Cohen, of the 10th London Regt.

Leicester Jumping Stewards.

Lord Glanely seemingly is to take a lot of interest in National Hunt sport this winter, his lordship having consented to be one of the Stewards at the Leicester Steeplechases on the 8th and 9th of next month. His co-stewards will be Sir Ernest Paget, Mr. Mark Firth, and Mr. C. S. Newton. There are to be five races of 150 sovs. each.

Felton Challenged.

Paddon has challenged Felton for the sculling championship, the race to be for £500 a side, and to be contested on the Parramatta River.

More Tournaments.

Jack Oliphant, the young North London boxer who has recently returned from Egypt, has been successful in securing Latchmere-rd. Baths, Battersea, for a series of boxing tournaments.

Actors v. Champion Boxers.

A match that should attract a big crowd to the Fulham F.C. ground on December 1 is that between a team of actors selected by Mr. Chas. B. Cochran and a team of past and present champion boxers, captained by Mr. George Robey.

Alasnam's Penalty.

Alasnam, by virtue of his victory in the Derby Cup yesterday, earned a 10lb penalty in the Manchester November Handicap, bringing his impost up to 7st 11lb, which weight will enable Fox to ride if he is well enough.

Squash Racquets.

Two squash racquets matches have been arranged between C.R. Read, of Queen's Club, and C. Arnold, of the Bath Club, Piccadilly. The first will be played on Saturday next, at Queen's Club, and the return at the Bath Club on the following Friday.

Flat Racer to be Jumped.

The Squire will shortly join Godfrey's Epsom stable to be prepared for his hurdle race engagements.

Spurs New Centre.

Tottenham Hotspur have signed on a 6ft. centre forward named Tierney, who comes from Durham City with a fine local reputation. He is 22 years of age.

Brentford's New Players.

B. Rosier has signed a professional form for Brentford. J. Searby, a centre forward from Atherstone Town is another fresh acquisition.

The Late Mr. H. M. Dorling.

The death of Mr. H. M. Dorling removes an interesting personality from the world of racing, for he had been Clerk of the Course at Epsom since 1872. He succeeded his father, Mr. Henry Dorling.

A Paying Proposition.

Ella has been a paying proposition to Mr. H. Rhodes, who takes quite as much interest in Association football as racing. He plays for Stalybridge. Ella is a quaint-looking animal by reason of the way she dips in the back, says the "Sporting Life," but there has been no more consistent player all the season, for rarely has she been out of the first three, having earned her owner over a thousand pounds in the way of surplus.

Sporting Councillor.

Among the new town councillors to take their seats at Gillingham (Kent) was Capt. E. S. B. Rusell, formerly a well-known Kent County Rugby player, who at times has figured in the Blackheath team.

Inter-League Football.

A match has been arranged between a representative Southern League Xi. and the Corinthians, to be played on the Millwall Ground on Monday, December 29, while the postponed Inter-League match with the Irish League is left over to the New Year for rearrangement.

Gloucestershire Cricket.

Mr. Foster G. Robinson, the Gloucestershire county cricket captain, says it will be impossible to arrange dates with Middlesex next season, though Middlesex had offered dates. Kent they would resume matches with, and he hopes in future years to be able to fix up with Middlesex.

Funeral of Doig.

J. E. Doig, the famous Sunderland and Liverpool goalkeeper, was buried last week at Anfield Cemetery, Liverpool. A large number of mourners were present, including his five sons. The bearers were Longworth (Liverpool), Captain Charles Wilson, George Fleming, and Jack Parkinson, old colleagues of Doig's in the Liverpool team.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Out with Sledges.
The snow and frost on Sunday brought out all kinds of sledges and many parties of young Germans were to be seen wending their way to Gladbach and Bensberg.

Christmas Trees.
The walk through the Wald between these villages was a wonderful sight. The snow-laden pine trees presented the appearance of the ideal Xmas tree of our picture books, and the blend of colours was wonderful.

Tobogganning Thrills.
At Bensberg there was a fine toboggan slide of about a mile in length, starting at the top of the hill, coming down through the middle of the village and finishing on the lower main road. There was much excitement and hilarity.

He Would!
The other day a Rhineland poet sent the Editor a little effusion called "The Lay of the Lark." I hear he returned it, saying he would prefer a few specimens of the lay of the hen.

Too Dull for Him.
"Look here" said a subaltern to an official of the N.A.C.B. Club. "Can't you do something to liven things up? Here have I been sitting at breakfast for half an hour and not a note of jazz music all the time."

Coloured Troops.
Much interest was manifested on Saturday evening by the passing along Bahnhofstrasse of a body of French coloured troops. Despite the adverse weather they appeared in good spirits and were disporting themselves like a party of schoolboys.

Mixed Company.
"At eight o'clock on Sunday morning," a Tommy tells me, "I was in the buffet at Cologne Main Station. A warrant officer and I were the only British, but there were thirty or forty poilus and Algerians, half a dozen Doughboys, a few Belgians and two Italians."

Snow Fights.
Snow battles were a feature of the week end. One I saw in the Hohenzollern-Ring between two merry parties of youngsters attracted a good deal of attention. Casualties were heavy on both sides.

Overheard at Nippes.
"Yes", said the sapper, "that bit of a fraulein gave me a geological survey." "A what?" asked his gunner pal. "Well, what is commonly known as a stony stare."

A Pretty Sight.
Coming from Mulheim on Sunday afternoon I saw as pretty a sight as one could wish. Across the open country the Dom and the Hohenzollern Bridge stood out against a blood red sunset. The rays of the setting sun striking the snow-touched spires of the Cathedral gave them the appearance of pillars of flame.

Up for the Week-end.
The number of strange faces seen in Cologne at week-ends gives the impression that many wearing uniform avail themselves of the opportunity seeing the town. Apart from the interest it affords, there is doubtless the desire to escape from the week's routine at outlying stations.

Eager to Learn.
I saw a corporal recently in the Volksgarten instructing two German civilians how to control a football. They were very keen to learn and attentive pupils

No "Prams."
Have you noticed that one never sees a perambulator or mailcart in the streets of Cologne. Come to think of it one never sees children in arms either. Where does the infantile population of Cologne get to all day long?

Last Resting Place.
To-day the remains of Cardinal Hartmann will be conveyed from St. Gereon to their last resting place in the Dom. The ceremony will be an impressive one.

Careless Driving.
The need for more care in handling motor cars is very necessary on the slippery surface which the streets at present possess. I saw one car turning into Marzellenstrasse skid about three yards, and almost complete a circle in so doing.

The Merry Toboggan.
For hours on Sunday evening hundreds of civilians and soldiers were tobogganning near the Dom. Fortunately there is never much horse traffic in that particular stretch of street.

"No Thanks!"
At least one of the street "trinkhalles" kept open every day during the snowstorm. The proprietor, a veteran in shirt-sleeves, had nothing warmer on sale than lemonade.

Not Well Informed.
I sergeant wearing the V.C. was sitting in the Dutch House the other day. One of two wives on the Rhine was heard to remark. "What is that decoration, dear?" "Oh!" was the confident reply, "That's the O.B.E. with bar!"

Snow Shovelling.
What with umpteen cumbersome snowcarts, and three or four scavengers to each vehicle, the Hohestrasse for hours on Sunday morning was practically impassable for pedestrians.

Gassed.
The news that "F" Battery R.G.A. have left Bocklemund for England recalls to my mind an unpleasant experience which befell two officers when the Battery first took over possession of Fort IV. The ground floor was packed with German shells and explosives, and whilst superintending their removal two officers were rather badly gassed. As a result all ranks were compelled to wear their gas masks till the work was completed.

"Fantycraft" Hall.
I have many pleasant memories of my stay at Bocklemund and passed several enjoyable evenings at "Fantycraft" Hall listening to the Jazz band, which was one of the best of its kind in Rhineland. Major Moriarty, D.S.O., the Battery Commander, was a keen disciplinarian, but did everything possible in the way of providing amusement for the men.

Our Home Readers.
As a result of our home subscription scheme thousands of "Cologne Post" are sent to all parts of the United Kingdom daily, and every mail the number increases. Have you arranged for yours?

NOTES FROM LONDON TOWN.

GENERAL SEELY'S RESIGNATION.

The resignation of General Seely from the Air Ministry came rather as a political bombshell, though I doubt whether it surprised people in official circles. The House listened with wrapt attention to the popular General's swan-song, and perhaps not a little sympathetically. But after all if economy rules the Government roost, the War and Air Ministries can hardly be run as entirely distinct departments. General Seely won golden opinions from his staff and was as popular with them as he was in the Army in France. He won the admiration of many a flying subordinate by his sang-froid in the face of danger. In Lobby circles the name of Major Baird, who is not only well versed in aviation but is an experienced Under-Secretary, is mentioned as a possible successor.

DORLING OF EPSOM.

The late Clerk of the Course at Epsom, Mr. Henry Mason Dorling, or "Dorling of Epsom" as he was universally known to the racing world, was pre-eminently the right man for a post which occasionally required somewhat invidious action on his part. He roused the wrath of visitors to Tattersall's Ring by raising the charges the day after the Derby (or Cup Day as it was known) with the result that he came in annually for a very hostile reception. But if one of the most abused men on the turf, hard words slipped off his back like pebbles down a steep pitched slate roof, and he had a most unholy suspicion of all who approached him for a free ticket.

A SILLY ASS.

I suppose "Lord Richard in the Pantry" will have a good run at the Criterion, though frankly the piece is rather too thin to deserve much enthusiasm. But sheer farce even of light texture will often suceed where good comedy fails. This new piece which sees Cyril Maude in the principal part on his return after a lengthy absence from England, is adapted by Sydney Blow and Douglas Hoare from the novel of the same title by Martin Swayne. The plot turns on the efforts of Lord Richard, a first rate specimen of the impecunious silly ass type of nobleman, to escape the attentions of a lady to whom he has inadvertently proposed marriage, by disguising himself as a butler, and thereafter getting into the toils of a most amorous cook. There is of course ample scope for funny situations, but the maker of the role of the Little Minister can do better things than this.

McKENNA OF MAYPU.

Not many people are aware of the fact that Mr. Reginald McKenna, the well known English ex-Cabinet Minister, is a descendant of the McKenna who in the early years of last century figured as one of the heroes of Chile's struggle to throw off the Spanish yoke which ended so successfully in 1818 by the battle of Maypu. This fact, however, was mentioned by Don Augustin Edwards at the Savoy luncheon given recently to the Chilian Mission. The name and exploits of Mr. McKenna's doughty ancestor will, I believe, be found in Handcock's History of Chile (1893).

THE RAVENSWORTH BARONETCY.

I imagine Captain the Hon. Gerald Wellesley, late Captain in the 7th Bn. Northumberland Fusiliers, hardly dreamt in 1904 that he would in a comparatively short time succeed to the baronetcy of Ravensworth with its estates and rent roll of over £70,000 a year. But as Fortune willed it, the late Lord Ravensworth, who was a War Office clerk in 1904, succeeded to the baronetcy by reason of the death of the third Earl of Ravensworth. He was 66 years of age at the time, while the new peer, who is one of the few remaining officers in the already disbanded Royal Defence Corps, is fifty years of age. The earldom being entailed became extinct when the third Earl died.

SPIRITUALISM AND WAR.

It is not surprising to find that the idea of the war-bereaved seeking hope in spiritualist belief has at last found its way into a novel—Mr. Robert Hichens new story "Mrs. Marden." Herein howeven truth is once again well ahead of fiction. To cite but one instance; I cannot refrain from thinking that Sir A. Conan Doyle's belief in spiritualism acquires its conviction to a considerable degree from his own sad loss. Mr. Hichens handles spiritualism rather severely, if in purely orthodox manner. Mrs. Marden having lost her son—an officer in the Guards—seeks an antidote to the indifference of that mysterious Power which rules the Universe to the fate of individuals, in the latest craze. The force of the novel however, is in the ending. Mrs. Marden very soon abjures spiritualism and finds God revealed in the pain that speedily carries her to her rest. PERISCOPE.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

Can you write one?

Christmas will soon be here, and "The Cologne Post" wishes to encourage its readers to write short Yuletide stories suitable for publication in its columns at that festive period.

They can be on any subject and in any vein but they must not exceed 1000 words in length.

We offer prizes of 150 marks, 100 marks, and 50 marks respectively for the three best received and published, and any others we may think worthy of publication will be paid for at our regular rates.

If possible manuscripts should be typewritten, though this is not essential.

The last date for receiving Christmas stories will be November 20th. Envelopes should be addressed "Story Editor" "Cologne Post" A.P.O. S/40, Rhine Army.

FOR BUSINESS MEN IN RHINELAND.

Everyone seems to be waiting for some pronouncement of policy by the Government in regard to trade with Germany. Patriotic British firms wish to know what attitude to adopt, as is very clearly indicated by the action of the textile section of the London Chamber of Commerce, the Board of the Manchester Chamber and others.

* * *

The Board of the Manchester Chamber adopted a minute of the China executive, stating that although trade directly with the late enemy countries is desirable in national and international interests, it is against the country's interest to re-open connections with German firms in China and the Far East where British and Allied firms are adequately equipped and sufficient in number to deal with all trade with these countries.

* * *

It is quite clear that we cannot go on selling to Germany if we do not buy from her, but there can be no mistaking the popular opinion, says a writer in "The Times Trade Supplement" which is dead against German goods.

* * *

The Cologne Fair was the subject of a long discussion in the Prussian Parliament, when a deputy of the Centre party asked for big credits from the Empire for the purpose of holding a fair in Cologne during next spring.

* * *

"The Rhine," said this speaker, "is actually the only place where the late enemies are in touch, and where one begins to re-establish the necessary international community of work. Even places like Hamburg and Bremen cannot fulfil this task. The fairs at Leipzig and Frankfurt accomplished something towards this anomaly in a restricted manner and they were chiefly visited by neutral countries."

* * *

The Cologne Fair will consist chiefly of exhibits of German products such as textiles, metallic articles, glass, ceramic, chemical products and so on. Fifteen thousand square metres have already been booked by a thousand exhibitors even before an invitation has been issued.

* * *

On November 15th the old German customs frontier was re-established by special authorisation of the Allied Powers.

* * *

Owing to a congestion at the port of Cologne and the numerous cargoes waiting to be unloaded the dockers have declared themselves ready to work longer hours on three days of the week.

* * *

According to the German papers, Great Britain exported to Germany in the ten and a half months following the armistice, goods to the value of £16,000,000 sterling, whilst Germany exported to Great Britain goods to the value of £217,000 sterling.

* * *

In spite of the repeated recommendations of the Commercial Intelligence Dept. of the Board of Trade and the very obvious waste of material and opportunity, there still appears to be quite a lot of advertising literature coming to Rhineland printed in English. Those enterprising manufacturers who go to the slight extra trouble and expense of printing special circulars, price lists, and so on, in German have an enormous advantage, although it is realised that with the constantly fluctuating value of the mark it is quite impossible to quote prices in the national currency. Equivalent weights and measurements, however, would also assist very much to facilitate business if quoted in addition to the English standards.

* * *

Mr. Quantock of Robarts and Quantock is at present in England and is expected back in Cologne in a few days.

* * *

Messrs. Pankhurst & Co., Optimus Coffee Extract, Tea etc. etc. have a representative at present in Cologne to fix up agencies in Rhineland and Germany generally.

* * *

Messrs. S. Tauber & Co. Ltd. (London) general importers and exporters are at present in Cologne and letters should be addressed to the Westminster Hotel.

WHAT INTERESTS YOU?

NEWS, STORIES, FOOTBALL, ECONOMICS OR LANGUAGES.

Whatever it is, the chances are a thousand to one that you can gratify that interest—or those interests, for most of us have more than one—at the Reading Room in the Arcade off the Hohestrasse, London and provincial papers of course, and the weeklies and monthlies in wide variety including new ones, probably as yet, unknown to you. Technical journals on architecture, engineering, motoring—more subjects than I can name, are there for your perusal and use. Even the well-known fashion journals are there for the benefit of the ladies. Works of reference from an encyclopedia to Bradshaw are there for your information.

In the bookshop within the reading room you will find, whatever your tastes, much that you will want to take away for your own delectation with a view to sending it to someone else perhaps afterwards. Stories by Kipling, Stephen Leacock, W. W. Jacobs, Jeffrey Farnol, E. V. Lucas, Ian Hay, H. G. Wells and many another appeal to every taste. Books on Chess, Bridge, Wrestling, Football, Boxing and all sorts of other sports and recreations are there. So is Hoyle, whose fame created the phrase "according to Hoyle." There are practical works on photograpy (elementary and advanced) on gramophones, on electric wiring and motors, on motorcycles, on conjuring, on card tricks, on accountancy, on Poland and on dealing in stocks and shares—to mention a few only of the subjects.

Lovers of poetry are well catered for and atlases, historical and general, dictionaries and grammars of various languages, books on social questions and economics—even cookery books (listen O wives, and P.M.C.'s) are there for improved succulence of your repasts.

And the staff invites and welcomes any suggestions, and undertakes to provide desired books that are not already on their shelves. Go to the Arcade and have a mental feast.

CARDINAL'S FUNERAL RITES.

STATELY PAGEANT AT INTERMENT OF THE LATE BISHOP OF COLOGNE

VITAL ELECTIONS IN FRANCE AND BELGIUM

CARDINAL HARTMANN.

NOBLE OBSEQUIES IN THE DOM.

For over a week St. Gereon's church had seen a constant stream of people passing through to take a last look at the dead Prelate who in life had moulded their spiritual thoughts and on Tuesday morning, through a freezing mixture of half-melted snow under foot and amid a cold rain forcibly blown in all directions by a vagarious wind, a stately procession escorted the remains of Felix von Hartmann, Bishop of Cologne and Cardinal Prince of the Holy Roman Church, from St. Gereon's Church tothe place of sepulture in the Dom.

All traffic in the vicinity of the Cathedral was suspended and British Military and German Civil police completely surrounded the building, denying access to all save privileged ticket-holders. At nine o'clock the procession started from St. Gereon's headed by children and orphans. Then followed delegations from all the Trade and Workmen's Societies, all sections of municipal employées and of other Societies, bearing flags denoting their constitutions.

After them came the students, including large contingents from Bonn and Munster, wearing the full uniform of their class and carring their swords.

Then a largenumber ofclergy. With them were the Archbishop Benzler (formerly at Metz), Bishop of Munster, Dr. Poggenburg, Bishop Schulte (Paderborn), Suffragan Bishop Dr. Lausberg (Cologne) and Suffragan Bishop Dr. Monch (Trier).

Immediately before the hearse a seminarist carried a black velvet cushion on which lay the Cardinal's decorations, other seminarists bearing the crozier and red hat.

The coffin was drawn in an open hearse escorted on either side by a German Officer from the Bridgehead, and followed by the relatives. A striking figure was that of a French officer. Other two German officers, a number of Protestant Pastors and the Jewish Rabbi, Dr. Rosenthal, brougnt up the rear of the procession.

The British and French authorities were also represented.

WAITING IN THE CATHEDRAL.

The great Sees of Western Christendom are to-day our closest and most living links with the past that made Europe and us. Dynasties have risen and fallen; three empires crumbled before our eyes but as yesterday, but the dynasties of the Bishops of Europe continue. This is no time for commonplaces on the newness, the modernity of races of kings before the majestic line of the Bishops of Rome, but it is well to remember that all up and down Western Europe such lines, so deeply rooted in the past of men, survive and bind us with our forefathers.

Historical values, the sense of a living continuity with the past, were possibly uppermost within one as one sat in the Dom of Cologne yesterday and waited for the procession that was bringing the dead Archbishop, Cardinal von Hartmann, home to his cathedral church. The history of Cologne, one remembered, was for centuries the history of its Prince Bishops, a history chequered as all human records must be. For centuries the glorious choir of the Dom has watched the making of history; to-day, in the light that seems to have grown old since it was enclosed within its walls, the cathedral waited to receive another of its long line of bishops. Here, beneath the choir of their cathedral, the archbishops have been buried since 1322. Earlier prelates lie elsewhere. Conrad von Hochstaden, for instance, who laid the foundation stone of the present church on August 15, 1248, rests in St. John's Chapel.

ENTRY OF THE PROCESSION.

Little rumour from outside broke upon the quiet within and disturbed the dim light of the rainy November morning, which filtered through the coloured windows. High overhead sounded the muffled beat of the bells. One knew that the great city outside was in mourning, that the streets and the cathedral square were black with people, and that the procession was on its way from St. Gereons. One watched and waited, until the ten tapers upon the high altar, with its dossal and riddels of black and white, and the footlights where the coffin was to stand, were lighted. There was little survival of old traditions of splendour beyond the black vestings of the altar, the chief signs of mourning being the black hangings, embroidered with white, behind the choir stalls. When the west door was flung open and the electric lights which outline the pillars and the triforium of the choir suddenly leaped into radiance, one could not help wishing that the dim earlier illumination had been allowed to remain.

The procession took nearly half an hour to pass into and group itself in the Dom. All the Catholic societies and Unions of Cologne were represented and had their banners carried in the procession. They took up position at the sides of the crossing between nave and choir. It was, however, chiefly an ecclesiastical pageant which passed along the nave of the Dom to the choir — the parish priests of the city and neighbourhood in white rochets with black tippets, Benedictine monks, Dominican and Franciscan friars, singing boys and torch bearers, the members of the Metropolitan Chapter in their purple robes and fur tippets, abbots, a group of bishops in purple with golden pectoral crosses, the Bishop of Treves among them vested in black cope and white mitre, and seminarists who walked before the coffin carrying the dead prelate's orders and insignia, mitre and staff and the cardinal's scarlet hat. The coffin itself was borne by twelve black-robed Alexian brothers, and on either side of it walked a German officer of the bridgehead in uniform, while a French officer followed it. Deputations and representatives of the students of the Universities of Cologne and Bonn, many of them wearing the Iron Cross of the First Class, had passed along earlier, in brightly coloured semi-military uniforms, with swords and with their banners, and were now ranged on either side of the catafalque. The clergy filled the stalls.

REQUIEM MASS.

The coffin was laid beneath the arms of the See, which were suspended above it. A processional cross stood before it, and the scarlet hat, laid upon the pall, was the most arresting point of colour in the whole of the choir.

It is only upon such occasions, when one watches the small far-away figures busied about the altar, that one realises the vastness of Cologne Cathedral. Now it was filled to the doors with an immense crowd which had poured in after the procession entered.

Meanwhile the High Mass of Requiem, celebrated by the Bishop of Treves, Dr. Felix Korum, proceed to its mystical consummation. The Mass of the Dead is one of the most poignant and exquisite offices of the Roman Church. The beauty of the rite, "the most august act of worship the world has ever seen," could be profoundly felt, especially at the Elevation, while the great crowd was hushed in dead silence, and all the flags and banners in the church were dipped together, The music, admirably sung by the choir of the Dom, was that of C. Cohen's mass for four voices, and the "Libera" of the same composer. The "Dies Irae" — the noblest of medieval hymns — was sung to the ancient plainsong. In those lines are all the fear and love and hope of the Church for the dead; they tremble with the awe that carved the Doom over the portals of medieval cathedrals and thrill with the tenderest pathos:

"Quaerens me sedisti lassus:
Redemisti, cruoem passus;
Tantus labor non sit cassus."

After the Mass the Bishop of Münster, Dr. Poggenburg, preached the funeral panegyric; the Absolutions, conducted by the Bishop of Treves and the Assistant Bishops and Abbots, followed. The coffin was censed and aspersed; the last prayers were said, while the choir sang Witt's splendid "Justorum Animae." During this last scene the sun had appeared and was filling the Dom with light and colour. I will be long remembered by those who were privileged to be present.

FRENCH ELECTION.

SOCIALISTS BEATEN AT THE POLLS.

The most important elections held for many a long year in France and Belgium have just been held. Their significance lies in the fact that the electorate will determine, by their votes, the course of post-war reconstruction, whether a sane policy is to be pursued or the handling of the great problems and difficulties which beset the whole of Europe is to be subject to the will of reactionaries.

Although the full results are not yet available there are certain indications that the franchise has been intelligently exercised. In France the Socialists have lost a great number of seats. Even those two well known politicians, M. Longuet and Renaudel, have been rejected.

The extreme Right has suffered heavily and the fact that a large majority is assured for the National Republican bloc shows that Clemenceau's policy has been vindicated by the bulk of his countrymen.

France, therefore, has declared for order, work and reconstruction and will have nothing to do with reaction.

In Belgium, where there has been a cleavage of opinion in the Walloon-Flemish Controversy, the Catholic Party has lost about 15 and the Liberals nine seats, which have fallen to the Socialists. The Right, however, will still possess a working majority.

PETITION FOR MURDERER.

Seventeen thousand persons have signed a petition for the reprieve of the Canadian ex-soldier, Roy Hutty, who is under sentence of death for the murder of a nurse who had tended him at a Liverpool hospital.

THE FOURRAGERE.

HONOUR WON BY BRITISH AMBULANCE.

Colonel Girard, the supreme head of the automobile service of the French Army, has written to Mr. Peyman, president of the British Ambulance Committee, informing him that: "Marshal Foch has instructed me to notify you that the 'Fourragere' of the Croix de Guerre, by Order No. 152 F., dated 15th of May, 1919, has been awarded to the S.S.A. No. 2 of the British Ambulance Committee attached to the 72nd French Division of Infantry." Six sections, consisting of 350 men, were maintained by the British Ambulance Committee with the French Army throughout the whole period of the war.

The announcement of the bestowal of Fourragere on Section No. 2 was accompanied by the following "citation" in French army orders:

"Composed for the most part of volunteers too old for conscription (former officers, proprietors, bankers), the British Sanitary Section No. 2 displayed an endurance, bravery, and devotion equal to that of the youngest and most ardent troops. Under the conduct of Lieutenant Abrahams, a courageous and energetic leader, the B.S.S. 2 accomplished real deeds of valour during the attacks of the Monts de Champagne in May and July, 1917, and during the battles in June, July, August and October, 1918, at Ribécourt, Soissons, and the Chemin des Dames. Under shell and rifle fire, scorning danger, the drivers spared no efforts to reach the most advanced medical posts, and thus assisted in the evacuation of our wounded soldiers in conditions unexpected of safety and speed. In spite of their losses and of the damage done to their motor-cars, which were repaired on the spot and often under the the enemy's fire, the drivers of the B.S.S. 2 succeeded in overcoming all difficulties, displaying an admirable spirit of sacrifice, which earned for their formations two citations in orders of the day."

D'ANNUNZIO'S NEW EXPEDITION.

REPORTED SEIZURE OF CROATIAN TOWN.

A rumour has reached Belgrade from Spalato that D'Annunzio has occupied Zara with his troops, and that Vice-Admiral Millo has declared himself to be powerless.

The report is not yet officially confirmed, but a serious view is taken, as all the news of the last few days seemed to herald such a coup de main.

[Zara is on the Croatian coast, about 80 miles south-east of Fiume. Rome reports received in Paris state that d'Annunzio travelled to Zara on a torpedo boat, followed by nine other warships. What followed, however, is not clear. According to one story "d'Annunzio on arriving at Zara left those who had accompanied him there, and returned to Fiume."]

COST OF PAUPERS AND PRISONERS.

Mr. Baldwin, for the Treasury, gives in the Parliamentary Papers the average weekly cost of paupers and prisoners in 1914 and 1919 as follows:

	1914.		1919.		Inc.
	s.	d.	s.	d.	s.	d.
Paupers.....	10	0	20	6	10	6
Pauper Lunatics	10	9	16	8	5	11
Convicts	18	2	42	9	24	7

The term "convicts" is applied to penal servitude prisoners. Other convicted prisoners cost £1 10s., an increase of 16s. 5d. per week on 1914.

BERMONDT'S SMUDGY PAST.

The Polish journal, Gazeta Polska, states that before the Russo-Japanese War, Bermondt was serving in the Cossack Regiment of Mishtchenko, and then became conductor of an orchestra in Kieff, where he made himself notorious by various frauds. Thanks to the protection of the German Secret Police, Bermondt, who paid special attention to the doings of the Entente's agents, enjoyed complete immunity.

N. W. FRONTIER QUIET.

A communiqué from Simla regarding the North West Frontier reports that all is quiet to the Northward of Kurram. It also states that in the Tochi area messages have been received by the Wazirs from their leaders at Kabul telling them not to commit any further acts against the Government. Only small parties of Mahsuds remain out and it is reported that the Amir has advised them to make peace.

FARMERS SAY "NO".

Representatives of 600,000 farmers, who met at Grand Rapids, Wisconsin, have declined, by an overwhelming majority, Mr. Samuel Gompers' invitation to confer with the representatives of Organised Labour.

TO OPPOSE LLOYD GEORGE.

The Carnarvon Labour Party has decided to oppose Mr. Lloyd George at the next ele tion. The Premier's opponent will probably be Mr. R. T. Jones, Secretary of the North Wales Quarrymen's Union.

PLUCKY WOMEN.

ARMED TILL-THIEVES TACKLED.

Two men, one of whom was armed with an automatic pistol, attempted to rob the till in a small baker's shop in Duckett-street, Stepney, on Friday afternoon. There were only two women in the shop, Mrs. Miller, the wife of the proprietor, and her daughter, Annie.

The men, who had been loitering about the street all day, entered the shop between 3 and 4 o'clock, and one of them made for the counter while the second remained on guard at the door. Mrs. Miller rushed into the shop from the back room, followed by her daughter and a big Airedale cross bull-terrier. The man at the door ran away while the second man, who was leaning over the counter with his hand in the till, took out a revolver and pointed it at the daughter, telling her to stand back. He then moved backwards the door covering the young woman with the pistol. He had got to the door and was just passing through it when Mrs. Miller rushed to it and slammed it to, jambing the man's hand between the door and the post.

Under the pressure the man's fingers opened and the revolver fell into Miss Miller's hand. He then got away. Miss Miller, however chased him down the street and followed him for about half a mile with the revolver pointed towards him, but he succeeded in making his escape.

IRISH AFFAIRS.

RESPONSIBLE FOR DELAY IN PEACE.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P. delivered an address before a large audience at the Jewish Institute, Whitechapel, on "The Christian and the Jew after the War." He said the superficial and popular view of the Jew was quite contrary to what the Jew really was. From experience, he said that no race was so full of generous sympathy with sorrow and suffering and the oppressed as the Jewish race.

Dealing with current affairs, he asked whether there was a prospect of there being international peace or not? That depended upon whether they established a real League of Nations. He regretted to say he thought the prospects of the League were not so bright as they were just after the armistice a year ago. The League of Nations, he declared, was very largely due to the country from which he came. Europe to-day was in a terribly disturbed condition.

What had been the cause of all these disturbances? It was the delay in America consequent on the condition of affairs in Ireland, and he could not find words to convey his condemnation and scorn for the lack of statesmanship which would allow the peace to be held up by the squabble over Ireland.

JAPAN AND AUSTRALIA.

M, Yamasuna, the millionaire president of the Tokio Chamber of Commerce, speaking at Newcastle, Australia, said that Japan was anxious to exchange commodities with Australia.

Japan did not want to send her surplus people to Australia, but it seemed monstrously wrong that many millions should be on the verge of starvation in Europe while vast spaces of this continent were empty.

"The continuance of friendly relations between our countries," he declared, entirely depends on Australia and her attitude towards us."

ENORMOUS DEAL IN DIAMONDS.

According to news from Pretoria an agreement has been reached with a diamond selling syndicate whereby the entire sales for the next five years have been disposed of to the syndicate. This includes the production of the De Beers, Premier, South-West Africa, and Jagersfontein mines. The total amount of diamonds sold under this agreement will run to approximately seventy million sterling.

PRESIDENT WILSON IMPROVING.

The condition of President Wilson has shown remarkable improvement in the last two weeks, according to a statement made by Dr. Dercum, the nerve specialist, and occasionally the President has been permitted to transact executive business

HELP FOR UNIVERSITIES.

A Royal Commission has been appointed under the chairmanship of Mr. Asquith, to consider applications by the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge for financial assistance from the State. The Commissioners include Lord Chalmers, Sir John Simon, the Dean of Christchurch, Mr. G. W. Balfour and Mr. Arthur Henderson, M.P.

APPEAL FROM DEATH SENTENCE.

Arthur Beard, who was sentenced to death for the murder of Ivy Wood in a mill yard at Hyde, Cheshire, has been granted leave to appeal on the grounds that he suffered from shell shock in France and malaria in the East, and that the murder was unpremeditated.

SOVIET SENTENCE.

ENGLISH CORRESPONDENT IMPRISONED.

The Bolshevists have sentenced Mr. Keeling, a well-known trade unionist, to imprisonment until the close of the "war with Imperialist England." Mr. Keeling, who entered Russia as a newspaper correspondent, has already been in prison in Moscow since the end of July.

He was accused of having crossed the front without the permission of the Soviet authorities; of having afterwards attempted to escape; and of having attempted to bribe his guards. After his second attempt to escape he was sent to Moscow and kept under preventive arrest until his trial before the People's Court.

During the proceedings it was shown that he had accompanied Mr. Appleton—one of the worst enemies of the Russian Revolution—who journeyed with the special purpose of doing harm to revolutionary Russia.

In view of the repeated breaches of the laws of Soviet Russia committed by citizen Keeling, he was condemned to be kept in prison until the end of the war with Imperialist England.

Mr. Keeling, a trade unionist, entered Russia last summer, crossing the Esthonian frontier towards the end of July.

POLITICS AND POLICE.

KATIE'S CHILDISH BEHAVIOUR.

Described as a nurse, a ladylike person named Kate Brown was charged at the Guildhall with disorderly conduct in Finsbury-pavement by causing a crowd to collect.

The Clerk: Do you plead guilty?

Defendant: I was agitating for Tariff Reform.

The Constable: She came up to me yesterday afternoon and asked me a civil question, and I answered her. She then asked what I was, and I said, "A police-constable." She said, "No; I mean Tariff Reform or Free Trade." I said, "As a constable I prefer not to enter into politics." She then said, "You are a lot of rogues and thieves, and half the robberies are attributable to the police. I am proud of the fact that I am not an Anglo-Saxon, because they are all half German. Why, we shall have the Germans over here shortly eating off our tables." I pointed out to her that a crowd had collected, and asked her to go away, when she produced a pair of lorgnettes and scanned the crowd.

The Clerk: Were they amused?—They were. (Laughter.) She was very excited.

Defendant: He was very childish.

The Alderman: The childishness was in another quarter, I think. If you have any system to ventilate, you should take a hall and not go into the streets. Tariff Reform is good undoubtedly, but it must not be shouted in the street. However, as you undertake not to do so in the future, I shall discharge you.

POST OFFICE WHITLEY COUNCIL.

It is reported, says the Press Association, that a serious deadlock has arisen in the formation of a Whitley Council for the Post Office. According to the official organ of the Fawcett Association, the department in the draft constitution, wishes to insert the power of Parliament, and the Postmaster-General to have "over-riding" authority. The men are prepared to accept the clause so far as it refers to Parliament, but object to the Postmaster-General having the power to veto proposals made by a joint council on which the authorities have substantial representation. It is alleged that delays and misunderstandings are due to the hostility of permanent officials and high grades of the service, to trade unionism, and the right of the lower sections to have a voice in the control.

LETTS SURROUNDING MITAU.

The Letts are gradually encircling Mitau, which is the headquarters of Colonel Bermondt. The bulk of the German diplomatic staff at Mitau have returned to Germany and it is expected that Bermondt will transfer his headquarters to Shavxli.

A Berlin telegram states that Bermondt has placed his entire army under the command of General von Berhardt, who will endeavour to secure the orderly return of ex-Imperial troops to Germany.

PROPOSED NICKEL COINAGE.

In view of the present price of silver and the possible disappearance of the silver coinage, the Council of the London Chamber of Commerce has recommended to the Government that instead of issuing notes of lower value than five shillings, nickel coinage of lower denominations such as sixpence, shilling and half-crown should be prepared, ready for issue if required.

M.P.'S SON KILLED.

The eldest son of Major Eric Knight, member for Kidderminster, who was a cadet officer studying at Cambridge, has been killed while flying there. Major Knight's second son has suffered serious injuries during the gale in American waters while on board the British warship Rewnon.

DOCKYARD HOURS.

BALLOT IN FAVOUR OF FIVE DAY WEEK.

The men employed at Portsmouth Dockyard have balloted on the proposals of the Government (1) that they should work one day short per week; or (2) that the programme of work for the next year or two shall be carried out now. The result is stated unofficially to be as follows:—In favour of working short time, 5,787; against, 5,576. The men were also asked to express their preference in regard to the particular day of the week on which they should stand off. There were 5,517 in favour of ceasing work on Friday afternoon and Saturday morning, and only 209 in favour of having Monday off. The total electorate was 18,500; there were 394 spoilt papers and 7,000 papers were not returned.

Chatham Dockyard employees have decided by an overwhelming majority on ballot in favour of working only four and a half days a week, as a means of averting discharges.

CA' CANNY POLICY.

MAGISTRATE ON HOUSING SHORTAGE.

A fourteen-year-old girl was summoned at Clerkenwell for destroying postal packets, and pleaded guilty. She had been employed as a telegraph messenger and destroyed a telegram and express letter, in the first case spending on sweets the money given her for a reply telegram.

It was stated that the girl's family were respectable, but the probation officer complained of the home conditions—father, mother, younger brother, and the girl sleeping in the same room.

Mr. Symmons, in remanding the girl, said he could not blame the parents for having to "pig in." If the bricklayers would lay 1,000 bricks a day instead of 300, there would be houses for the people. But the bricklayers would lay only 300, and the trade unions said, "Bravo, fine fellows!" Then the people grumbled because the Government did not in some miraculous way provide houses. It was for the people who could do the work to provide what was required, not for us to look to the Government to provide what was required as a divine right.

A SOLDIER'S CHOICE.

MONS PRISONER REFUSES TO RETURN.

A remarkable case of a British soldier who was captured by the Germans at Mons, and who refuses to return to England, as a consequence of which his wife's separation allowance has been stopped, was before the Wisbech Guardians at their last meeting.

The man's wife has six children, and she was compelled to apply to the Guardians for relief. She stated that her husband was captured in 1914, and had written as regularly as possible up to October, 1918. The British Military Mission in Berlin had written that the man would not come back. Her allowance was 48s. 6d., and the War Office had discontinued payment.

The Guardians gave the necessary relief, and decided to communicate with the War Office with a view of reclaiming some of the money advanced.

"RAGGING" OF PUSSYFOOT

MESSAGE FROM THE KING.

Mr. Leif Jones, as president of the United Kingdom Alliance, has sent the following cable message to Mr. Charrington, chief of the Anti-Saloon League of America, Westerville, Ohio:

"Wish to express on behalf of Alliance our regret and indignation at the entirely unprovoked attack on Mr. Johnson by mob of students and others. Mr. Johnson's bearing in trying circumstances most dignified and admirable. He is being carefully treated by well-known specialist in private hospital. Earnestly trust his injury not lasting. King has expressed regret at occurrence. Lord Chancellor, in speech last night, expressed profound regret at incident. I am interviewing the Chief Commissioner of Police and Home Secretary about the affair and in regard to future meetings.—Leif Jones.".

RANKER OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION.

At a meeting of officers held at the First Avenue Hotel, Holborn, an Association was formed under the designation of "Ranker Officers' Association". Some forty officers were present and a committee was appointed.

STANDARD OIL INTENTIONS.

It is stated that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey is about to resume business in Germany on a large scale, backed by a hundred million dollars for credit advances secured through the recent sales of stock.

LABOUR MAYOR PURVEYS COAL.

The Labour Mayor of Shoreditch (Mr. W. H. Girling), in view of a threatened coal shortage, commandeered some of the Council's dust vans, drove to the wharves, loaded up with coal, and distributed it in sacks.

SPORT IN RHINELAND.

The announcement that the Army is about to launch an ambitious sports programme for the benefit of the units remaining in Rhineland, will, we venture to think, be warmly received and acclaimed on all hands. The scheme is to be a comprehensive one embracing the various popular Sports, and catering for all tastes.

There are to be cup competitions for Association and Rugby football, boxing and cross country running, and, if the hopes and ambitions of the promoters are realised, an unprecedented boom in Rhineland sport will be the happy outcome.

That something of the sort was needed to give the necessary filip to matters sporting all will agree. A perusal of our sports page will have shown that for some little time there has been something radically wrong in this branch of the soldier's life in Rhineland.

More than one correspondent has deplored an alleged decrth of the old enthusiasm and keenness and while this is undoubtedly not universal as is evidenced by replies which have appeared, it is useless attempting to disguise the fact that in many units, at any rate, there has been a regrettable decline in recreational prowess.

The reason, we submit, is not far to seek. We cannot and will not believe that the cause is lack of desire on the part of Tommy; and that, as has been stated, the football match and boxing bout have lost their magnetism and appeal. The majority of the present members of the Army of Occupation participated in last season's football and almost every unit entered for our cricket cup competition. The success of the latter and the wonderful interest evinced is ample proof of the existence of the sporting spirit.

What, then, is the fault? Is it not to be found in the temporarily unsettled state of almost every unit in Rhineland, coupled with a lack of organisation as a consequence?

Without thorough organisation sport is only an empty shell, and no matter how keen the rank and file may be, if the keenness is not correctly controlled and guided, it can but result in spasmodic and unsatisfactory effort.

The projected sports scheme, therefore, which will only be commenced when we have once more returned to the normal, should be more than sufficent to engender the necessary co-ordination and to re-kindle enthusiasm until sports of all kind in the Rhine Army come again into their own as one of the chief essentials in the life of the British soldier.

WOMEN IN PUBLIC GOVERNMENT.

I prefer this title to that of "Women in Politics," which first suggested itself; and that for two reasons. In the first place, they have always been "in politics," though until lately unable to be members of the governing bodies; secondly and chiefly because the great hope is that through their participation we may have less politics and more government.

The campaign of Lady Astor at Plymouth and the platform work of Mrs Lloyd George have recently drawn greater attention to the fact that women, lately enfranchised, are not going to be content with voting for men but are determined to be among those who discuss and make the laws of the nation of which they form somewhat more than a half, and, if the young children of the nation are regarded as their especial care, represent an enormous majority of the population.

That they will form a large and increasing part in Imperial as well as local legislatures, and that in the early future, there can be no doubt. From the political influence of the salon and the economic influence of the home, they will, while retaining those former powers, emerge into the open as equal in public discussion and legislative functions with the men through whom they formerly had to seek expression.

I believe it to be of enormous value that the women's voice and will should come into actual power at this time when there is so much unrest, so many a wild proposition, so much reckless expenditure, so large a proportion of revolutionary thought. For woman is essentially conservative. In spite of much that has been seen of late in the way of careless spending, of exaggerated pleasure seeking, of "emancipation" carried to extremes, these things are true but of a small proportion of our womankind, and are probably even with them but a temporary symptom of War conditions and later reaction from the strain. The great majority of women are quietly at their duties and living the home life. The mass of feminine feeling is always in favour of the peaceful life, and the security and stability of home interests. Was it not Ruskin who said that if every declaration of war had as a known and inevitable result the immediate breaking of all the tea-cups on every woman's table, no war would ever be possible?

How many strikes have ended, how many more been prevented, by the aggregate weight of the women's opposition to the cessation of supplies to the home? And this although their loyalty to the cause of their men has often led them to bear—as it is they who must bear—the privations of themselves and their children when they feel their claim to be just and necessary. But they had no hand in the making of the laws or the regulations, the results of which they had to comply with. Woman was politically dumb, her knowledge of home conditions, of women's and children's needs—aye, and of men's too had to be expressed as best it could through men and lacked executive power altogether. Now she will bring to the council and the legislature her knowledge, her prudence and her steadying power. Of all these the legislative and the executive authorities have need in this hour, when the whole future is in the melting pot.

And the results will be as good for woman herself as for the nation. While there are many women who are intellectually and even temperamentally fitted to act now as the representatives of their sex's point of view or the national needs without regard to sex at all, it must be admitted that the huge majority of our women know even less by far than most men, of the elements of political economy, or the wide vision that is necessary in shaping policy and legislation.

They have been shut out from participation and have in the main little interest in things outside of their own sphere and locality.

But knowledge comes by action. When it is theirs to pronounce upon, to form a line of action, they will quickly bring their attention and abilities to bear upon it. "Solvitur in ambulando" is the motto that will settle this difficulty.

It has been said that women have no civic sense. To a large extent this is true, for they have had no opportunity of using a civic sense, which could only have atrophied had they possessed it. In this, as in most things, the demand creates the supply. The woman's horizon was bounded by her home and family, or at most by those of her neighbours and friends. For a ring-fence of prohibition shut her from the wider view. To-day that fence is down; and her clear sight will soon learn the new perspective, and adjust itself to the resulting proportion.

One cannot doubt of the tremendous effect for good which must in a hundred ways result from the entry, too long delayed, of women into the field of direct power as representatives of the women and children and as equal citizens of the nation with men.

In the early part of the late War, Russian women formed a "Battalion of Death" which did nobly for their country. We welcome to the arena of public service the "Battalion of Life," formed of the women who shall be chosen for the public service. O. WYNOTT.

ROUND THE WORLD IN A WEEK.

Only a few years ago—when Thomas Edison was twenty-five years old—Jules Verne wrote "Round the World in Eighty Days." Two years before he had written his "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," in which he described the voyage of a boat travelling under water. When Jules Verne insisted that these books were not mere fiction but that they portrayed the possibilities of the century to come, several members of the French scientific societies declared him "insane"—and that was only forty-six years ago!

"What progress the last fifty years has seen" writes Mr. Edgar H. Felix in "The New York Tribune." But instead of fifty, consider only the last twenty, the last fifteen, the last ten years! Progress in all things, but especially in aeronautics.

Of course, we shall soon fly around the world, but the first trip will take months, just as the first recorded trip across the Atlantic—the voyage of Columbus—took nearly three months, although the Atlantic has now been crossed in less than five days by steamship and in sixteen hours by airplane. While the pilots of the first air trip around the world will devote all their attention to covering distance, those who make the first trip around the world in a week will centre their attention on speed.

The first attempt to fly around the world will be made along routes where protected waters are within reasonable flying range. Prevailing winds favour a west to east flight. For more than sentimental reasons, it is likely that the start will be made from Rockaway, and the first stop will be at the mid-ocean airport, the Azores. It will be unnecessary to fly north to St. John's, because, within the year, improvements will make direct flights from Rockaway to the Azores possible.

From the Azores to Lisbon and then to Gibraltar will offer no particular difficulties. Nor will there be lack of fuel and repair stations on the flight through the Mediterranean, with the southern ports of France, Italy and Greece at the disposal of the aerial Magellans. From Greece the course will turn southward, much as the mediaeval trade route, along the coast of Turkey and Arabia, over the Red Sea and the Arabian Sea to India.

From India to the Philippines, via Sumatra, Java and Borneo, the route will also follow lanes soon to be explored—along the India to Australia route, about two-thirds of the way. The next stage of the journey, from the Philippines to the west coast of North America, will present the greatest difficulties to the around-the-world flier. Although there are numerous islands in the Pacific, the first attempt will be made so soon that few of these airports will have been developed.

Around-the-world trips, involving thousands of extra miles of travel, will be necessary during the next few years, although ultimately more direct travel routes will be established. The first trip across the Pacific may be from the Philippines to the Marshall Islands, then to the Hawaiian Islands, and lastly to the California mainland.

The first flight will be interesting, dramatic, phenomenal, but much progress must be made before such flights become practical and capable of giving efficient service. For regular trips it is probable the long distance dirigible will be employed, but the development of adequate airports will postpone establishment of regular trips by such craft for some time. The discovery or development of gases of considerably more lifting power than hydrogen will make more rapid flight of dirigibles possible at extremely high altitudes, where winds 200 and 300 miles an hour will assist the airship. There will be no oxygen difficulties—the hull in which the crew operates will be airtight with oxygen supplied from tanks—pressure will be the same as on the ground.

On the other hand, serviceable flying around the world will not come into its own until many radical improvements are made. The most important of these inventions will be wireless transmission of power. Instead of carrying gasolene fuel weighing many tons, antennal will gather the energy from the ether. But, serviceable or not—the flights across the Atlantic have not been serviceable from a commercial or purely utilitarian viewpoint—an aerial trip around the world will soon be made.

In flying around the world in a week many stops and quick stops will be made; change of machines will be made, both the land 'plane and the flying boat will be used. All these stops and changes will be possible for airports with supplies, and machines will soon, very soon, dot the continents and the islands of all the seas. Think what has been done in this line in a few short months, since the signing of the armistice!

WRITING FOR "THE POST."

"I see the "Cologne Post" wants articles, dear." My wife looked up from the paper which she was reading, and eyed me questioningly.

I was reading a very interesting book at the time, so I merely grunted without looking up, and went on with my reading.

"Why don't you try and do something? I am sure if you can write stories for the magazines, you can write for a paper like "The Cologne Post!" I left my book with a sigh, and gently explained that there was a wide gulf, between short and topical articles, and my five thousand words of hashed sentiment for the masses."

"Never mind that dear, try and do something! You might at least earn enough to supply me with chocolates!" I looked regretfully at my book, and murmured hopefully "To-morrow."

It was, however, a hope that was doomed to failure, my book was forcibly taken away from me, a pad and pencil placed in front of me, and I was commanded to try!

For a solid half an hour I wasted paper in a vain attempt to write something short and witty, but it was of no avail.

"It is of no use dear!" I said wearily at last, "I am not cut out for writing this kind of stuff. I can describe heroes and heroines locked in each other's arms, and villains and heroes engaged in gigantic struggles, but when it comes to short and witty articles—I fail."

My appeal was, however, only met with a withering request never to boast of my brains again, so I tried just once more, to justify that portion of my makeup.

Suddenly I was struck with an idea, and, with revenge in my heart as I thought of my neglected book, I decided to write the history, with all its miserable details, of my first attempt to write for "The Cologne Post."

My wife's smile of satisfaction, as my pencil scratched over the paper, was beautiful to behold, but I frustrated all her attempts to see what I was writing.

"Wait until you see it in print" I said, as I grabbed my hat and coat, and hardened my heart to withstand the wail of disappointment which floated after me, from the open door. HARRIS BARTLETT.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX.

Our Readers' Varied Views.

EXCESSIVE CIGARETTE SMOKING.

Sir,—What next; Mr. Editor, pray? The young soldier has been adversely criticised of late for many alleged failings and now comes a long plaint by a Senior officer in which he enjoins us to give up cigarette smoking and to discontinue patronage of the Army cinemas.

If all the suggestions put forward, no doubt in good faith, were carried out the present British occupants of the Rhine would be denied every sort of pleasure imaginable.

It appears to me that an advantage is being taken of our youth to "sit on" us whenever opportunity presents itself, in the belief that we are unable to take up the cudgels in our own defence.

What are we, may I ask—men or boys? Most of us have long ago left behind us the care of the nursery - the majority in fact had no such luxury—we are doing a man's work and all that we ask is to be treated as men, and not as irresponsible and naughty boys.

I refuse to admit "Senior Officer's" accusations and even were they true, I submit that excessive smoking is a far less evil than many to which we are exposed in Rhineland.

That the Army and men of higher rank than "Senior Officer" entertain no such fears is proved by the fact that we get our weekly issues of cigarettes and why have three cinemas been taken over in Cologne if not for us to attend?

BOYS BRIGADE.

Sir,—Your correspondent "Senior Officer" will have many supporters in his complaint as to the over indulgence in cigarette smoking among the young soldiers of the British Army of Occupation.

At such a time when we place such high value upon a healthy national youth it is painful to see young men, the pick of our future manhood, laying their constitutions open to the undermining influence of the evils of perpetual smoking.

Much of it is due, I believe, to the ignorance of the consequences of persistence in the habit and I am in favour of a campaign of enlightenment in which indisputable statistics and opinions of medical men should be put forward and made known to all.

The problem has a serious national aspect and it is one which the powers that be cannot afford to ignore.

PAINED.

FIXING PRICES.

Sir,—I hear a great many grumbles every day from soldiers as to the varying prices charged for identical articles at the different institutes for the benefit of Tommy on the Rhine.

These unfortunate discrepancies are not only annoying to the purchaser but they cause a great deal of criticism which in many instances probably is scarcely deserved, yet is not calculated to do these institutes any good.

Could not this unsatisfactory state of things be overcome quite easily by a weekly conference between the heads of the various clubs, canteens and institutes at which they can arrive mutually at a fair figure for the sale of identical articles during the ensuing seven days?

It is the lack of uniformity that causes all the dissatisfaction and I hope it may be able to act on my suggestion.

H.P.

WHY NOT WRESTLING?

Sir,—I see that our old friend "Anti-Box" has cropped up again. I should have thought after the trouncing he got previously he would have lain low for evermore.

His would seem to be a curiously constructed mind. He objects to boxing as brutal, yet writes in favour of wrestling. Now "Anti-Box" can you tell me wherein the fine distinction lies?

Both are struggles of man against man for physical supremacy — both are fights. I think I can see what shocks the susceptibilities of "Anti-Box" in boxing. It is I suppose that blood may result from a blow. In wrestling that can hardly happen.

"Anti-Box" is evidently a tender plant; yet his advocacy of wrestling, if sincere, shows he has his better points. A.R.W.

UNRESPONSIVE AUDIENCES.

Sir,—I fail to see anything "unsportsmanlike" in not showing wild enthusiasm over "turns" one hears at an entertainment. Surely one can be sincere, and if an item doesn't appeal to one, is it obligatory to clap or stamp or shout just because others to whom the performance gives pleasure are doing so?

It matters not to me whether the artistes "work like Trojans" or not. Hard work doesn't necessarily produce effects that evoke applause; on the contrary forced efforts on the stage to gain the approbation of an audience usually fall flat.

When I go to a show I pay quota at the door and expect to get my money's worth, I claim the right to applaud or not according to whether anything I see or hear has pleased me or not. While appreciating everyone's efforts on the stage or platform, I retain my individual right to do as I please. I don't go so far as to give "the bird" to an entertainer whose turn I don't like, but if I remain silent while others applaud that's my affair.

Why "Honesty" fixes the date 1870 when it became necessary for everybody to applaud and shout approval of all that is put before them, I can't see. What bearing has the year of the Franco-Prussian War on his argument? 1919.

TO SUZETTE.

Why do you always smile, cherie
When I chance to catch your eye;
Is it a soft denial, cherie,
Or is it that you are shy?

Why are you lips so red, cherie,
Why are your eyes so bright;
What did they try to say, cherie
To me the other night?

Only you speak with your eyes, cherie
Lips have a lovelier task;
Perhaps it's because you are wise, cherie,
Perhaps it is only a mask.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

Striking Facts about the Question and its Answer.

BY "OLD BRIGADE."

Evidently the whole idea and purpose of my letter has been missed by "Anti-Cant," who has turned what might have been an interesting discussion, resulting in improvements, into a battle of words.

The mere heading of his letter shows that he views my letter as antagonistic, yet I can assure him that the sole idea was to try by suggestion and co-operation to improve the state of things which now exist.

Should there be a Sports Officer?

"Anti-Cant" suggests that the Battalion Sports Officer should be a thing of the past, and that he should be replaced by a Sports Committee. In reply however, I wish to place before him instances of what has happened in four Battalions which I know personally. A Sports Committee was formed, consisting of a junior N.C.O. or man from each platoon, and one Officer per Company. On all questions relating to sport the Committee was asked to hold conferences. Because however, these meetings were convened in the afternoons the Young Soldiers looked on this as an extra duty, and five times out of six when a meeting was held, only half a dozen, or so, rolled up.

Platoon representatives were allotted definite duties relating to Sports. For example, the raising of a platoon football team; platoon running team, etc.; for arranging matches for his platoon against others, through the Sports Secretary. This system was in vogue for six weeks but as so few matches were arranged during this period, and there was a lack of supervision generally, it all went to point out the falacy of leaving the matters of organization to the Men's Committee, the Sports Officer having no option in the matter but to take the whole thing into his own hands once more. Has this not been the case in most "Young Soldier" Battalions?

No Lack of Organisation.

From his remarks "Anti-Cant" is evidently under the impression that no such thing as organised Sports and Competitions has been run in the Battalion to which "Old Brigade" belongs. I do not think I can do better than once more quote actual facts.

Full particulars of a Winter Sports Programme were published. They included an Inter-Platoon Quarter League, Inter-Company Hockey League, formation of Regimental football, rugby, and hockey teams, besides less notable games, which I will deal with in turn.

FOOTBALL: I have already explained how this fared in spite of "Anti-Cant's" suggested Committee.

HOCKEY: Lectures were arranged to instruct would-be players how this game should be played. Everyone was asked to attend and yet out of a whole Battalion, only twenty put in an appearance. Men were urged merely to join in knocking a hockey ball about until they could get some idea of the game, four instructors would have helped them in doing so (two of whom were "Old War Crocks" whom "Anti-Cant' so much despises) but no new players came forward.

RUGBY: N.C.O.'s and men were asked to submit their names to learn the game. Practice and instructional games were to be played. It may be of interest, perhaps, to publish the result of this request which is as follows.

N.C.O.'s who were Rugby Players . . 3
N.C.O.'s who wished to learn the game 3
Men who were Rugby Players. . 0
Men who wished to learn the game. . 0

What excuse can "Anti-Cant" put forward in defence of this?

BOXING: I have touched on this subject in my last letter but the lack of spirit struck me so very forcibly with regard to this, that I had some talks with the men asking them why they did not take to it. I was surprised beyond measure to hear a large number of youths say, without, shame, that they actually feared the tuition.

Spirit of Apathy.

Even if some of these young soldiers are incapacitated through service and strenuous training or "other causes" and cannot themselves play, surely they are able to support their own team.

How many spectators were present at the VI Corps Eliminating Competitions held in Blucher Park during the summer? The writer was present and competed and knows that, apart from the officiating staff, there was not a dozen.

Again, at Rich this summer the "flower" of Rhine sportsmen were competing, and men were being chosen to represent the Rhine Army in England. The day was perfect as regards weather, and the event had been advertised for weeks previously. Here again, the writer was competing and knows for a fact that there was not more than thirty spectators to encourage and put heart into the men doing their best to uphold the names of their respective units by endeavouring to be represented in the team that was to be sent in England.

There are many such instances happening every week, but they far too numerous to quote.

Older Soldier not to Blame.

"Anti-Cant" is quite mistaken when he states that I am attacking the men whose spirit pulled them through the late War: if he will read a little more carefully he will see that I think a great deal of the man who has been disabled and through this has to content himself with a game of ping-pong, whereas before the war nothing less than the rugby or hockey field was good enough for him.

Nor a Lack of Gear.

His argument with regard to gear is very feeble, because with so many units breaking up it is possible (with a little trouble) to obtain large stocks at a low price. Notwithstanding the alleged inefficiency of "Old Brigade," in his Battalion there are four hundred football jerseys, five hundred football shorts, three hundred running vests, and seventy hockey sticks; forty cricket bats, with thirty sets of pads, stumps, and bails etc; four cricket nets, and four cricket mats, in addition to a Gymnasium, complete with appliances. The latter, by the way, though never being used by anybody for its legitimate purpose, is now converted into a cinema.

WHO, OR WHAT IS TO BLAME?

RACING RESUMÉ.

Season's Performances of Three-year-olds.

BUCHAN AND BAYUDA.

It is very seldom that any of the best two-and three-year-olds of any season are seen in public after the conclusion of the Newmarket Houghton Meeting, and therefore it is possible when that date arrives to sum up the form in some degree, and to decide which of the youngsters are likely to play a bold part in the classic events of the following year says "The Field."

Of the three-year-olds the whole Turf world will agree that the season has been a remarkably poor one so far as classic horses are concerned. In connection with the pick of such horses it it exceedingly curious that many of them were wonderfully good looking.

The Panther, for example, was probably the grandest-looking three-year-old of very recent times. He is as big as Hurry On, the champion of 1916, but shows greater elegance of outline, and more quality than did Mr. Buchanan's horse three years ago. There, however, the comparison ends, for whereas Hurry On showed enormous superiority over all the horses he met, The Panther, after a smartly gained victory in the Two Thousand, became a hopeless non-trier; and failed to get near the front in either of the three races in which he has since taken part.

The Derby Winner.

As for the Derby winner, Grand Parade—a very good-looking horse—so little has been seen of him in public that it is difficult to form a correct opinion as to his merits, and it is just possible that he may be a good deal better than is generally thought. As a two-year-old he won twice in England and three times in Ireland before he suffered defeat.

At the Houghton meeting of last year, however, he was only third to Glanmerin and Knight of the Air in the Moulton Stakes of five furlongs, but was giving a little weight to the two who finished in front of him. He did not run again until he took part in the Derby, and it will be remembered that in that race he was generally supposed to be the second string of his stable, Dominion, in the same ownership, starting at exactly one-third of the odds which were offered against Grand Parade.

This second and last race of the year was at Ascot in the St. James' Palace Stakes. The two were well matched, and Grand Parade had to be hard ridden, but he won nevertheless, and that was his last appearance on a racecourse.

Success of the Season.

Buchan, on the other hand, has run very often, and has, on the whole, been the most successful three-year-old of the season, in spite of the fact that he was beaten into third place for the St. Leger. In all he has won five times as a three-year-old, and has been beaten on three occasions, and each of his defeats was sustained in a classic race. He won the Craven Stakes in April, was second to The Panther in the Two Thousand, and second to Grand Parade in the Derby. He next won the Princess of Wales' Stakes, and Eclipse Stakes, but met with unexpected defeat in the St. Leger, and from what has come to our knowledge we are strongly inclined to think that this running was wrong as far as Buchan was concerned.

Since his Doncaster defeat Buchan has won twice, and Keysoe has been beaten by Flying Spear over ten furlongs at Newbury, and again at Liverpool, and has won the Newmarket Oaks in very moderate company.

Bayuda, best Filly.

Roseway, who won the One Thousand, has only taken one race since, and has been twice beaten, and Bayuda, who won the Oaks, was beaten when attempting to give a great deal of weight to Rothesay Bay at Liverpool in July; she is probably the best of the fillies.

Galloper Light is doubtless one of the best three-year-olds of the year. He won the Payne Stakes and the Grand Prix de Paris, and ran second—beaten by a head—to He for the Coronation Cup. The handicap three-year-olds have entirely failed to hold their own with the older horses. Just lately it is true that several minor handicaps have been won by horses in their second season, but it is a fact that no single one of the most important races of this description has fallen to a three-year-old.

ALBERT HALL BOXING.

Should Boxers Divulge Size of Purses.

For a long time there has been strong opposition to boxing taking place at Albert Hall for purses or wagers, writes "Straight Left" in "Sporting Life." And while opposition has so far been broken down in this case as to permit a series of professional tournaments, it is only on the understanding that no purse, prize money, side stake, or wager will depend on the contests, and that part of the proceeds of each show will be devoted to charities to be named later. Valuable trophies will, however, be the reward of the successful contestants, and that the men are satisfied is evident, or they would not have consented to box.

After Dinner Objection.

It was objected by one of the after-dinner speakers that the public would want to know what the boxers were receiving for their services, otherwise the shows would be a failure; but to this there came the very obvious retort that the boxing was what people were interested in, and not the size of the purse. Further, that neither the public nor any individual had the right to ask how much Beckett, say, was to get for boxing Smith. That was entirely a matter for Beckett and his backer.

The public do not ask Melbourne Inman or George Robey, or Steve Donoghue how much they earned by their skill, nor had the public any right to do so. Why, then, should the impertinent "Nosey Parkers" be so curious about boxers and expect to have their curiosity satisfied? It is no business of these people whether Beckett is to have a medal or a "monkey" for boxing Carpentier, or Smith, or anybody else.

BILLIARDS CHALLENGE.

INMAN TO PLAY FALKINER, NEWMAN AND SMITH.

Melbourne Inman whose defeat to the tune of 4,000 by Falkiner (received 2,000) in a tournament match which concluded during the week-end came as a surprise to the billiard world, is prepared to make good his challenge to any player in the world. Newman, Smith and Falkiner all accepted.

Negotiations are practically completed for matches and the necessary papers will probably be signed in London when Falkiner returns in about a fortnight's time.

Inman and Smith completed arrangements for their match, which will be one of 16,000 (Smith to receive 1,500 start) to take place at Thurston's commencing on Dec. 1st for £100 a side.

RUGBY BOMBSHELL.

Unexpected Development in Welsh Dispute.

The sensational decision of the Pontypool Rugby Football Club to cancel the Easter Monday fixture with the invincible Newport Club dropped like an explosive bomb in Welsh football circles.

It will be remembered that after alleging foul play against the Pontypool players in a match between the teams at Pontypool on October 6, the Newport Club offered Pontypool the option of either cancelling or fulfilling the return fixture at Newport on Easter Monday.

The sensational character of the Pontypool resolve is accentuated by the fact that most, if not all, Welsh clubs believed that the trouble between the two clubs in dispute had ended amicably. The fact is that negotiations have been proceeding privately ever since the option was given to Pontypool, and evidence that Pontypool are not satisfied with the course the negotiations took is afforded by that club's resolution to ask the Welsh Football Union to reopen the inquiry into the allegations made.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

"THE MELTING POT."

All ye who delight in drama gird up your loins and forsake the fleshpots of Cologne and go in your thousands to the Deutsches Theatre.

I must apologise for the Biblical form of this exhortation but there are some lines in Mr. Israel Zangwill's play which induce me to this frame of mind. I came away from the "Melting Pot" last night with my mind idelibly impressed. I once thought that there was only one great part befitting the histrionic talent of Lieut. Esme Percy—that of John Tanner in "Man and Superman." Now I find I was mistaken.

To the part of John Tanner must now be added that of David Quixano. Lieut. Percy's portrayal of this exotic creature was a magnificent piece of acting, perhaps not so striking in the first two acts but rising to the hights of dramatic ability in the third.

A sympathetic Audience.

A Deutsches Theatre audience is usually an appreciative one, but I have never seen an audience composed of British soldiers so gripped. During the latter part of the third act, one could have heard a pin drop. The idea of the play has already been described in these columns, and it is only necessary to add to what has already been written that this play is one which will show up the weak points in the histrionic capabilities of those who take part in it.

As regards the performance on Monday night, I can only say that the entire caste is composed of tried actors. Next to Lieut. Percy, I take off my hat to that accomplished actress, Miss Inez Bensusan who played the dual role of Baroness Revendal and Frau Quixano. Her rendering of the latter part was a masterpiece, and in considering her portrayal of the Baroness I must take into consideration the fact that she had to transform herself during the play from a bent old lady of eighty something into a gorgeously dressed French lady in the, shall we say, thirties, who had a penchant for les affaire and L'amour and then, in the last act, back again to old age and incipient idiocy. I have already said that her acting as Frau Revandal was a masterpiece. Her protrayal of the Baroness was very, very clever, but to my mind it suffered from being slightly overdone. Miss Bensusan is to be complimented on her French accent, but her broken English is rather too broken to be heard distinctly in the back parts of the house.

Another Fine Part.

Her husband, the Baron, played by Sergeant Shilsky, was a stern soldier and staunch adherent of the Czar, but he was apparently lenient on the matter of his wife's taste in dress which was just a wee bit outré for a lady of her position.

To stand perfectly still on the stage for very nearly a quarter of an hour while an actor like Lieut. Percy is playing his finest part and yet succeed in keeping the audience keenly interested in you is a difficult feat, but one which Sergeant Shilsky managed to accomplish. His rendering of Baron Revendal was admirable.

Lieut. Leigh Farnell showed to better advantage as old Meadel Quixano than he has yet done, and he played a difficult part exceedingly well. I always have liked Miss Shirley King's acting, and her part of Vera Revandal, the Russian girl who loved her David to such an extent that she was willing to throw over all her racial prejudices was most cleverly and sympathetically played.

A Convincing American.

Lieut. Humphrey Hope, as Herr Pappelmeister, quite surpassed himself. His was a very fine piece of character acting. Pte. T. Terry quite convinced me that he was what he was meant to be, Quincy Davenport, the American millionaire. He essayed what is very difficult to do well, viz. to carry his American accent right through the play. It certainly faltered once or twice, especially when he was making love to Vera Revendal, but on the whole, he gave a very fine performance.

Miss Francis Chisholm, as Kathleen O'Reilly, delighted us all with her fascinating Irish accent and her amusing Irishisms. A comparatively small part but played delightfully.

I was sorry not to see the house more packed, but demobilization is playing havoc everywhere. I do think, however, that if people will only realise that they have got here a very fine play, very finely acted, we shall during the week not have to complain of empty rows in spite of the gaps a relentless government is making in our ranks. E.H.S.

ROUND ABOUT NOTES.

The Memory Man.

This littte drawing will readily be recognised by patrons of the Palace, Cologne, as "Datas," the wonderful memory man, who mystified large audiences at the cosy theatre last week. "Datas" who has probably the most retentive memory of any human being, has for many years travelled Europe answering the numerous questions fired at him by members of many fascinated audiences. The most remote dates and [illegible] are recalled by him with extraordinary readiness and he claims to have memorised 2,000 facts about the war as a result of reading them once through. While he was in Cologne, "Datas" was a guest at many officers messes, his breezy conversation and genial manner making him very popular.

Second Master Concert.

To-day, the famous master-singer of the Munich Opera House, Herr Paul Bender, is giving a Concert at the Burgergesellschaft at 7.30 p.m. He will sing sections from the works of J. S. Bach, Schubert, Mendelsohn and Beethoven. To-morrow, at the same place and at the same time, he will sing songs of Schumann, Wurz, Kowalski, Loewe.

At the Leave Club.

Leave Club announcements include:—to-day, an impromptu concert from 5 to 3 p.m.; a dance at 6.30 p.m. in the theatre, and a German class in the quiet room. To-morrow, after the usual impromptu concert, there will be a whist drive in the music room and a dancing class followed by a dance in the theatre, all commencing at 6.30 p.m.

The Printer's Omission.

A curious slip crept into my note about the Audrey Esmond party yesterday. What I wrote was "Miss Esmond and her companions are having a great time this week at Bonn, although they appear at the Leave Club to-night, . . ." But that which the printer condescended to put into the paper was "Miss Esmond and her companions are having a great time this week although they are appearing at the Leave Club to-night . . ." Only those two words "at Bonn" dropped but they make all the difference. My regrets to the Controller of Entertainments.

Black and White.

I hear that all officers wishing to get tickets for the Black and White fancy dress dance, to be held at the B.E.L.C. on Thursday 27th November, may apply personally or by letter direct to the Controller of Entertainments at the club.

No. 1 G.H.Q. Clerks' Mess.

On Saturday, a most enjoyable evening was spent at the above mess when a large number of members sat down to a sumptuous meal organised by the mess committee. There was an amply supply of good things to occupy everyone's attention. Following the dinner, a concert by various members of the G.H.Q., Concert Party was given. The artistes had an excellent reception and were all called upon for encores. A splendid programme was brought to a conclusion by the singing of the National Anthem. The committee are to be heartily congratulated on their arrangements and everyone present will agree that the whole event passed off delightfully.

OUR COMPETITION.

Likelihood of Solo Winner in No 8 Contest.

We expect to publish to-morrow the result of No 8 football contest. As yet no competitor forecasting the ten results correctly has been discovered, and, judging by the surprises of Saturday, this feat is not likely to be accomplished.

One coupon has been noted on which the entrant managed to forecast the four draws and the two away winners which floored so many; he, however, failed to give the other matches correctly.

Once again we draw attention to the fact that no local money, excepting Cologne notes, can be accepted.

Coupons for No 9 contest are reaching us in large numbers. Post early as this greatly fascilitates the checking.

Coupons must be addressed:—

FOOTBALL CONTEST No. 9,
"Cologne Post",
A.P.O. S./40 Rhine Army.

List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.
2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.
3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for any reason, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.
4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.
5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into. Neither will interviews be granted.
6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.
7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, mislaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.
8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.
9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

A Competitors Ideas on how to win Success.

SOME SOUND ADVICE.

We have received the following letter from a recent winner in our football contest. It speaks for itself, and we recommend his ideas of perseverance to other competitors. He says:—

Sir,—I have this morning received your cheque, for the amount won by me in your competition. May I add that I have been a competitor in your contests since you began them, and have never missed sending in my coupons. My chums used to rag me and say that I would never win anything and that I was but throwing my money away as others, with more knowledge of football form, were competing against me. I took their pessimistic remarks good humouredly, but never allowed them to prevent my entering weekly for your prize. I always send in five coupons. On one I make what I think will be the correct results, according to form, and on the other four, I make allowances for, what might be a possible surprise. That this idea has paid in the long run is proved by my having become a prizewinner. My failure, week after week, did not deter me. I stuck to your competition and through this I have been successful in winning an amount which comes at a fine time. You see I'm going to be demobilized shortly.

Your quickness in putting the results in, and sending me the cheque are very much appreciated.

I hope you will keep your competition going, Good Luck to the "Post" and its staff.

Again many thanks for your promtitude,
Yours sincerely, "Sticker."

(Our correspondent's advice is undoubtedly sound and other messages we have received point to the value of perseverance.)

DEATH OF IRISH SPORTSMAN.

The death has taken place, at his residence, Newbridge, Co. Kildare, of the well-known Irish breeder and owner of horses Mr. C.S. Moore, who was predeceased by his first wife a few years ago. The late Mrs. Moore was a sister to the Messrs Ryan, of Ballymany, Newbridge, who in their time were amongst the best-known breeders of horses in Ireland. Mrs. Moore inherited from her brothers many brood mares, and these she willed to her husband. He owned some useful performers, the best of which was Royal Signet.

SOCCER CELEBRITIES.

Interesting Items About The Leading Teams.

BY ORDNANCE.

Beale, the ex-Norwich City and Manchester United goalkeeper, who now keeps the fort for Gillingham is not having a very good time. He has to remove the ball from the netting much more now then he ever had to do at Manchester, but nevertheless he is one of the best keepers in Southern League Football to-day.

* * *

When Sheffield United got Fazackerley from Preston N.E. they got a bargain. He has played well for Sheffield and scored quite a lot of goals.

* * *

Barnfather, who was recently demobilized, turned out for Merthyr last week. He formerly played for Barnsley, Norwich City and Croydon Common. He is small, fast, tricky and is at home on either wing; he used to thrill the Barnsley spectators years ago.

* * *

Dennon, the Swansea goalie, used to be in the Metropolitan Police and occasionally assisted Brentford is those days.

* * *

Ten years ago Sheffield Wednesday had a defence which was composed of 3 L's. Lyall kept goal and, Layton and Langley were the backs. Wednesday supporters would be more chirpy if they had three like them this year.

* * *

Atterbury, the Plymouth Argyle back, seems to be an evergreen. It is fifteen years since he was allowed to go South from Barnsley. It was thought then that his football was finished, but he has rendered Plymouth great service and, according to reports, he is playing great football this season.

* * *

Booth of Brighton, Armstrong and Stringfellow of Portsmouth, who have not missed a single match for their respective clubs this season, were formerly in the Sheffield Wednesday team. The Wednesday have been too fond of allowing their players to go South. They could do with some of them back to give them a lift from the danger zone at the foot of the table.

Beckenham to Brazil.

Reginald Gray, formerly professional to the Foxgrove Golf Club, Beckenham, has accepted the appointment of professional to the San Paulo Country Club, Brazil. Gray sails on December 10.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Two Hundred.
Tomorrow will be another Red Letter day in the history of this paper. We shall publish our 200th number.

Poor Hubby.
I hear that the tailors of Cologne have recently fixed new prices for women's clothing. This rise of over forty per cent. makes new costumes a luxury. Husbands I understand are greatly upset over the rise.

Without Foundation.
A group of spectators witnessing the funeral of Cologne's Archbishop took up a position on a heap of snow. Their weight and the thaw caused this to collapse with the result that numerous bruises were obtained and one fraulein received a bad injury to her eye through an umbrella striking her.

Respect for the Dead.
Incidentally I may add I heard numerous favourable comments passed on the attitude of the British troops as the coffin of the great prelate was passing them. All and sundry came to the salute in a soldierly manner.

Not When in Blue.
The sale of alcoholic drink of any kind, including wine and beer, to British soldiers dressed in blue hospital uniform is strictly forbidden.

Conferring.
General Degouette who recently visited Cologne has since I hear been holding several conferences with the members of the Rhineland High Commission on matters dealing with the Occupation.

Coolness.
I hear that the presence of mind of an American military policeman saved several lives at Neuweid, where a cinema theatre caught fire.

Spoilt Window Show.
At noon yesterday, two horses drawing a mineral water wagon ran amok in Perlenpfuhl, finally coming to grief in a Hohestrasse window where there were many dainty confections.

Serious Talk.
While partaking of supper in an institute for soldiers last evening a correspondent could not help hearing a discussion between two young guards—budding evangelists no doubt — on the best way of gripping a congregation.

General's Tribute.
Amongst the many visitors to the Church of St. Gereon, where the late Cardinal-Archbishop of Cologne lay in State, was an English General who took his place amongst civilians and "other ranks" who filed slowly and reverently through the crypt, past the body of the late Prelate.

River Route off.
I hear that demobilized troops are not going by river and via Rotterdam, now, but by way of Calais per rail.

Kids Will Be Kids.
Trams on not a few routes during the week-end were held up by stacks of snow which had been rolled on the lines by children. Passengers seemed to take the delays good humouredly, but I'm not sure that the drivers and conductors did.

Defying the Elements.
Come hail, rain or snow, while there's a Tommy on the streets, the folk who run the open air news stalls don't close down. The concern by the Leave Club was "open" all last week, though at times the magazines and papers were snowed under.

Cafe Shrines.
In many of the older cafes in Cologne, mostly those far from the madding crowd, you will notice over the bar a statue of the Virgin, and of course a candle ever alight.

Delightful Music.
Another orchestral concert is place taking at the VI Corps Club this afternoon, I hear. These entertainments are most popular, at which I don't express any surprise. The music is splendidly rendered by a picked band from the Opera House.

Bigger and Better.
I notice that our American friends have re-enlarged and improved their "Amaroc News" Congratulations! The price is 75 pfgs.

A Word of Warning.
Avoid copies of well-known safety razor blades as you would a plague. They are exact replicas of the real thing, except that they fail to remove even face-down. The worst of it is that they are on sale at the stalls of at least one organisation which caters for the soldier.

Appreciated.
I am told that the American forces in Coblenz are eager to see more of the performances of the Rhine Army Dramatic Company.

Boxing.
I hear of one mess in Cologne which has suddenly taken a craze for boxing. Before meals are served the members are to be seen indulging in two or three rounds. It certainly doesn't affect the appetite.

To Catch Tommy.
This is how a German cafe proprietor near a Concentration camp advertises. "Boys, you like a good snack cheap, don't you? Righto! step inside!"

How He Fared.
At a billet one of the maids produced a photograph of her "cavalier" just repatriated, and excitedly explained that he now weighed umpteen pounds, and best of all had "viel geld" having been paid five and twenty marks a day by the British Government. There is to be a wedding soon.

A Linguist.
In conversation with a hotel porter of a famous hotel in Cologne, I was informed that he could speak seven languages. Among these were Polish and Russian.

Gold I Gave.
I was shown recently one of the medals given in exchange for the gold which was given up by the German people during the war. It bears on one side the words, "Gold I gave for defence. Iron I take for honour." On the reverse is a kneeling figure and the words, "In iron times."

Looks before Ability.
At a recent match an officer addressing a lady friend said "That chap on the right over there is not much of a player, he's too slow". "But he is very good-looking you'll admit," was the astonishing reply.

RHINELANDER.

VANITY FAIR.

A Feature for the British Woman in Rhineland.

Piquant Headgear.
Millinery this season is full of coquettish whims and fancies. There are some smart close-fitting berets of fur, and quaint Directoire shapes of rather exclusive genre. Older women are wearing large-sized hats—again of the eighteenth century era—softened and beautified by ostrich plumes and ospreys. Millinery, however, is extremely costly. There are some beautiful picture hats worn with no trimming beyond a hanging veil. This by no means signifies that they are cheap; on the contrary, such very exclusive simplicity has to be paid for.

Hairbrush Washing.
Put a tablespoonful of cloudy ammonia or a lump of ordinary soda into a pint of water, and dip the bristles into the water (working them about), keeping the backs free from water. Then rinse in cold water, shake them well, wipe the handles and backs with a soft towel and put the brushes to dry. Slow drying and the omission of the cold water rinse makes them flabby.

Do You Like Brown Food?
What colour gives you an appetite? The question sounds ridiculous, but it is in accordance with a modern theory of food and colour. If lunching with an aesthete on whom you wish to make an impression, select chocolate-coloured or rich brown food. If, on the contrary, you show a partiality for yellow or saffron food the aesthete will most likely conclude that your tastes are low. So the new faddists say.

Few Jewels.
An ostentatious display of jewellery during the war was absolutely taboo. And the rule remains in force still. Some day it may be repealed for great and glorious occasions. But at the present time even the new designs in gem-setting provide in their restraint a text against ornate gewgaws worn in profusion.

For Evening Wear.
Loose quilted satin coats, mostly embroidered, and usually with big fur collars, are gaining in favour for evening wear. Such a coat of old rose satin boldly embroidered with gold chrysanthemums, and with a high collar of white monkey fur, has just been fashioned for a well-known lady by a smart dressmaker.

Girdles.
A new and easily made girdle is composed of narrow ribbons in two colours, plaited with lengths of heavy wool. One end is finished with a large ribbon and wool tassel, and the other with a ring in horn. This girdle is wound round the waist, and the tasselled end is drawn through the ring, which is almost as large as a bracelet.

White Fox.
Of the white fox whose fur is being sold for evening wear it is a remarkable fact that when the skin arrives in the markets the paws are never attached to the body. The fur comes from the wilds of Siberia mostly, but before the skins are dispatched to London, which is the central market of the fur world, the hunters take off the paws and tails.

Gorgeous Cloaks.
Early Victorianism is rampant in the wonderful evening wrap, now one of the most important features of fashion. These wraps are so marvellously manipulated by present-day couturiéres and furriers that one feels how some of the great women of bygone days would have loved to wear them. I am not sure whether we shall return to the shoulders with the ultra feminine droop or not, but the shawl-like draperies of ermine or brocade may slip down and reveal the bolder lines with advantage.

AGNES.

OPINIONS OF THE MOMENT.

THE CALL OF CUPID.

Miss Margaret Pedler in her new novel "The Hermit of Far End" says: When love comes to you, as it will come, never forget that it is the biggest thing in the world, the one altogether good and perfect gift. Don't let any twopenny-halfpenny considerations of worldly advantage influence you, nor the tittle-tattle of other folks, and even if it seems that something insurmountable lies between you and the fulfilment of love, go over it, or round it, or through it! If it's real love, your faith must be big enough to remove the mountains in the way—or to go over them.

THROWN TO THE WOLVES.

Mr. Chedworth Paine, warning the middle classes that continued political apathy will mean their extinction, says: Labour men are out to win. They study economic questions, learn how to speak in public, hold meetings incessantly, organise thair ranks, vote on a ticket, canvass their mates, engage in ceaseless propaganda, leave no stone unturned to attain their legitimate ends. Villadom stands languidly aloof. Just as is the case in the United States, our own middle classes refuse to recognise that a share of political power can only be obtained and held by ceaseless effort. And now they are going to suffer and be bled, unless they bestir themselves.

CHRISTIANITY AND POLITICS.

Bishop Frodsham has given a warning against the danger of Christians allowing themselves to be captured by political and social propagandists. Although the bulk of the people are inclined to think there is no hope from organised Christianity, it is certain that religion, because it deals with fundamental principles, is a force second to none in the world. Politicians and special reformers with the slightest statesmanlike instinct know this quite well, and therefore they desire to make religion the driving force of their own particular schemes. So far as the principles of Christianity are concerned, all Christians should be out for justice and fair treatment for all classes of the community; otherwise there could be no lasting peace on earth. Is the industrial and social revolution as engineered to-day based upon material or moral motives? Unless they are certain upon this point Christians must beware lest they throw the influence of their religion unreservedly upon the side of social revolution.

WASTEFUL WAYS.

Lord Askwith, at a meeting to protest against waste, extravagance and enemy penetration said the worst thing is see the Government wasting money and covering up prodigal waste by asking for new taxation in order to meet it, particularly if that waste is partly due to the business affairs to the country being conducted by a policy of opportunism or faddism. Waste might be to some extent unavoidable during the war, but nothing could excuse waste in time of peace, and it is the duty of all to object to wasteful expenditure, to the unnecessary increase of bureaucrats and officials in offices that were not wanted, and that unduly interferes with the independence of the people.

BETRAYAL.

Brigadier General H. Page Croft, M.P. speaking on conditions since the war says: Germans have been let out of internment camps and are now occupying houses which British working men cannot get for love or money, and taking the jobs from those who were receiving the unemployment dole because they could not get work. I am personally interested in the toy trade—a new industry in this country. Eighty-five new factories have been set up, and yet Mr. Lloyd George, without consulting his party or the nation but by a stroke of the pen, allows the Germans to send into the country toys turned out by the very men who had shattered the bodies of Englishmen who were now learning the trade. I regard this as a great betrayal.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION.

Mr. George E. Goss, of the Department of Physical Education, Y.M.C.A. writing of the low standard of British physique says: As one studies the situation in the United Kingdom the fact is forcibly driven home that we have no standard British system of physical education, and it is time that Britons were facing this fact. For years various systems which were originated in other countries have been, and in most cases still are, the determining principles of all our work. The time has come for a Department of Physical Education, which, under the Ministry of Health or the Ministry of Education, can give direction and leadership to all those societies and organizations that are trying to stimulate physical efficiency. Physical education should have a broader and more comprehensive aim than it has ever had in the past.

REPORT ON DARDANELLES.

DIFFICULTIES UNDER-ESTIMATED AND PREPARATIONS INADEQUATE.

INTERVENTION IN RUSSIA ABANDONED.

DARDANELLES.

SCATHING REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION.

The report of the Royal Commission appointed to enquire into the Dardanelles expedition was issued on Monday. It states that when it was decided to send an expedition to Gallipoli, sufficient consideration was not given to the measures necessary to carry it out with success. The Commissioners say they think the difficulties of the operations were much underestimated at the outset. All decisions were taken and all provision based on the assumption that if a landing were effected, the resistance would be slight and the advance rapid. They can see no sufficient ground for this assumption. They are of opinion that with the resources then available, success in the Dardanelles, if possible at all, was only possible upon the condition that the Government concentrated their efforts upon the enterprise and limited their expenditure of men and material in the Western theatre of war. This condition, however, was never fulfilled. The Commissioners think that the conditions of military operations on the Peninsula should have been studied and a general plan prepared by the Chief of the Imperial staff and that it was the duty of the Secretary for War to ensure this being done.

They recognise Sir Ian Hamilton's personal gallantry and energy and his determination to win at all costs. They recognise also that the task entrusted to him was one of extreme difficulty, more so at first, as the authorities at home misconceived the nature and duration of the operations. Viewing the expedition in the light of events it would, in the Commissioners' opinion, have been well had Sir Ian Hamilton examined the situation, as disclosed by the first landings, in a more critical spirit, and impartially weighed the probabilities of success or failure, having regard to the resources in men and material which could be placed at his disposal, and had submitted to the Secretary for War a comprehensive statement of arguments for and against the continuance of operations. They think that after the advice of Sir Charles Monro had been confirmed by Lord Kitchener the decision to evacuate should have been taken at once. They think the decision to evacuate, when it was taken, was right.

The Commissioners are of opinion that throughout the operations the Navy carried out their duties with regard to the supply of seaborne water in an efficient manner and were always ready to render any assistance in their power. The Commissioners also think that on the whole the supply of food to the troops in Gallipoli was satisfactory.

A STOUT COLLISION.

Two goods trains collided on Tuesday morning on the Midland and Great Western Railway at Hill of Down (Ireland). Considerable damage was done to rolling stock and the driver and firemen of one train were seriously injured. Both trains were proceeding in the same direction and one ran into the rear of the other. One train was loaded with Guinness' stout, thirty truckloads of which rolled down a steep embankment.

AMERICAN COAL STRIKE.

A Chicago telegram says that a new phase of the coal strike has begun as the result of the Kansas Supreme Court ordering certain mines to be taken over by the State and naming receivers to operate them. Similar proceedings have been commenced in Ohio because it is alleged that the mine owners refuse to open the mines.

U.S. AND PEACE TREATY.

Senator Lodge has declared in the course of an interview that the only result of President Wilson's threat to "pocket" the Peace Treaty had been to harden the opposition. Republican leaders were of the opinion that if the Treaty failed the Government would be responsible.

FATAL MOTORBUS ACCIDENT.

On Monday morning a motorbus skidded on the greasy roadway outside Stepney Station, mounted the pavement and dashed into a crowd of people waiting for the trams. It felled an electric standard, and did other damage. One person was killed, and several injured.

Married two months ago, Thomas Reynolds, aged 83, of Bearsted, near Maidstone, has been charged with deserting his wife, whose age is 78.

WILD ADVENTURE.

NO INTERFERENCE IN RUSSIA.

Russia again formed the subject of discussion in the House of Commons on Monday.

Sir Donald Maclean, initiating the debate on foreign affairs, admitted that Bolshevism was the negation of democracy but urged that it was none of our business. We had discharged our debts of honour and should now leave Russia to work out its own salvation.

Lord Robert Cecil described the American Senate's reservations as amounting almost to repudiation of the Covenant of the League of Nations by the United States and therefore constituted a repudiation of the Peace Treaty but whatever happened, the League must go on even without the participation of the United States. The burden would be greater for European nations but he had no doubt they would face it as they had faced the burdens of war.

While denouncing Bolshevism as "bloody despotism" he expressed the hope that Denikin and Koltchak would abandon the idea of pressing on to Moscow and would devote themselves instead to establishing a stable form of Government in territories already occupied.

Mr. Arthur Henderson said that British Labour agreed with the Russian Moderate Socialists and the Cadets. He appealed to the Government to withdraw its support of Koltchak and Denikin, whom he described as reactionaries.

Colonel Ward defended Koltchak as a democrat, whose only ambition was the restoration of internal peace.

Replying to the debate Mr. Lloyd George said he was glad that the debate had shown that whatever differences there might be regarding the best methods of dealing with the Russian situation, there was only one opinion about Bolshevism. He proceeded to give an example of Bolshevist despotism in dealing with labour and defended the policy pursued in Russia on lines followed on previous occasions.

Reviewing the difficulties of the situation in Russia the Premier pointed out that the anti-Bolshevist elements were not united. Thus Koltchak, who was a man of very advanced and broad views, was fighting for a re-united Russia and the Baltic States were fighting for independence. Consequently it was impossible for any man to lay down a policy without grave doubts. Another point was that there were Germans still in the Baltic provinces. They must be cleared out, otherwise the peace of Europe was unsafe.

In conclusion he said he could not advise the country to undertake the terrible responsibilites of restoring order in Russia. He had no fear of Bolshevism in any land which was well governed, in which all classes felt confident that their claims would be heard with sympathy and determined with justice. He had no fear of revolution but he dreaded a wild adventure into lands where disaster had awaited every Empire and every army that had ever made that adventure.

HUGE DEATH DUTIES.

The late Sir Walpole Greenwell, of the firm of Greenwell and Company, stock brokers, left property provisionally valued at £1,400,000, as far as is at present ascertained. Under the new scale of death duties £460,000 will be due on the provisional valuation alone. Deceased left £1,500 to the Stock Exchange Benevolent Fund, £300 each to his three principal clerks and £50 to other employees of ten years' service.

OAKLEAF FOR MENTIONS.

Replying to a question in the House Mr. Winston Churchill said "It is in contemplation, although no final decision has yet been taken, to distinguish those who have been mentioned in war despatches by giving them permission to wear a small oakleaf on the ribbon of the Victory Medal. I am of opinion that it is highly desirable that something in this direction should be done."

CHINAMAN'S APPEAL REFUSED.

Djang Djing Sung, the Chinaman sentenced to death at Worcester Assizes for murdering a fellow countryman named Zee Ming Wu in Warley Woods, near Birmingham, made an unsuccessful appeal against his sentence to the Court of Criminal Appeal yesterday.

NO TANKS FOR BOLSHEVISTS.

The Secretary of the War Office issues the following:

The statement that British tanks have been sold to the Bolsheviks is absolutely untrue, and is issued with the obvious intention of traducing the national Russian cause.

G.H.Q., GT. BRITAIN.

TO BE ABOLISHED IN FEBRUARY.

The War Office announces that General Headquarters, Great Britain, will be abolished as from February 1st next, on which date the duties at present carried out by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief Forces in Great Britain and his staff at General Headquarters will be taken over by the War Office. The General Headquarters for the United Kingdom was established in 1916, in consequence of the large number of troops to be trained in the country and the great amount of work entailed by the preparation and co-ordination of measures for home defence. Now that the army at home is being reduced by demobilization to pre-war strength, and the need of special home defence measures has disappeared, the Army Council has decided that the continued existence of General Headquarters is no longer necessary.

On General Sir William Robertson taking over the command of the Army of the Rhine, Earl Haig returned to the Horse Guards and the control of General Headquarters in Great Britain.

FRENCH ELECTIONS.

SOCIALISTS THOROUGHLY DEFEATED.

Except in the North, the Socialists in France were beaten everywhere in the election. The general opinion is that they carried their Bolshevist propaganda too far, and have therefore hung themselves with their own rope. In any case, whatever the reason is, it is certain that in the suburbs of Paris, which were formerly a stronghold of Socialism, the Socialists have lost some 300,000 votes, polling a total inferior to that of the Republican union. Certain suburbs, such as Saint Denis, Puteaux and Bagnolet have a Socialist majority, but at Sceaux, for example, for which M. Longuet was elected in 1912, the Republican list polled more than twice as many votes as the Socialists. Another significant defeat is that of the Labour Minister, Calliard, in Rhone.

In the North there is an undoubted gain by the Socialists, especially in Lille which has voted practically solid. This is not general throughout the devasted regions, however. For example in the Somme the Republican concentration list of Klotz comes first, followed by the Liberal (Catholic) list. The struggle was between the Socialists and the Republican Coalition and the Republicans have won the day.

MR. O'GRADY'S MISSION.

Interviewed by Reuter's correspondent at Copenhagen, Mr. James O'Grady M.P. stated he was not authorised in his negotiations with Litvinoff to deal with the question of French or other Allied nationals in Russia. He was emphatic in his testimony to the good treatment accorded to Bolshevist prisoners by Great Britain. Asked what would happen if Litvinoff desired to make any communication on matters going beyond the question of exchange of prisoners, Mr. O'Grady replied "My instructions from the Government are specifically to negotiate on the question of exchange of prisoners and on that question only."

He said he had a high opinion of Litvinoff personally so that he was the more hopeful of success in his mission which was not only to get prisoners exchanged but if possible to arrange for the return of any British civilians in Russia who so desired.

COLLIERS' HIGH EARNINGS.

The Chairman of the Ebbw Vale Company, Mr. Mills, speaking at a soldiers' reunion at Cardiff, said that a statement of his that local colliers were able to earn a thousand pounds a year has been questioned. It was, however, a fact that the average earnings at one of his company's collieries were eight hundred a year, and some of the men could, if they liked, earn twelve hundred a year.

At Aberavon on Monday a number of colliers were ordered to pay income tax, after evidence had been given that they were earning up to ten pounds a week.

TRIAL OF EX-KAISER.

The Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General are now in Paris for consultations with the Allied Council in reference to the trial of the ex-Kaiser. It is hoped that some definite step in this matter may be taken by the Powers concerned by Christmas.

BALTIC FLEET RETIRES.

A farewell audience was accorded Admiral Cowan, Commander of the British Naval Squadron in the Baltic by the President of the Finnish Republic on Saturday. The entire British Fleet has now withdrawn to ice-free waters.

UNCONTROLLED SPIRITS.

The Food Controller in the House of Commons yesterday announced that the Cabinet had decided that all restrictions on the clearance of spirits from bond should be removed forthwith. This announcement was greeted with loud cheers.

DARING ROBBERY.

BANK AGENTS GAGGED AND BOUND.

A very daring robbery is reported from Millstreet, County Cork. Two representatives of the Munster and Leinster Bank and of the Provincial Bank of Ireland left Millstreet on Monday morning in a motor-car for Knocknagree, where a fair was being held.

When they reached a lonely part of the road, armed and masked men stopped the car, ordered its occupants to dismount and then bound and gagged them. The two officials carried between them £20,000, which was to be paid out to customers of the two banks attending the fair. When the robbers had secured the cash boxes they smashed the motor-car and fled towards the mountains. It is said that £11,000 of the money belonged to the Munster and Leinster Bank and nearly £9,000 to the Provincial Bank.

The constabulary spent a fruitless day on Monday searching for the perpetrators of the outrage. Search parties were out on the hills all night and patrols were watching every road and lane in the North East of the County in the hope of discovering where the robbers had concealed their booty but without success.

TURKISH QUESTIONS.

MANDATORY POWER TO PAY.

The Government are without definite information as to when America's decision may be expected on the question of her sharing the responsibility for protecting the peoples inhabiting the Turkish Empire, said Mr. Bonar Law yesterday. While it is the sincere hope of the British Government that America will co-operate in this task, Great Britain and her European Allies are fully alive to the necessity of preparing for the possibility of a contrary contingency.

The Army of the Black Sea, he added, is costing £24,000 daily. This does not include various substantial commitments in Mesopotamia, Palestine and Persia. The British Government has urged that the expenses of the Armistice period in the occupied parts of Turkey may be refunded to the occupying Powers by any Power which may eventually receive the mandate.

DOCTOR'S SACRIFICE.

DROWNED WHILE ON ERRAND OF MERCY.

News was received in London on Saturday by the relatives of Dr. Hearne, dispensary doctor of the Bealadangan district of Oughterard Union, County Galway, of his death by drowning on the Connemara coast on Thursday night.

The doctor received an urgent call to attend a patient living on one of the islands off Connemara, and although the weather was stormy set out on his mission in a small fisherman's boat, accompanied by two volunteer boatmen.

Not far from the mainland the frail craft capsized, and all three occupants were drowned.

COLLIERS TO PAY DAMAGES.

At the Pontypool Police Court fifteen colliery hauliers were summoned by their employers—the Tirpentwys Steam Coal Company Limited—for breach of contract of employment last August, when seven-days' stoppage occurred as the result of a groundless complaint against an official by a haulier.

The employers' representative in court said an agreement had been signed by both parties by which defendants would pay £30 towards the costs and £3 each damages. If defendants did not commit another breach during the next twelve months the damages would not be enforced.

The strike had cost the employers over £2,500, and had reduced the output by thousands of tons when the maximum production was urgently needed.

The men's representatives said hauliers desired to work amicably with the employers.

The magistrates sanctioned terms of agreement, and expressed gratification at settlement.

TANK CORPS IN RUSSIA.

In a written reply to a Parliamentary question Mr. Winston Churchill states that in the last attack on Petrograd, Yudenitch was assisted by a British Tank detachment of twenty officers and twenty-nine other ranks. These went out to Russia as volunteers to train the Russian North-West Army in the use of tanks. The detachment suffered no casualties.

MAC P. APOLOGISES TO MAC V.

In the House of Commons yesterday Mr. MacPherson, the Secretary for Ireland begged to withdraw his imputation on Mr. J. MacVeagh and apologised for any injury he had caused to his feelings. This was in reference to the recent incident when Mr. MacPherson made a remark on the advocates of Sinn Fein.

No date has been fixed for the meeting of the Assembly of the League of Nations nor is one likely to be arranged in the near future.

SUMMARY COURT.

SALUTARY FINE FOR GERMAN BARON.

In the Summary Court yesterday Baron von Plessen, (30), of 232 Reuterstrasse, Bonn, appeared on three charges, viz, circulating without an identity card; travelling without authority in a coach reserved for British officers; and refusing to obey the lawful order of a British Military Policeman.

On the 17th inst. at Cologne station the accused was observed at the entrance to the lavatory on the officers' coach of the Bonn train. He refused to leave when requested by an M.P., explaining that he was lame. As the train was now in motion the M.P. remained in the coach with the accused and at the next station took him into custody, bringing him back to Cologne, where he was subsequently released on bail in the sum of ten thousand marks.

Speaking in perfect English the accused read a long statement which occupied several sheets of foolscap.

Replying to the presiding officer, accused said he was educated at Cambridge and his mother was English.

The presiding officer accepted the Baron's explanation on the third charge. He thought he was justified in not jumping off the train when it was in motion. No doubt there was a great rush of passengers, but in these days of very few trains and very many passengers civilians must understand that the officers' coach is for officers only. The accused or anyone else who came into the British zone must have the regulation identity cards and ignorance was no excuse. The third charge would be dismissed and on the other two he would be fined 200 marks or ten days.

KOLTCHAK'S ORDER.

CHANGES IN RUSSIAN COMMANDS.

Admiral Koltchak has issued the following order.

"In the present period of our conflict with the Bolshevists I have decided to remain constantly in the midst of the army and repulse the Red traitors. Foreseeing the approaching fall of central Russia, which they ruined, the Bolshevists wish to ensure themselves a free outlet through Siberia. Herein they will not succeed. I require of everyone—general and soldier—that he faithfully and firmly fulfil his duty. Only a great and unanimous effort can give us the victory over Bolshevism and allow the people to take part in the organisation of a normal state.

"A state of siege has been proclaimed on the Omsk, Tomsk and trans-Baikal railways and all employees of the Ministry of War have been mobilized and placed at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief of the Eastern front.

"Similarly the Ministry of Supplies, with all employees, has been subordinated to the Commander-in-Chief.

"General Sakharoff, who commands the Third Moscow Army, is appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Eastern front. General Diedrichs is attached to Admiral Koltchak. General Cappel, Commander of the Volga Army, is appointed Commander of the Moscow Army. The Hetman of the Siberian Cossack group, General Ivanoffrinoff, is appointed assistant to the Commander-in-Chief of the Eastern front."

PUSSYFOOT'S MISHAP.

SIGHT PERMANENTLY INJURED.

Injuries to the eye sustained by Mr W. E. Johnson during the medical students' rag, have, unfortunately, proved more serious than was at first anticipated, and it is now reported that the sight of his right eye will be permanently impaired.

His medical attendant decided to consult another specialist, and they agreed that an operation was necessary.

This was performed on Monday but the doctors consider that, at the best, he will lose the sight of the affected eye, and, if the pain continues, it may have to be removed. It may be some time before it can be decided to dispense with a second operation.

BOGUS AMBASSADOR'S CONFESSION.

The so-called Russian Soviet Ambassador, Ludwig Mertens, who was arrested at New York on Saturday, gave evidence yesterday before the New York State Legislative Committee. He admitted that he plotted in Germany with Lenin and Trotsky for the overthrow of the Russian Imperial Government. He was deported from Russia and after serving three years imprisonment in Germany he directed propaganda from Berlin in 1905 and 1906 for the overthrow of the Czar.

EGYPTIAN DISORDERS.

Disorganised demonstrations occurred at Alexandria on the 14th November. In the principal streets there were some encounters with police but all was quiet by sunset. Over a hundred arrests were made on the 13th and about the same number on the 14th. A few Egyptian soldiers and police received slight injuries from stones.

No gold has been coined in this country since October 1917, says the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the gold coin estimated to be held by banks is slightly decreased.

OUT OF WORK PAY.

ONLY EX-SERVICE PERSONS TO PARTICIPATE.

In the House of Commons yesterday Mr. Bonar Law announced that the Government had decided not to continue unemployment donation to civilian men and women.

It was proposed, however, to put down a supplementary Estimate for the continuance of unemployment donation to ex-Service men and women in mobile corps whose period on donation had expired. The donation would be at the rate of 20s. per week to men; and 15s. per week to women, without supplementary allowances, and the period of donation would extend between November 24 and March 31, during which a maximum of nine weeks' donation might be drawn.

The number of persons drawing out-of-work donation on 7th November were approximately as follows:—Ex-service men 336,000, Civilian men 99,000, Civilian women 30,000.

SAFE FLYING.

ONLY TWO DEATHS IN 21,000 TRIPS.

A report signed by Major-General F.H. Sykes, Controller-General of Aviation, reviews the first six months, from May 1, of civil flying.

He gives approximate figures showing the extent of the work in civil air traffic carried out by certain firms, the mileage covered, and the number of accidents, which, General Sykes says, "must be regarded as remarkably small":—

Number of hours flown...	4,000
Number of flights	21,000
Number of passengers....	52,000
Approximate mileage	303,000
Total number of accidents	13
Number of fatal accidents	2

The great majority of flights were of short duration. The percentage of passengers injured to those carried was .019, or, for every 5,200 passengers carried, only one has been injured.

PADRE'S ARREST.

FORTHCOMING COURT-MARTIAL.

The court-martial on Father O'Donnell, of the Australian Corps, will be held at the Australian Headquarters, Horseferry-road, on Monday next. Father O'Donnell is the Australian who was arrested in Ireland on the charge of using disloyal language concerning the Sovereign. It will be a general court-martial, to be held by nine officers, and presided over by Brig.-General McGlinn.

SPEN VALLEY VACANCY.

THREE CORNERED CONTEST.

A three cornered contest in the Spen Valley constituency now appears to be inevitable, the Cleckheaton Liberal Association having decided to run a "free" Liberal Candidate.

On hearing of this the Conservatives decided to select a Coalition candidate, while the Labour Party has confirmed the candidature of Mr. Tom Meyers, a member of the Dewsbury Town Council.

SIX INJURED IN RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

Eight persons were injured in a railway accident on Monday when a train from Chester ran into a stop on a siding at the end of a platform. The carriage works offices were demolished and a luggage van in the centre of the train was telescoped. Three soldiers and three civilians, including a woman and a girl, were removed from the train with difficulty, having received more or less serious injuries to the legs.

BRITISH TROOPS FOR MEMEL.

British troops are to be sent to Memel, stated Mr. Cecil Harmsworth in the House of Commons yesterday. The object is not that they shall operate in the territory of the former Russian Empire, but to form part of the Allied Army of Occupation which is to take charge of Memel in accordance with article 99 of the Peace Treaty with Germany.

A DICKENS' WEDDING.

Miss Elaine Dickens, grand-daughter of the novelist, Charles Dickens, was married on Monday at Brompton Oratory to Major Alec Waley. There was a great gathering of Dickens' descendants at the ceremony, no fewer than eight of his great-grand-children taking part.

NEW DERBYSHIRE COALFIELD.

A message from Alfreton says that boring operations for coal in the Dukeries and further East have been carried out by two of the principal coal and iron companies in Derbyshire. The result is stated to have been the discovery of vast new fields of valuable coal.

Colonel E. R. English, D.S.O. late A.P.M. of the London District, has been appointed secretary of the new London Flying Club, Hendon.

ANOTHER HUNDRED.

It seems but yesterday that we reached our hundredth issue and to-day we are somewhat proud to announce that "The Cologne Post" has reached a hundred more rungs on the ladder of success.

Does everyone in the Army of Occupation realise the effort that the production day by day of a newspaper especially for the troops of Rhineland entails?

We do not wish to display undue consciousness of the merits of our achievements, but as ours is a first serious attempt at a daily journal produced by soldiers for soldiers and in a strange land working under difficulties unknown to journalism at home we claim to have filled a gap in Army life.

We have provided a medium for conveying the world's news to our troops on the Rhine earlier than they could hope to learn it otherwise; have devoted much space to recording all those sporting and athletic doings that are the delight of the soldier; given all ranks the opportunity to air legitimate grievances, most of which have been remedied through this publicity and besides have done our best to entertain and enliven all our readers.

All this has been done as a labour of love, but the reward expressed in general appreciation has been sufficient. We have had magnificent support from soldiers with literary and artistic tastes. We have seldom had to go outside the army for contributions. It has been a soldier's paper in the truest sense.

But to-day we are beginning to feel the effect of demobilization on our literary pages. It has to be confessed that the number of articles and items of interest sent in have diminished greatly. This was invevitable. Yet there must remain in the Army of Occupation much talent still untapped. "The Cologne Post" offers a channel wherein all may give expression to their ideas and relate their experiences.

What we wish all ranks to remember is that the future progress of their own paper depends on whole-hearted support not only in buying it each day, but in contributing to its columns.

With this help we can look forward to celebrating many further centuries of useful life.

WHEN I WAS A BOY!

By General Sir O'Moore Creagh, V.C., G.C.B., G.C.S.I.

I was born in the days of large families and a small income-tax. My home was in the wild and romantic country of the West of Ireland. There were seven boys, and all of us entered the Army or the Navy, but until that time we lived most of our waking hours in the open air, fishing, hunting, and shooting. I cannot remember the first time I got astride a horse, I was so very young — just out of long clothes — but there were not many days in my boyhood when I did not have a gallop.

DAYS AT SANDHURST.

When the time came for me to begin my training for the Army, for which I was destined from my birth, I went from my home to Sandhurst. This is more or less a public school, and the majority of our best soldiers have been educated there.

Many of these men have never been on field service, but they have nevertheless given their lives for their country just as bravely and unselfishly as those who have done so in battle.

They have gone out to serve their country in strange lands and lived lonely lives, generally in terrible climates, and have come to early graves, doing their duty on meagre pay and with no prospect of winning great reward or glory.

Looking back on those days, nothing impresses me more than the very high sense of honour that was jealously upheld by the youg cadets. The general tone was very high. Woe betide any boy who endeavoured to lower it. There was no need for the authorities to intervene, the boys dealt with him themselves.

The examination at Sandhurst was very easy. You had only to get about 1,200 marks out of 12,000 and you would do. All the same, the Army was supplied with a most excellent type of officer. I went to the depot of the Derbyshire Regiment, and was drafted out to India —never dreaming that I would one day become the Commander-in-Chief there.

SUCCESS AND LUCK.

I notice that some celebrities who have been contributing to a newspaper discussion about luck have been inclined to suggest that there is no such thing as luck, and that great success in life is almost entirely a matter of brains and hard work.

I cannot subscribe to that. It is true that I never had any social or other powerful influences to help me along, but I nevertheless attribute what success I have had almost entirely to a series of lucky chances, of which I took full advantage. But for them I should, like many able but unlucky men, never have got beyond the rank of colonel, and be spending the remainder of my days in obscurity.

It was luck that put me on the retired list, owing to age, in 1914, just before the war began. Had I been a year or so younger I might have had a successful career in this war; on the other hand, I might have lost any reputation I may have had.

TRICKING THE TRICKSTER.

But I should not like to give the young generation of to-day the impression that hard work does not pay. Here is a case in my own career where it did pay most emphatically. Out in the East I found that you could only know people by knowing their language, and I taught myself seven.

When General Officer Commanding and Political Resident in Aden, I had grave suspicions that my interpreter was playing a treacherous game. I did not know Arabic then, and I was aware that if he knew I was learning it he would find a way of circumventing me. The only thing to do was to learn it secretly, and this I managed to do.

Then the day came when an Arab Chief paid me a visit to discuss an important matter. I told the interpreter to tell him my view, and I heard him tell him the exact opposite to what I had said. I spoke to the Chief in Arabic, and that was the end of that interpreter, who had been up to this sort of villainy for over thirty years.

He took to flight and so escaped legal punishment, but the natives, who had heard how they had been tricked, soon discovered him, and one day he was found dead. If I had not worked hard and kept myself mentally and physically fit, I could not have availed myself of luck when it came.

CLASS DISTINCTIONS.

There is much talk to-day about abolishing class distinctions. When I was a boy there were none where I lived. In the country districts of the West of Ireland we were all one class—some, of course, being primus inter pares.

That I think has always been a characteristic of the Gaelic race—the Irish and the Scotch. That was why I got along so happily with the natives in India. We hunted wild animals together, and there was a mutual respect, which I am afraid is not now so manifest as it was in my youth. From John O'London's Weekly.

WHAT TO SEE IN RHINELAND.

THE ABBEY CHURCH OF STEINFELD.

Many of us who have been in Cologne for some months having explored the more immediate neighbourhood fairly thoroughly, now think it necessary to wander further afield, and the country the other side of Euskirchen on the line to Trèves can provide us with many interesting excursions.

A very pleasant afternoon may be spent in a visit to the Abbey Church of Steinfeld. Starting from Cologne at 11.53, we detrain at Urft which is reached at 2.32. On leaving the station we make our way through the narrow winding street of the village with its black and white timbered houses and begin to climb the hill beyond. Once clear of the village the road winds rounds to the left, but straight ahead is a footpath which brings us to the top much more speedily.

FIRST SIGHT OF THE ABBEY.

At the point where the footpath rejoins the road there stands a plain cross with the inscription "Per Hanc ad Caelum" and three hundred yards ahead we see the Abbey in front of us.

The Church itself, and the monastic buildings (now used as a reformatory) are surrounded by a high wall, which makes it very difficult to get a good view at close range, but it is seen to great advantage from the hills the other side of Urft.

The road bears to the left and against the wall of the Monastery, approached by a flight of steps is a stone altar surmounted by a "Calvary". A little further on we come to a gateway with the direction "Zur Abter Kirchi" — and a path leads to the south door.

IMPRESSIVE INTERIOR.

The church which apparently dates from the 11th century is large and is a cruciform structure with aisles and transepts. At the West end which is severely plain, are two round towers and over the junction of nave and transepts is a low hexagonal tower surmounted by a slate spire.

The interior is decidedly impressive, though the effect is somewhat spoiled, owing to the walls being covered with whitewash. The nave consists of seven bays adorned with life-sized figures of Saints; in the centre is the tomb of S. Hermann Joseph, with a recumbent figure of the Saint, holding a child in his arms a beautiful piece of work; the pulpit on which are carved the figures of the four evangelists, each with his appropriate emblem, and over which is suspended a richly carved canopy, is of an ornate character; the font is small and insignificant. The organ is a large and powerful instrument and is enclosed in a handsome case.

THE GRUESOME CRYPT.

Above the high Altar is a somewhat heavy reredos, containing a large picture and on each side of the sanctuary are cases with glass doors, full of relics; the stalls are carved and appear to be old. Under the South aisle is a curious little crypt to which entrance is obtained by lifting some loose planks. It is about 15 feet long and is surrounded by recesses which are full of skulls and bones. In the North transept a door leads to the Cloisters which have been very much restored though traces of old work can still be seen and through them we enter the Court of the monastic buildings most of which in their present state are not earlier than the 17th or 18th century.

"CIGARETTES, BITTE?"

Here we find ourselves in the midst of the busy life of the Reformatory. On all sides are squads of boys in charge of warders at work on their appointed tasks. Making our way to the entrance, a small doorkeeper (evidently a position of honour) unlocks the gate, at the same time reminding us that a cigarette would be a welcome perquisite. However cigarettes not being good for small boys we turn a deaf ear, but instead present him with a few small coins.

If time permits we can now walk to Sötenich to call and catch our train there or retrace our steps to Urft. It will probably have to be the latter. As we begin to descend to the valley we get a magnificent view of the country to the North, and close to us on our right is an extensive forest, the trees of which at present exhibit every conceivable shade of brown and red, and against which stand out the sombre fir trees which line the road below us.

It is getting dusk and the mist is beginning to rise in the valley as we reach the station. Our train leaves at 4.38, and we arrive in Cologne at 6 47.

GRAVE PILGRIMAGES.

Pilgrimages to graves of fallen soldiers in France and Belgium have been frequent during the autumn, and in some instances relatives have returned sadly disappointed because they found the hallowed spot overgrown with rank grass and other evidences of neglect. Those whose experience has been so unfortunate are apt to inveigh against the authorities, and to think that the scheme for preservation of graves is an inactive concern.

"The number of people who write expressing satisfaction with what they have seen greatly outnumbers those who complain," says Brig.-General Burden, of the Directorate of Graves Registration.

"It is an enormous task, and we are doing it as quickly as possible. Since the Armistice we have taken over 2,000 cemeteries, and have collected 130,000 scattered graves, identifying at the same time many bodies previously interred as 'unknown.' Our duty is to collect and register all graves and to hand them over to the Imperial Graves Commission, a civilian concern, for permanent maintenance. We hope to complete our work in March next. Meantime, every large cemetery has a caretaker, and smaller ones are visited by similar men, to keep the graves in a good condition.

FOUND HIS MASTER.

"It is the most wonderful dog story we have ever investigated," said an official of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals the other day, concerning the exploits of an Irish terrier just returned from France, and then in quarantine in their kennels at Hackbridge. "Prince," the dog in question, was left in Ireland by his master, James Brown, when he went to France with the 1st North Staffords in September 1914. He disappeared from London, and when Mrs. Brown wrote to inform her husband of the loss he replied that the dog had come to him in France, near Armentieres. The dog has been wounded and had shell shock. He has his service chevrons on his collar and there is some talk of his being given a medal. "We have tried our utmost to ascertain how the dog made this journey," it was stated at the offices of the R.S.P.C.A. "We cannot arrive at any solution at all. The only likely theory advanced is that the animal accompanied some soldiers to a station, was smuggled across to France, made its way up the lines of communication and then out of the hundreds of thousands of soldiers in the section, happened to find its master. 'Prince' must have taken from 12 to 14 days to make the journey."

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX.

Our Readers' Varied Views.

EXCESSIVE CIGARETTE SMOKING.

Sir,—"Boys' Brigade" is evidently typical of many of the young soldiers in Rhineland. He speaks with self-sufficiency, objects to constructional criticism, and prefers to rely upon his own judgment rather than listen to the advice of a wiser and older man.

In spite of his claim to be regarded as a man, it stamps him in my opinion as a very hot-headed youngster whose spirit needs curbing.

Unfortunately the wearing of khaki does not transform a boy into a man; he has many hard lessons to learn before he can be said to have reached that status.

OLD TIMER.

Sir,—While admitting the evils of excessive cigarette smoking I am deadly opposed to any restrictions in the form of O.R.'s. on the subject.

All that is necessary is the strengthening of individual will and powers of self-control. There is no reason why every man should not realise when he has had enough, put his foot down, and deny himself the pleasure of further indulgence.

WILL POWER.

READING CARLYLE.

Sir,—I think every soldier of the Rhine Army would do well to devote half an hour daily to a perusal of the pages of Thomas Carlyle's "Past and Present," pages that are full of truth, of beauty, and wisdom. It is the very soul of a great and a wise man leading wayward humanity to a better land; to a greater and a happier England.

The following are a few gems picked at random from the book

"All work, even cotton-spinning, is noble, Work is alone noble." And again, "The English are a dumb people. They can do great acts but not describe them —their epic poem is written on the earth's surface."

On the earth's surface! very true indeed. We may say that where ever the sun shines, it shines over the head of an Englishman. The sun never sets over all the British Empire.

"For there is a perennial nobleness and even sacredness in work—were he ever so forgetful of his high calling there is always hope in a man that actually and earnestly works."

Consider these noble words, you of the Rhine Army; and you of the great army of workers in our seabound islands; digest them, write them in indelible letters on your soul. Work! Work! Work! and if God wills it, help to build a nobler, even a greater British Empire, and yours, Soldier of Liberty, and yours soldier of the Army of British workmen, will be the eternal reward.

R. M.

CIVILIANS IN OFFICERS' CLUBS.

Sir,—I have frequently wondered whether or not there are any restrictions on the admittance of civilians into the Officers' Clubs in Cologne.

This first occurred to me at the time of the cigarette famine when, with envious eyes, we "other ranks" used to watch civilians emerge from one or other of the clubs liberally supplied with smokes.

There can, of course, be no objection to ex-officers being members of the clubs, but from the general bearing of many of the habitués — which is far from military — one is driven to the conclusion that the wearing of civilian clothes is the only necessary qualification to gain an entry.

I frankly admit that pure jealousy — and nothing else — prompts me to write this letter. The jealousy is caused by the fact that while I have to stand in queues and suffer other discomforts to get my cigarettes, civilian arrivals in Rhineland, who had absolutely nothing to do with the army in the fighting days, appear to have all the advantages of a British officer as well as those of a civilian.

"NEVER DIE".

GERMANS AND ENGLISH DRAMA.

Sir,—With reference to "Playgoer's" letter which appeared in your columns some days ago, I would like to associate myself with the sentiments therein expressed. He does not say so bluntly, but I gather that he would like to see German civilians admitted regularly to the Deutsches Theatre.

When one considers the empty benches to be seen nightly at the Deutsches owing, presumably, to rapid demobilization, I can see no objection to following the example of the French at Wiesbaden, who are playing their old drama to audiences crowded with Germans.

So long as there is sufficient seating for those of the British Army of the Rhine who wish to attend the theatre I think the example of our Allies should be followed, especially as I have recently seen the list of plays which are to be produced in the near future and there are two, at least, of which the Germans are very fond, and which would be of true educational value to them from our point of view.

ANOTHER PLAYGOER.

SHOULD HE BE MUZZLED?

Sir,—I saw a horse the other day attached to a van with his front feet on the pavement. An officer went by, waved his arms to try and scare him back on the road, whereat the horse snapped at him and nearly got his shoulder.

A few days later I saw the same horse and van, the horse again on the pavement. A passing soldier again attempted to shove the animal on to the road. Again the horse snapped and this time got the soldier on the shoulder.

LOVE OF THE GAME.

In Defence of Football Club Directors.

BY "TYNESIDER".

How many are aware that directors of football clubs draw no fees? Those who are in ignorance of this fact are legion, and a vast majority of our "spoil-sports" also, are not in possession of this knowledge. Time and again when some football scandal (happily rare) occurs, one hears these detractors repeating parrot wise, "Another director been helping himself, I suppose."

I once tried to explain to one of these gentry that a director receives no remuneration for his office and that his dividend on the shares he held was limited to 5 per cent. He accepted my explanation, but finished up with stating "You can't tell me he is in that job for nothing."

What can one argue with followers of his way of thinking? Nothing will convince them that they are wrong and that directors are holding their positions for no monetary award.

Love of Sport.

Let me repeat, they hold their office for sheer love of the game. If they aspire to any reward it is that they are controlling the fortunes of a club. The excitement thus provided is their idea of what their office is worth.

Again, they may aspire to be popular and increase their prestige. To be a football director certainly assists this ambition. But what is there in that; all men have their weak points, and if to be popular a gentleman joins a directorate there is nothing to cavil at. After all, there is something to be proud of when walking out and overhearing "There's so-and-so, he's director of Something United," or whatever the team may be.

Many a director instead of being, as our cranks will argue, in pocket through holding such a position, is out of pocket. Football's history has many recorded instances of members of directorates coming to the assistance of their club and in common slang "Getting their hands down."

The Price of Over Zeal.

The critic has always some scandal to rake up, which he thinks will strengthen his case, but how often is it in the case of many offenders, purely one of misplaced enthusiasm and anxiety to see their club head the league or aspire to honours. No more glaring example of this is needed than the recent Leeds City sensation. Who can say this board of directors were in any way "out" for personal profit or gain?

When scandals of "squared" matches have come to light (and let the critic work out the percentage if he will) has it occurred that directors have been concerned? If so, let the detractors of our great pastime come forward and prove them.

Hands off the directors, give them all the honour due to them for their splendid work in connection with the interests of football.

Again, when a club is leading in cup or league let us not forget the men behind the scenes, whose business it is to control the fortunes of the team and who are there purely for the "love of the game."

"FEATHERS" FIGHT.

Mike Honeyman too Good for Fred Jones.

In a substitute match at the National Sporting Club, Mike Honeyman, of Canning Town, defeated Fred Jones, of Rushden, in the principal event of the evening.

Honeyman, a strong favourite at the start, boxed at a great pace, and kept leaping in with left leads to the face, and though these did not always prevent Jones from getting in close, Honeyman never allowed him to stay there long enough to do any damage. In the fourth round Honeyman landed a left hook which cut his man's eye rather severely, though the damage did not deter Jones from fighting back hard either in this or the next round.

Bar a knock-out it was plain to see that Honeyman must receive the decision, for in speed and cleverness he was far ahead of his opponent.

Jones remained as strong as ever, and was fighting his uphill battle gamely and determinedly, waiting and watching for the chance of the one big punch which should turn the tide. Honeyman was so quick and so elusive, however, that the one big punch was never landed, and Jones was beaten on points.

SURPRISING DEFEAT.

Bermondsey Billy Wells, the well-known welter-weight, who is matched to box Johnny Basham at the National Sporting Club for the welter-weight championship and a new Lonsdale belt, was defeated at The Ring on points by Kid Doyle, of Newcastle. That the defeat created surprise is not exaggerating the case, but it must be stated that the Londoner was giving away half a stone or more.

LIMERICK RACES.

The Limerick Meeting, which could not be held last week, owing to the frost has, with the sanction of the Stewards of the Turf Club and Irish National Hunt, been postponed to Nov. 26 and 27.

ROWING AT TWICKENHAM.

A couple of rowing matches were decided at Twickenham at the week-end. In the pair-oared race, from the Gravel Pit at Twickenham to Eel Pie Island, Gardner (late Army Veterinary Corps) and Russell (late Royal Engineers) beat ex-R-S-M Robinson and N. Robinson (late Royal Marines by 2 lengths after a good race to the bottom of Radner Island. A sculling match was won by Weston.

GWILT'S STEEPLECHASE JOCKEY

Gwilt, the Lambourn trainer, is to have a big stable of jumpers this winter, and F. Dainty is to be his jockey. The latter makes his first appearance on Shining More at Cardiff on Friday.

WARWICK RACING.

Another Favourite wins Principal Event on the Card.

SECOND DAY OF MEETING.

The weather at Warwick on Tuesday showed a decided improvement and a fair attendance was present to witness the second day's sport Results:

Bradby Plate:—1, Danegelt (11—4); 2, Golly Eyes (2—1), 3, Bapaume (6—5). Four ran.

Southam Plate:—1, Stockinette (5—1); 2, Rigolo (8—1); 3, Somerset (2—1). Nine ran.

Stratford Handicap:—1, Zea 4—1); 2, Little Joey (8—1); 3, Ring o' Roses (100—7). Fourteen ran.

Kenilworth Handicap:—1, Aris (2—1 on); 2, Jupiter (100—8); 3, Black Lamp (3—1). Six ran.

Daventry Plate:—1, Aldersey (5—4 on); 2, Little Boy (3—1); 3, Dunkirk (3—1). Four ran.

Banbury Handicap:—1, Polly Hopkins (20—1); Missouri (4—1); 3, Pourboire (7—2). Eight ran.

SATURDAY'S PROBLEM.

Chances of Planet and Alasnam at Manchester.

The "Manchester November", the last great handicap of the season, to be run on Saturday provides a pretty problem. The twenty-two acceptances leave a smaller field than was anticipated earlier on, but those remaining should make the event an attractive one.

Narrow Derby Victory.

Had Alasnam won the Derby Cup in more convincing style his chances of a "double" would have been regarded as strong, but bearing in mind the fact that he only scraped home by a head, he must not now be looked upon as anything approaching a certainty. With 7st. 11 lbs. to carry, 15 lbs. more than his Derby Cup burden he meets other candidates on considerably worse terms. There is one point in his favour: he will have the assistance of a stronger jockey. However, Weston must be given credit for riding a good race.

Planet's Better Terms.

Leaving aside the chances of the other horses engaged there is justification for doubting Sir A. Bailey's colt's ability to again get the better of Planet on six lbs worse terms. The distance of Saturday's race—one mile and a half—will be better suited to the Epsom horse; in fact at that distance he would probably have won at Derby.

Obviously, then, Planet's chance is a great one, and the remembrance of his easy victory in the corresponding event two season's ago serves but to strengthen faith in his ability to repeat that triumph.

Question of Jockeyship.

The son of St. Frusquin was, of course, a three-year-old on the earlier occasion, and although he may not be relatively so good now as he was then, it must be remembered that he carried 8st 1lb—a very substantial burden for one of his age. The essence of the question as between Alasnam and Planet is whether stronger jockeyship can overcome the former's slight disadvantage at the revised weights. No experienced racegoer needs to be reminded of the several well-known instances of horses showing great improvement with a rise in the scale of weight, and the supporters of Alasnam, of course, are fully entitled to take to themselves all the encouragement they can derive from the reflection.

FIRST SPORTSMEN'S BN.

Appropriate Date for Reunion Dinner.

The first anniversary and reunion dinner of the 1st Sportsmen's Battalion (23rd Royal Fusiliers) was held in London on the very day when four years ago the regiment sailed for France. No more fitting date could have been chosen for the function.

Viscount Maitland, the orginal commanding officer, presided over an enthusiastic gathering, and was supported by Lieut.-Colonel H. A. Vernon, D.S.O. (who took over in France from Lord Maitland), Lieut.-Colonel E. A. Winter, D.S.O., M.C., Major N. A. Lewis, D.S.O., Capt. A. J. Barr, Lieut. E. G. Hayes, R.Q.M.S. P. C. Essex and Sgt. A. E. Clark.

Lord Maitland proposed "Absent Comrades," which he followed with "The 23rd Royal Fusiliers," recalling the fine conduct of the battalion as part of the division which took Delville Wood. He announced that a detachment from the battalion serving with the Army of Occupation in Germany was present that evening. He regarded it as a feather in the cap of the regiment that they should have been retained for such duty.

Colonel Vernon and S.M. Harrison responded, and Colonel Winter stated that 219 officers and 4,768 other ranks had served on the effective strength of the regiment, 500 of the battalion receiving commissions. The total battle casualties were 128 officers and 3,102 other ranks; and of honours they had won 215 medals, including 63 Military Crosses and 130 Military Medals. Their casualties through sickness only amounted to 11 other ranks. (Applause.)

First-named has the choice of ground.

ANOTHER Y.S. CHAMPION.

Further Criticism of Method of Organisation.

The "What has happened" article in your Tuesday's issue has rather interested me, and I should like to make a reply on behalf of the young soldier, writes "Semper Fidelis."

He continues:—I am quite at a loss to understand why "Old Brigade" should advertise his inability to arouse any sporting spirit or enthusiasm in his unit.

It is essentially the Sports Officer's work to do this, and, if any one Battalion carries off a large percentage of prizes at any Brigade or Divisional athletic meeting its success can generally be placed to the credit of the Sports Officer.

Men of Equal Experience.

The majority of young soldiers are of the same class, and of the same experience as regards sports, and if they have never had a hockey stick in their hands, or never played it is not because they will not, but because they have never had the chance. You cannot expect a unit which does not give the men the opportunities needed to improve their particular branch of sport, to reach the same standard as a unit which encourages and organizes their sports.

The men cannot organize Platoon and Company Competitions. That is the work of the Sports Officer assisted by the Company Officer. They never get the chance of handling a Rugger ball for the simple reason that it is probably locked up in the Battalion Sports' Stores, and under the care of the Sports Officer who evidently does not create the opportunity to let the men play the game.

Battalion Boom.

Speaking of my own unit, I have never seen so much sport within the Battalion throughout the whole war. At present we are running a Company "Footer" Competition, and, if "Old Brigade" cannot get that Company rivalry and sporting spirit in his own unit, it is rather rash to make the statement that all troops out here are in the same plight.

Once units are settled down I think the sporting spirit and the amount of enthusiasm will be greater than before, as it is only the best units which are remaining—at least, as far as we are concerned.

To encourage is the main thing with young soldiers, and advertising their defects will not improve matters.

Among our competitors are readers of "The Cologne Post" in England as well as civilians in Rhineland. All are eligible and the more the merrier.

PROMISING YOUNGSTERS

The Pick of the Season's Two-year-olds.

TETRATEMA UNBEATEN.

We gave yesterday a summary of the performances of three-year-olds this season and below we publish a resumé of the work of the best two-year-olds.

No really true opinion can be formed as to the merits of the two-year-olds as a whole until they have tried conclusions with the older horses at a later period of their Turf careers. says "The Field." Judging them on their present form, they are probably very good, and more especially the two unbeaten colts Tetratema and Prince Galahad. Last year at the end of the season no two-year-old colt or filly stood out from the rank and file as Tetratema and Prince Galahad do, and in the result the three-year-olds of the season which is now drawing to a close have been found to be of no great merit.

When, however, certain two-year-olds do all that is asked of them and win their races in fine style, they usually do the same sort of thing in the following season. Hundreds of instances of this kind could be given.

A Rare Performance.

It is seldom that any youngster creates such an impression as Tetratema has done in the last four months; indeed, we have to go back to his sire, The Tetrarch, to find a parallel case. Tetratema began in July, when he won the valuable Breeders' Stakes at Sandown; he next won the Molecombe Stakes at Goodwood, the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster, the Imperial Produce Stakes at Kempton, and lastly the Middle Park Plate at Newmarket. All his races he won with great ease, though he never came so far away from his field as The Tetrarch did when winning the Coventry Stakes at Ascot. On the other hand The Tetrarch was, in our opinion, more pressed to beat Stornoway in the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster than Tetratema has been in any of his races, but it is understood that Mr. Persse, who trained the sire and now trains the son, thinks that the former was the more brilliant horse.

Disquieting Rumour.

Unfortunately, there is at the moment a rumour to the effect that all is not well with the star two-year-old performer of the season, and on this point it can only be said that his failure to meet his three-year-old engagements would be a Turf calamity of the first magnitude.

Prince Galahad has only run twice, but there was great merit in both his victories, for he was almost "left" at Ascot, and yet won quite easily, while at Newmarket last month he was hardly supposed to have fully recovered from the effects of a stoppage of work, so, as the market suggested, was not seriously fancied to beat Orpheus. Given a clean bill of health Prince Galahad should have a brilliant future.

Of the two-year-old fillies Bright Folly and Blue Dun are probably the best. The first named is unbeaten, and a big winner in good company, while Blue Dun is a fine performer, about whom a very high opinion has been formed in Ireland. Of the value of the Irish two-year-old form we are ignorant, but on the face of it Blue Dun is head and shoulders above all she has met.

A Sterling Performer.

Another sterling performer is Orpheus, in spite of the fact that he has been beaten by Tetratema and Prince Galahad; and a fine performer in many of his races is Sarchedon, who, in dead heating with Gleneskaki when giving 12lb., did a very big thing. The staying Lacrosse and the frequent Nursery winner Fancy Man come into the picture also, but the last named is probably a representative of good handicap, rather than of classic, form.

On the whole the prospects suggest that the classic races of next year will be perhaps more attractive than usual, and that the winners should be of that high class which does so much towards maintaining the high standard of the English Turf.

FOOTBALL RESULTS.

Rugby.

Oxford 8 points, Major Stanleys XV 12; Edinburgh 13, Academicals 7.

Association.

Chelsea 3, Oxford 3; Brentford 5, Cambridge 4; Stoke 2, Bristol City 0.

SPORT IN BRIEF.

Cambridge Fours.

Cambridge University clinker fours were won on Saturday by First Trinity.

Moody Beats Carter.

At the Ring. Kid Carter retired in the ninth round of his contest with Frank Moody.

Browning's Progress.

Browning, the Chelsea forward, who was hurt early in the season, is making a steady recovery, but he will play no more football before Christmas. He is going north for a holiday.

Hockey Results.

Cambridge University 12, Southgate 0; Oxford University 2, Hampstead 0; Barnes 6, Merton 3; Beckenham 5, Bromley 5; Richmond 2, Teddington 1; Chelmsford 3, Westcliff 1; Maidenhead 1, Staines 1; Ilford 7, Goodmayes 0.

Players Free Transfers.

At the meeting of the Management Committee of the Southern League it was decided to grant free transfers to all players of clubs who have seceded from the Southern League, and this will embrace the players of Coventry City, Stalybridge Celtic, Stoke, West Ham, Aberdare, Croydon Common, Cwm Albion, Leyton, Walsall, and Treherris.

Parson as Football Director.

The Rev. John William Marsh, vicar of St. Mary, Nelson, Lancashire, formerly well known as a Football League referee, has consented to sit on the board of directors of the Nelson Football Club. The rev. gentleman has for some considerable time taken a deep interest in Lancashire football, and had much to do with Nelson obtaining admission to the Central Football League.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

Esmond Concert Party.

The Esmond Concert Party (by kind permission of the Y.M.C.A.) gave a second successful concert at the B.E.L.C. on Tuesday night by special request. This extraordinarily gay little party appeared with new songs and new frocks, but the same gaiety and verve, and were loudly applauded by a most enthusiastic audience.

Question in Black and White.

It will be interesting to see if the B.E.L.C. can ever have again a scene of beauty such as they had at the Arabian Nights' Ball. I am told that the scheme of decoration for the Black and White Ball next Thursday is decidedly chic, however. Tickets direct from the Controller of Entertainments is an excellent idea.

A POPULAR COMEDIAN.

An impression of Frank Hook, the well-known character comedian who, with the "Jesters," has entertained thousands of troops in Rhineland.

COLOGNE OPERA HOUSE.

DAY	OPERA	COMPOSER	START	END
Thursday	No British Bookings.
Fri.	Armourer of Worms	Lortzing	7	9.45
Sat.	Carmen	Bizet	7	10.30
Sun.	Flying Dutchman	Wagner	7.30	10.30

Babes in the Wood.

I have been asked to say that the B.E.L.C. wishes to get up a Christmas Pantomime—"Babes in the Wood" They will be very glad of men to play the following parts. Demon King, base or baritone; Wicked Uncle and Village idiot, comedian Nancy and Tony, the Babes, soubrette and light comedian; Lumina, Fairy Queen and chorus, solo dances, etc.

Another Disch Concert.

On Thursday at 8 p.m. Karin Dayas is to give a modern piano recital at the "Rococo-Saal" of the Hote Disch. Karin Dayas is one of the greatest modern pianists and had big successes recently at Berlin and Dresden. The programme contains new compositions by Cyril Scott, Claude Debussy, Maurice Ravel, Alban Berg and Erwin Schulhoff Tickets may be had at the entrance.

Badminton.

With a view to providing interesting indoor sport for the many men who have spare time during the day a Badminton club is being formed at the Cologne Y.M.C.A. Meantime, one court has been marked out in the Great Hall where the light is exceptionally good and play will take place each day from 10 a.m. to 4.30 p.m. Members will be supplied with racquets, shuttles and shoes. Tournaments and matches will be arranged, and as the season goes on, it is hoped that other clubs will issue challenges to the Centre thus infusing the right sporting, competitive feeling into a game that is rapidly growing in popularity.

BILLIARDS.

Reece leads in second Round of "Victory" Tourney.

In the second heat of the Burroughes and Watts "Victory" tournament, Reece (rec. 1,500) is forging ahead of Stevenson (rec. 500), having increased, to a substantial degree, his original lead during the two days the match has been in progress. Tuesday's closing scores were:—

Reece (in play) ... ... 3,917.
Stevenson ... ... 2,350.

In a match of 8,000 up, on level terms, at Thurston's, a close game is in progress between Smith and Falkiner. Closing scores:—

Smith (in play) ... ... 2,636.
Falkiner ... ... 2,350.

PUSSYFOOT IS A SPORT.

A deputation of students representing all the colleges connected with the University of London called at the offices of "Pussyfoot" Johnson to express regret for the injuries he sustained in the recent rag. They earnestly expressed the hope that he would soon be well again at the same time assuring Dr. Henry, one of Mr. Johnson's associates, who received them, that they regard "Pussyfoot" as a "good sport."

Lord Birkenhead, speaking in London, while making every allowance for the high spirits of youth, profoundly regretted that a citizen of the United States should have been subjected to "such an outrage."

Pussyfoot regards the whole affair as a joke.

LILLE "SWEEP" DRAW.

Huge Manchester Nov. Handicap Prizes.

The draw for the Victory Sweepstake on the Manchester Handicap took place on Tuesday.

Over £50,000 was subscribed and the sum will be allocated as follows:—

First prize £15,540
Second prize ..... £ 7,750
Third prize ..... £ 3,885

For each of the remaining sixty-three horses drawn, the ticket-holders will receive £275.

Alasnam the favourite was drawn by Sgt. Lindbatt.

LEICESTER v. THE ARMY.

The following players will represent the Army against Leicester, at Leicester, on Saturday next:—

Capt. W. Shewon; Lieut. H C V Day, S Q-C-M A MacIntosh, Major R M Scobie, Lieut. Q E M A King; Drmr A Gumbley, Lieut. P E R Baker-Jones; Capt. A H MacIlwaine, Major P H Lawless, C-S-M. C W Jones, Capt. W E C Penney, Major W P N Roderick, Capt. Stone, Cpl. C Hyland, Capt. L H Kitton.

PHILIP MEAD'S BENEFIT.

The Hampshire County Cricket Committee have agreed to set aside the home match with Surrey next summer for the benefit of Philip Mead, one of the best all-round cricketers in the world. Mead's left-hand batting has charmed many thousands of people on all the county grounds, and he deserves to net a handsome sum. The Hampshire C.C. report shows a favourable balance of £1,295.

PRIVATE WINS 1,731 MARKS.

Result Of Our Football Skill Competition No. 8.

EIGHTEEN COUPONS DISQUALIFIED.

As forecasted yesterday, No. 8 Contest has been won outright by a single competitor. His name is:—

Pte. T. Thomson 7,220,
Intelligence Corps,
G.H.Q.,
Rhine Army.

On the winning coupon, he correctly forecasted nine matches. Many competitors gave seven correct results and four managed to forecast eight of the games successfully. The winner will receive 1,731 marks and by the time this is read, he will have received the cheque for this amount.

In this contest there were entered eighteen coupons unaccompanied by the necessary marks. One of these disqualified competitors was among the four who gave eight correct returns. It would have been very unfortunate for him had he given nine and thus lost a share of the amount subscribed.

MORAL:—READ THE RULES.

In the coupon in the next column, strike out the team you think will lose, or, if you predict a draw, leave both teams standing, add your name and address clearly, place the coupon in an enelope with one mark and send it along to this office. Any number of coupons may be sent at the rate of one mark each.

Coupons must be addressed:—

FOOTBALL CONTEST No. 9,
"Cologne Post",
A.P.O. S.40 Rhine Army.

List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.
2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.
3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for any reason, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.
4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.
5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into. Neither will interviews be granted.
6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.
7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, mislaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.
8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.
9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

FOOTBALL COMPETITION No. 9.

Date of matches, Saturday, Nov 22nd.
Closing date, Friday, Nov. 21st.

Arsenal	v. Notts County
Oldham	v. Manchester United
Preston	v. Liverpool
Sunderland	v. Newcastle
Coventry	v. Blackpool
Fulham	v. West Ham
Nottingham Forest	v. Tottenham
Bristol R.	v. Plymouth A.
Exeter C.	v. Northampton
Southampton	v. Brentford
Queens Park	v. Rangers
Airdrieonians	v. Dumbarton

I enter Football Competition No. 9 in accordance with the Rules and Conditions announced above, and agree to accept the published decision as final and legally binding.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Yet We are Out.

This, our, 200th number was produced under difficulties. Yesterday being a general rest day in Cologne the printers could only be induced to work a few hours towards evening.

For Xmas.

More and more wives are coming out to Rhineland. A good many seem to want to experience what a Christmas in Germany is like.

New Exchange Rates.

Starting from the 16th of this month, 10 marks equal 1s. 4d. One mark equals 25 centimes (French) or 23 centimes (Belgian). Five francs (French) equal 2s. 8d. or Belgian 2s. 11d.

Accident Epidemic.

There seems to be an epidemic of accidents in Rhineland just now. From Bonn arrives the news of a German having slipped between the footboard of a moving train and the platform, with the result that both legs were completely severed. Only the previous day in Cologne, a motor car, travelling at high speed skidded and crashed into a tram car, killing two occupants.

A Novel Fire Screen.

One of my friends who has amassed over 9,000 marks in the expectation of a sudden rise, now informs me that if there is no increase in value by the time he gets demobbed, he intends converting the notes into a fire screen as a souvenir.

Can You?

Very often you see a girl in a cafe or restaurant and can't exactly fix her nationality. A friend of mine says the infallible test is her laugh, and he can tell English, French and Germans by that, even if he can't see the individual.

Hard To Get.

I hunted half over Cologne the other day for such a simple thing as a packet of pipe cleaners. No tobacconists keep them. At last I found some at a little shop in a bye-street that sold pipes and smoking sundries.

No French Papers.

For five days now, none of the regular French newspapers have reached Cologne. There is a strike of printers in Paris that is stopping production.

To You.

The Editor is making a special appeal to-day for more help from the Rhine Army in the way of literary contributions. This is addressed to you as well as to others.

Optical Illusion.

A thick mist completely obscured the tops of the cathedral steeples yesterday morning. The effect was rather weird, and a visitor, seeing the wonderful building for the first time would have supposed that the spires were cut off square, about half way up.

"Très Chic."

The French telephone girl in Cologne wears a very pretty armlet of the tricolour surmounted by a striking gilt badge symbolical of electricity.

Two Processions.

Two interesting processions might be noticed in Marzellen Strasse on Wednesday morning. On one pavement was the surpliced choir returning from High Mass at the Cathedral, and on the opposite a party of thirty Russian soldiers, marching two abreast, with a feld-webel at their head.

Useful Lantern Lecture.

The lecture on the manufacture of Portland cement, to be given at 6 o'clock tonight at the Army General College, Hansa Ring should attract many. It will be delivered by Mr. G. A. Middleton, who is a past vice-president of the Society of Architects and will be illustrated by some excellent lantern slides. It is free and open to all ranks.

Nothing Fresh.

I have just read an article in the "Yorkshire Weekly Post" on "Cologne To-day," by A. L. Stead, but it contains no information that everyone in Rhineland isn't quite familiar with.

A Quiet Resort.

I dropped across a splendidly equipped and really quiet cafe last night. Judging by the number of British couples present its calm air was appreciated. This is the more remarkable as it is in a busy street like Breite Strasse.

Seeing Stars.

"A keen student of astronomy evidently!" said my companion. His remark applied to a civilian possessing, in the words of the famous song, "two lovely black eyes." I agreed that he must have seen stars.

Glad to be Back.

A man back from leave confessed to me yesterday morning that he was glad to be back on the Rhine. You see he comes from a part of the country where trade disputes are rife.

Making Provision.

"The wife's coming out tomorrow" was a chance remark I heard yesterday and judging by the number of marks handed over the counter to the Command Cashier in exchange for ration coupons it looked as if the better half was bringing the family and a retinue of servants.

A Certificate Necessary.

Much inconvenience will be saved if purchasers of these coupons arm themselves with an authority signed by the Commandant or an O.C. Unit. I mention this because an impression has got round that no such certificate is now necessary.

A MISSING STAR.

VICAR: Owing to the Committee having failed to entice ex-Private Perkins from "The Dog and Gun" you may stwike off your pwogwammes, songs ..... "Mdlle from Armentieres" and "Appwe la guerre fini."

Conductor's Tips.

It is common to see car conductors receive tips of anything up to 25 pfennig. Strange enough we never hear of tipping tram officials at home, though one is lavish enough to railway servants.

Familiarity Breeds—.

Have you noticed how any announcement regarding the low value of the mark fails to arouse interest now? To have a month ago announced in any office that 156 marks were being paid for a pound would have meant the detailing of the junior member of the staff to join the queue at one of our banking concerns.

What Now?

Instead, what does one find nowadays? Perhaps half a dozen officers cashing cheques. "The worst of this cheap money is that we spend such a lot," was a subaltern's remark. I seem to have read something like this in the Editor's Letter Box.

A Curio.

I came across a Duren twenty-five pfennig coin yesterday, 1919 issue. It depicts on one side, a coal miner with pick and lamp, and bears the legend, "I dig for coal, and save my Fatherland."

Touchy.

Some of our Scottish correspondents are very fussy over the use of the word "English". But there are cases where "British" would be inappropriate. One can't refer to the "British" language, for instance.

RHINELANDER.

ECONOMIC NOTES ON FINANCE AND TRADE.

III. THE BANK OF ENGLAND — THE ORIGIN.

We saw in the last article how a banker issued notes by a system of mutual indebtedness. The time of course arrived when for some reason or other the belief or trust on which those notes relied became impaired. A vague feeling spread about that a certain bank could not pay up on its notes. This vague feeling is what we know as an "alarm." The business of the banker then is to hand out coin as hard as he can. If he hesitates people say that he is afraid he is going to smash and they want their money out before he does so. This leads to everyone rushing at the bank and demanding money for their notes and is what is known as a "panic."

The Bank cannot pay this money until in its turn it recovers the money lent to traders. These are unable to pay and so the bank has to suspend payment. This happened so much in the early part of the last century that financiers and bankers began to look around for some safeguard. They soon realised that two things were necessary to preserve the credit of our banking system. 1, Safety and 2, Elasticity. The Safety it was thought could be provided by a proportionate backing of gold—and an Act was introduced and is known as the Bank Charter Act of 1844. Before discussing this Act it will be well to see what was the origin of the Bank.

Macaulay has written about this and, if his book can be obtained, it should certainly be read. In origin the Bank was a financing company run by the Whig party and was absolutely political.

The Cabal Government in the reign of Charles II brought English finance very low. It had been the custom for the goldsmiths, who were the earliest bankers, to deposit their surplus gold in the Exchequer. Charles II showed them that this trust was misplaced. He shut up the Exchequer and ruined "The City." The Stuart Government never recovered from this enough to raise money afterwards. Their "credit" was gone—the belief in ability to pay, on which credit rests, had vanished.

In 1694 William III, although not a Stuart, still found it difficult to raise money for the French War. Accordingly this Whig financing company was formed.

In those days 8% was a very low rate of interest and in order to attract people to subscribe a certificate of incorporation was promised under the name of The Governor and Company of the Bank of England. In this way £1,200,000 was obtained. If we had not been able to raise that sum we should have been beaten by France and have had to take back James II. In return for this and other benefits the State granted three most important privileges.

1. Bank of England to have monoply in possession of Government balances.

2. It was to have a monoply of limited liability which was exclusive until the introduction of Limited Liability into Statute Law a few years ago.

No director of the Bank of England is a banker, purely and simply; they are all merchants of good standing who lend a little of their time to the Bank. No careful trader would have risked his whole fortune to become a director of the Bank and so this privilege has been a very real help in obtaining the services of reputable merchants. And:—

3. The Bank is the only Joint Stock Company allowed to issue Notes in England. Private bankers may do so in the country, but not in London.

It was on the possession of these three privileges that the Bank of England reached its present day position of holding the surplus balances not only of the Government but of all the other banks of the Kingdom.

Thus the reserve of the Bank is really the only reserve we have in our system which is thus known as a one-reserve banking system.

FROM EVERYWHERE.

AROUND AND ABOUT.

BARRED OUT.

He would have been a good candidate for the police; he certainly had good understandings. But, instead, he went to a teacher of the newest styles of jazzing, and tried to arrange for some lessons.

"Let's have a trial," said the teacher doubtfully. "I'm too busy to take on any unlikely pupils."

For an agonising quarter of an hour he tried his best to teach the applicant how to do it.

"Well, you would be a good dancer but for two things," said he, at the end of the specimen lesson.

"What are they?" asked the young man eagerly.

"Your feet," replied the teacher coldly.

NICKEL COINS COMING.

Stories are told of the straits in which Parisians have found themselves owing to the shortage of small change. If matters are not corrected very soon, Great Britain will run the risk of having to receive sections of books of postage stamps or a batch of treasury tokens as change in shops or restaurants. If the Government does not take in hand soon the question of the continual rise in the price of silver, there will certainly be a shortage of our subsidiary metallic coinage. One way is to call in all the present silver coinage, and issue a new coinage of silver alloyed with some other non-ferrous metal such as zinc or nickel. Sheffield manufacturers have made good use of their knowledge of these alloys in the manufacture of spoons and forks, and we may yet live to see the day when we shall have to accept a shilling or a half-crown of "Britannia metal."

PRINCELY MINNOWS.

Princes Albert and Henry are making themselves quite at home at Cambridge and are alreading taking part in the various societies and functions of the Varsity town. Speaking at the Tercentenary Dinner of the Perse Grammar School, Prince Albert probably gave a clue to the true state of their feelings when he said, "I could have wished that this dinner had taken place somewhat earlier in my academic career because I confess that my brother and I feel at present like two simple minnows amongst a number of learned Tritons in the sea of Knowledge.

HEARL 'AIG.

It is a very nice thing to be the recipient of countless honours, and various other testimonials from a grateful country, but Field-Marshal Earl Haig is beginning to feel a bit weary. At one place in the Midlands he had to watch a weary march past of scratch assembled local troops, veterans, volunteers, and all. He was then taken to a cold and windy open space where a choir of school children sang discordant hymns of praise and patriotism. Finally he had to listen to a twenty-minute speech in praise of "Hearl 'Aig." He was then asked to reply, and his speech lasted about one short minute. As he said, "Councillor X. has said everything that there is to be said." What we want is a society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Public Characters.

GERMAN FISHERS.

Germany, it is reported, is making great preparations for a monster fishing expedition into the North Sea. What her position is to be cannot yet be known. Whether she takes her old pre-war standing among the fishing nations of Western Europe depends largely on the trawlermen of these countries. Germany's position before 1914 was interesting. She had 300 fine trawlers distributed between the ports of Geestemunde, Altona, Bremerhaven, Cuxhaven, Wilhelmshaven, Emden, Hamburg, and Elbe. The principal concern was the Geestemunder Herings und Hochseefischerei Gesellschaft of Geestemunde. Then there were the "Nordsee" boats of Altona and the Senator line of Cuxhaven, all large companies. Their boats were well known in British waters, being conspicuous by their black and yellow colourings.

SMALL CHANGE.

A shortage of small change was one of the permanent troubles of our forefathers, for it was not until the reign of Charles II. that we had any copper coinage at all. The silver penny was our lowest coin, at a time when the purchasing power of the penny was no small thing. Edward I. minted silver halfpennies and farthings, but the most his predecessors had done was to coin pennies with a deep cross indented upon them, so that they could be broken into two or four pieces for smaller payments.

AN AIR TRAGEDY.

Everything was ready.

A short run, and she rose in the air majestically, ducking, rolling, and diving in the strong wind. Up, up, and still further up she rose, till she was almost out of sight, and a thrill ran through the spectators.

Suddenly an exceptionally strong gust of wind struck her and down she came —down, down, and still down, till—crash! — she struck the earth with a dull, heavy thud.

And little Willie ran in to ask mother for a penny to buy a new kite.

PEACE TREATY IN DANGER.

SOUTH AFRICA APPEALS BUT AMERICA CONTINUES TO MAKE RESERVATIONS.

FUTURE OF THE TERRITORIAL FORCE.

PEACE TREATY.

SOUTH AFRICA APPEALS TO AMERICA.

In the course of a stirring appeal for ratification of the Covenant of the League of Nations, General Smuts, speaking at Johannesburg, said: "I am told that the League is in danger in the American Senate. I can scarcely believe it, but if it is so may I send a message from South Africa to America. My people are a small people and my voice on their behalf weak, but the greatest leaders in America have before now listened to me.

"I appeal to America not to blast the hopes of the world. When human freedom was in danger and appealing hands were stretched out to America she rose to the height of her great opportunity. She shamed all those cynics who believed that she was merely bent on moneymaking, and rushed wholeheartedly to the rescue of those great human ideals for which all the Allies were fighting and her great act of unselfishness and moral idealism at the most critical stage of the war saved the world for democracy.

To-day the world is no less in danger. The machinery of the League is wanted to save civilisation; it alone can save tottering Europe. No nation has put more faith or more effort into the construction of the League than America and other nations have approved it. Will its ranks now lag behind? I cannot believe it! It is in the power of America to lift the heavy weight of despair which is to-day bearing down Christendom. We all pray her to do so. We pray her to sign the great Covenant and complete the work for humanity which she so unselfishly set out in the war to do."

LATEST RESERVATION BY U.S. SENATE.

A Washington telegram says that the Senate has adopted the following reservation to the Peace Treaty. The United States assumes no obligations to be bound by an election, decision, report or finding of a Council or Assembly wherein any member (of the League) and its self-governing dominions, colonies or parts of Empire in the aggregate have cast more than one vote. It assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report or finding of a Council or Assembly affecting any dispute between the United States and any other member of the League if such member or selfgoverning Dominion, Colony or part of an Empire united with it politically has voted thereon.

BRAVE MAN'S LAPSE.

Hubert Bouverie Haydon, a post office clerk, 29, pleaded Guiltyat the Old Bailey yesterday to forging documents and obtaining two sums of £22 10s. and £23 soldiers' gratuities.

Haydon joined the Army in September, 1914, got shell-shock in France, and was wounded at Cambrai last year. On his behalf Mr. J. D. Cassels said he rescued men by pulling them out of a waterlogged hole with his rifle while under heavy machine-gun fire. There was no doubt that he would have received some decoration for this, but his officer was killed and the men he rescued became casualties the same night. Haydon himself became a casualty two days later.

The Recorder postponed sentence until next Session.

PARIS LEAVE CLUB CLOSING.

In reply to a telegram of greetings from the British Army and Navy Leave Club in Paris, which is closing on November 30, the King has sent the following message:

The King and Queen, patrons of the British Army and Navy Leave Club, have received with much pleasure and satisfaction the loyal message contained in your telegram. Their Majesties are glad to think that the high hopes entertained of the club have been so successfully fulfilled.

FISHERMEN KILLED BY MINE.

Several fishermen observed a mine floating in the sea off Cape Clear at some distance from the mainland. They put off in a small boat to secure it, but the mine exploded while it was being handled, killing four of the men and wounding one.

EXPENSIVE BATTLESHIP.

Mr. Walter Long, First Lord of the Admiralty, stated in the House of Commons that the total cost of the battleship Hood was £6,025,000 and the estimated annual cost of maintenance of the vessel in full commission would be £539,000.

TERRITORIAL FORCE.

SCHEME OF ORGANISATION NEARLY COMPLETE.

Although no announcement has been made regarding the terms of service in the post-war Territorial Force, active steps are now being taken to complete the reconstruction of the Force, and to open recruiting at an early date. The necessity for re-organising all branches of the Army, not only on a peace basis, but with the strictest regard to economy, has inevitably delayed the development of the policy outlined by Mr. Winston Churchill in May last.

Meantime the General Staff has been able to study more closely the position of the Force in relation to the development of modern weapons and the military commitments of the nation as a whole, and when the reconstruction scheme is finally adjusted it will probably be found to be superior in several respects to the scheme which was so generally approved in the Spring. It will certainly give the Territorial Force a genuine "raison d'etre," and put it in the position, should necessity arise, to play a vital part in national defence.

No final decision has yet been taken as to the size of the Force or the obligations which it will be asked to undertake. There seems to be no reason to suppose, however, that the original proposal to reconstitute the Force, based on fourteen Infantry divisions, with mounted troops and army troops, has been seriously departed from except so far as may have been found necessary to adhere to the main principle, viz., that the Territorial Force should be an exact replica of the regular army, as far as is possible.

The primary obligation of a Force so constituted would be for home defence, but recently a strong desire has been expressed by prominent Territorial officers that the men enlisting under the new conditions should be asked to undertake some obligation for general service. For example it is urged that they should be liable in an emergency to be embodied as units in support of the regular army after the issue of a proclamation calling up the Army Reserve. This is one of the main problems now to be faced, and upon its solution much will depend.

REVERSIBLE PLANE.

INVENTION OF NEW PROPELLER.

According to an announcement from the McCook Aviation Field at Dayton, Ohio, successful tests have been made with reversible aeroplane propellers, which means, according to the experts, that the day of the "Backyard aeroplane" is at hand. By the use of the new propeller an aeroplane can land and be brought to a standstill within fifty feet. The new device will also, it is claimed, increase the climbing speed of an aeroplane by forty per cent. and permit of flying at much higher altitudes, fifty thousand feet being stated as the possible limit. Mr. Seth Hart, of Los Angeles, California, is the inventor of the reversible propeller.

THE FIUME PUZZLE.

The Serbian Society of Great Britain at the last executive meeting passed the following resolution on the Adriatic question:—

That the territorial solution advocated by President Wilson is the only equitable compromise between Italian and Yugo-Slav claims, and should be upheld at all costs by the Supreme Council.

That since (a) Fiume is the only adequate maritime outlet of Yugo-Slavia and of the whole middle. Danubian region; and since (b) its annexation by Italy cannot be justified on ethical, economic, or even historical grounds; the utmost limit of concession which could reasonably be urged upon the Yugo-Slavs is the establishment of the City of Fiume (in its pre-war boundaries) as a free State under the sovereignty of the League of Nations.

TRIPLE ECONOMIC ENTENTE.

The former Spanish Liberal Minister, the Marquis Cortina, speaking in the Senate at Madrid yesterday, recommended the formation of an economic entente between Spain, France and Great Britain.

REVOLUTION IN SIBERIA.

A revolution has broken out at Vladivostock. No details are to hand except that up to the present only Russians are involved.

In future the import into France of German colouring matters, free of import duty, will be allowed.

RUSH FOR WHISKY.

FIRMS OVERWHELMED WITH ORDERS.

Following the Food Controller's announcement of the removal of restrictions on the sale of spirits, a wild scramble for whisky has begun. The leading firms have had streams of callers, many of whom drove up in taxicabs and motors, while the staffs have been almost overwhelmed by telephone calls. Distillers say they are flooded with orders. The view of the trade is that it will take a fortnight or three weeks before th public will begin to feel the benefit of increased supplies. A representative of one whisky firm says the output of bottles is not half enough. Another authority says that the removal of the restrictions ought to bring down the price of whisky in public bars "with a bang."

While most stores and other big establishments are supplying whisky to regular customers only and maintaining the ration system of two bottles per month, some firms are less cautious and are supplying anyone without limit.

Some wholesale firms are refusing to accept unlimited orders because it is necessary to look ahead. If all available whisky is sold now there will be no older spirit with which to blend the new spirit now being distilled. Besides this once the stock disappears and profit reached the margin set under the Excess Profits Act, they will close down and will only promise delivery in the next financial year so long as the present control prices are maintained.

PROHIBITION DURING WAR.

Sir James Stevenson, speaking at the dinner of the Birmingham Licensed Victuallers Association, after mentioning that in the Spring of 1915 the Government had almost decided to enforce the total prohibition of spirits for the duration of the war, said the time came when the millions of gallons of spirit used for war purposes was not enough.

The question was then discussed of utilizing the stocks of whisky in bond and the Cabinet authorised Lord Milner to deal with the situation. Sir James had several interviews with Lord Milner and discussed the matter with him and his trade colleagues and though those depleted reserves were essential to the continuance of their business there was no opposition to their utilisation for war purposes provided the necessity were proved.

On investigation however, it was found that a great saving of spirit could be effected, especially in the recovery of spirits used as solvents in the production of explosives. All the same, the man in the street, said Sir James, never knew how near he was to reading in his morning paper that the whisky stocks had been commandeered by the Government.

After refering to the anti-liquor legislation in the United States Sir James stated that Canada is supposed also to have gone largely "dry" but his own firm is now receiving more orders from Canada than when it was supposed to be "wet". Their agents recently requested them to substitute glass stoppers for corks as corkscrews are now very difficult to obtain in Canada.

AFGHANS PUNISHED.

RETRIBUTION BY AEROPLANE.

The Mahsud tribes not having accepted the British terms by the 13th November British aeroplanes began attacks on them on that date. A squadron of twenty-five aeroplanes circled over three Mahsud villages and dropped five tons of explosives. These operations continued daily and despite heavy anti-aircraft fire our machines all returned safely. The aerial attacks are affecting the morale of the people.

The British Tochi column has advanced to Dakka Khell where it was received by local Waziris, who brought supplies and apologized for their past misdeeds. The Amir has repudiated the action of those Afghans who have taken up positions at Wana, in the British tribal territory.

DISBANDING THE Q.M.A.A.C.

It is announced by the War Office that the strength of Queen Mary's Army Auxiliary Corps, which was 40,850 at the date of the armistice, has been reduced by more than 33,000.

During September and October 11,234 officials and other ranks were discharged. Drafts are being sent from France to the United Kingdom for dispersal at the rate of 200 a day.

Instructions have been issued to dispense with the corps in the Home commands by December 31st next.

TROOPS FOR PLEBISCITE AREAS.

Replying to a question in the House with reference to the despatch of British troops to the plebiscite areas, Mr. Winston Churchill said that two battalions are being sent to Dantzig, one to Memel, three to Allenstein, one to Marienwerder, three to Upper Silesia and one to Slesvig.

GERMAN SHIPS IN BALTIC.

The Inter-Allied Naval Commission at Berlin has rejected the renewed proposal to allow ships engaged in German coastal trade to leave the three-mile zone for the time being, but has promised to consider proposals in favour of the extension of the free fishing area.

OUT-OF-WORK PAY.

UNEMPLOYMENT BELOW THE AVERAGE.

In moving a supplementary estimate of £1,500,000 for unemployment donation Sir Robert Horne, Minister for Labour, said the recipients of unemployed donation in May numbered 1,100,000, in September 303,000 and at the present time 579,000, of whom 344,000 were ex-service men, 101,000 civilian men and 35,000 civilian women. Since the Armistice employment had been found for 3,000,000 ex-service men and 1,500,000 munition workers.

Whereas in September 1913 the percentage of unemployment in Trade Unions was 2.4, in September last it was only 1.6, though it had increased in October to 2.6, largely as the result of strikes. The average for 1900 to 1914 was 4.3. Unemployment was therefore at the present time only about half the average for the fifteen years before the war.

He maintained that ex-soldiers were entitled to special consideration as there was no real comparison between the hardships suffered by the soldiers during the war and those suffered by civilians at home. Soldiers on leaving the army often found difficulty in securing work, because their positions were already filled up. Of civilians who would cease to receive the donation a considerable portion would be covered by the Trade Unions, the Insurance Act and kindred legislation. There had been a certain amount of deceit, voluntary idleness and fastidiousness as to employment which ought to be affected by the new arrangement.

A large amount of employment was available if only the workers would take it. At the same time it was the duty of the Government to find means of alleviating the burden of unemployment to the greatest possible extent. The amount given under the Insurance Act was insufficient. The Government should aim at covering all the wage earners in the country by legislation, and he hoped shortly to lay their proposals before the House. Regarding the claim that the State should provide and guarantee employment he declared that such attempts had met with nothing but disaster.

In conclusion he said he had no fear whatever for the future. If there was reasonable peace in industry he was certain there was before the country a period of prosperity which would enable us to bear lighty even the colossal burden which at present rested on our shoulders.

On behalf of the Labour Party Mr. Clynes moved a reduction of the vote as a protest against the policy adopted.

Sir Donald Maclean urged an extension of the donation for a few weeks until the Government introduced its new proposals and General Seely made a similar appeal on behalf of the men at present unemployed owing to the reduction of the Air Ministry's establishment.

HOME RULE FOR MALTA.

FINANCIAL HELP FROM BRITAIN.

The Under Secretary for the Colonies, Mr. Amery, stated in the House of Commons yesterday that His Majesty's Government have decided that the time has come to entrust the people of Malta with full responsible administration of purely local affairs. Control of the naval and military services and such other services and functions of Government as are connected with the position of Malta as an Imperial fortress and harbour will remain vested in the Imperial authorities. Mr. Amery said he would have to ask the House for a measure of financial assistance for the island, the finances of which have been seriously embarrassed by circumstances arising out of the war. He hoped the new system of self-Government would come into force at the beginning of 1921.

WAR HEALTH WORK.

GOLD MEDALS TO BE AWARDED.

The Chadwick Trustees have resolved, under the powers conferred on them by the scheme which they administer, to award next year a Chadwick Gold Medal aud a prize of £100 to the naval and military medical officer respectively in the British service who shall be deemed to have distinguished himself the most during the past five years of war in promoting the health of the men in the Navy and Army. The nomination to the trustees will me made by the Directors-General of the Naval and Military Medical Services respectively.

AIRMEN'S FUNERAL.

The funeral of the late Lieutenant Roger M. Douglas and Lieutenant J. S. L. Ross, who were killed in an aeroplane crash at Surbiton a few minutes after starting on a flight to Australia, took place at the Australian Military burying ground at Brookwood on Tuesday. The wreath from the Hounslow Aerodrome bore the inscription "Salutation to two brave men." At the funeral Colonel Durrant represented the General Officer Commanding the Australian Forces in England, and Colonel Walter House and Major Bernard represented respectively Major-General Sir F. H. Sykes and the Air Minister.

SUMMARY COURT.

SYSTEMATIC ROBBERY BY CIVILIANS.

"This is probably the worst case that has come before me. Restaurant keepers must understand that it is a very serious offence to give soldiers these treacherous drinks. A little café keeper who sells an occasional glass of cognac comes here and is severely punished, but you are the owner of a large restaurant who has been carrying it on systematically, and I must make an example." The accused, Alphons Janser, proprietor of the "Zur Post" a large restaurant at Mungersdorf, who served cognac to all and sundry, was sentenced to three weeks imprisonment and fined 2,000 marks or a further three weeks. He paid the fine.

REAL OFFENDER PUNISHED.

Maria Schmitz, a widow, of 22 Freiheitstrasse, Mülheim, was charged with being in possession of various articles of Army clothing and a quantity of canteen stores.

The presiding officer commented severely on the dishonesty of civilians employed by the British. "We trust these German civilians by employing them," he said, "but invariably they take advantage and rob us. I have not the slightest doubt that there is systematic robbery of the British Government."

Accused stated that she received the goods from her fiancé Ludwig Wiermann. He, being in Court, was ordered into the dock. He asserted that he brought the clothing from France, where he had been a prisoner, and the canteen goods he received from soldiers for getting his work done quickly.

Frau Schmitz was discharged, as she was considered to be the victim of the man, and Wiermann was given fourteen days without the option of a fine.

ASIATIC MENACE.

BOLSHEVISTS TRANSFER THEIR ACTIVITIES.

In view of the probable liquidation of Bolshevism in Russia itself the Central Soviet authorities are busily directing their attention to making Central Asia their new theatre of operations. News from Tashkent through Reuter, shows that Bolshevists there, acting on instructions from Moscow, have instituted propaganda on a large scale for the purpose of training emissaries to go to India and Afghanistan. These classes are conducted in Pushti, Hindustani and other Oriental languages.

It is known that towards the end of August a Bolshevist Mission under M. Bravin, formerly the well-known Russian diplomatist at the Russian Legation at Teheran, who speaks Hindustani fluently and has expert knowledge of Eastern questions, arrived at Kabul on a special mission from Lenin. Bravin had an audience of the Amir and since then he has been in continuous communication with Moscow through Tashkent, which is now the headquarters of Bolshevist propaganda in Central Asia.

FIELD MARSHAL HAIG.

RETIRING FROM ACTIVE SERVICE.

Field Marshal Haig replying to a telegraphic enquiry by the "Glasgow Evening News" as to whether he had decided to retire from active service, says he has decided on nothing. The only thing is that, when his appointment has been abolished, he will be unemployed.

The "Globe," which was the first to announce Earl Haig's impending retirement says he refused the appointment as Viceroy of India and also declined to become Commander-in-Chief in Great Britain.

It is stated that he intends to devote himself to the cause of disabled and unemployed officers. He may make a statement as to his future intentions when he is presented with the gold medal of the Royal Scottish Geographical Society at Edinburgh a fortnight hence.

PRINCE VISITS THE OPERA.

The Prince of Wales attended a performance at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on Tuesday night. Tickets changed hands at fabulous prices immediately his projected visit became known. The vast building was packed and when the Prince entered the entire audience sprang to its feet, applauded vociferously, and sang "God bless the Prince of Wales". At the close of the performance another outburst of enthusiasm took place.

SUSPECTED FAKE.

Mr. Jenkins, the United States Consular Agent, who was recently captured by bandits and released on payment of a ransom, was arrested and is being kept under surveillance at his home at Puebla.

It is charged against him that he was not abducted but that he acted in connivance with the bandits.

CANADIAN VICTORY LOAN.

The Canadian Victory Loan, in which 300,000,000 dollars was appealed for, has been over subscribed by 373,000,000 dollars, thus making the total amount subscribed 673,000,000 dollars.

The National Savings Committee notify that the number of War Savings Certificates sold during the week ended November 8 was 1,285,934, bringing the total to that date up to 371,143,169.

PLUCKY RESCUE.

PRESENTATION TO A GALLANT GERMAN SAILOR.

The gallantry of a German sailor, Hans Wefers, mate of the S. S. Prinz Heinrich, who rescued a British officer from death by drowning in the Rhine, had a fitting sequel at Bonn last Friday, when Major-General A. B. Ritchie, C. B., C. M. G., Commanding the Lancashire Division handed him an inscribed silver bowl in recognition of his bravery. The presentation was made in the presence of the British Administrator and several Officers attached to his Staff, the Oberburgermeister of Bonn and some English Ladies. The bowl bore the following inscription:—

"Presented to Hans Wefers by the British Military Authorities, in recognition of his act of gallantry, in rescuing a British Officer from drowning."

The circumstances of the rescue were as follows:—

On the evening of August 1st, Lieutenant Hughes, of S. S. Overstolz, whilst swimming in the Rhine, was taken ill and was being carried helpless down stream, only his hands appearing above water. Hans Wefers, mate of S. S. Prinz Heinrich, seeing the Officer in danger, first threw a life-buoy into the water and then, fully dressed dived into the river and pushed the life-buoy about 300 yards in the water, until he reached Lieut. Hughes. He then succeeded in getting the buoy on the Officer and supported him in the water until picked up by a fishing boat. But for his quick and gallant action, the Officer would undoubtedly have lost his life.

In handing the bowl to Hans Wefers General Ritchie said:

"It is a great pleasure to me to present to you this token, to mark, not only the gratitude and appreciation of the Officer whose life you saved, but also that of the British Military Authorities, who have asked me to give you this piece of silver.

There is no doubt that by your quick action and utter disregard of personal danger, you saved the life of the British Officer.

Your gallantry is something that you and your relations may be justly proud of and I hope that you may live to look back upon the event for many years to come."

The Oberburgermeister in returning thanks for Hans Wefers, referred to the pleasant relationships which had always existed between the British Garrison and the civilian population of Bonn and emphasised the fact that incidents such as were being celebrated then, could only leave pleasant memories.

Though the ceremony was a very simple one, it left a very agreeable impression of cordiality on every one who attended it.

COAL STRIKE ECHO.

BIG FIRM HEAVILY FINED.

The Stratford Co-operative Society was fined fifty pounds yesterday for disregarding the order limiting deliveries of coal during the coal strike to one hundredweight per household per week. Evidence was given that despite warnings, the company made 378 such deliveries, totalling ninety-four tons, during the prohibited period. It also disregarded an order issued prior to the strike that a fortnight's reserve must be kept. When the strike started they were 521 tons short. Counsel said that if other coal merchants had acted in a similar manner the position would have been absolutely desperate.

SINN FEIN RAID ON NAVAL LAUNCH.

The latest Sinn Fein outrage concerns the British Navy. On Monday night a party of armed mem at Bantry boarded a naval launch in the harbour and surprised the crew, whom they locked in their quarters. The report states that the raiders succeeded in getting away with eight rifles and three revolvers before the crew of the launch were able to release themselves. The police have searched houses in the town, but have failed to find any of the missing arms. This outrage follows closely on the raid on the steamship Minnahorn in Cork Harbour on Saturday night.

EGYPTIAN MINISTRY RESIGNS.

A Reuter message states that the Egyptian Ministry has resigned owing to questions connected with the Milner Mission. The resignation has been accepted.

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.

The market continues to improve and business yesterday was much more animated. The position of foreign exchanges gives reason for caution and militates against any material improvement in international securities. Oils regained their popularity and the leading issues advanced substantially. Diamonds were strong on persistent inquiries and scarcity of securities. Gold and silver mining descriptions were in renewed demand in response to a fresh rise in those metals. Gold was in keen demand, Spain paying 102s 8d per fine ounce. Spot silver advanced to 79½d and two months forward delivery 68½d per ounce on speculative demand and China buying, which is attributed to the restriction of export from Mexico. German marks were quoted at 187 to 189 and Austrian crowns at 510 to 530 per £1 sterling.

THEIR OLD IDOL.

Germany is proud of her culture and other countries have never denied the achievements which were her just cause of pride. It is needless to say that the other countries have not taken "kultur" at the inflated valuation which the German people attached to it.

But the opinions expressed in recently published memoirs of men like Ludendorff, Tirpitz, and Bethmann-Hollweg lead one to suppose that in one branch of knowledge "Kultur" has been woefully deficient.

It is safe to assume from the reading of these books that where Germany failed in her diplomacy was not so much in pursuing a bad policy as in the utter lack of comprehension of the psychology of the other countries with whom her policy brought her in contact.

Czernin has already expressed his opinion that the Bismarckian tradition is the curse of modern German and we may well agree with him. With Bismarck's patriotism and the whole hearted devotion to his idea we cannot cavil, but the methods which the Iron Chancellor adopted to secure his ends led to the thorough distrust which invariably accompanied diplomatic relations with him, and the modern German diplomat has inherited the greater man's methods without his larger and broader vision, which in consequence has led to the isolation of Germany and the demand for guarantees of her sincerity before affording her admission into the circles of contemporary statesmanship.

The fault has been obvious but it has not been remedied.

Two factors are outstanding if Germany is ever to play a reasonable part in the comity of nations. First, the Bismarcian methods must be laid aside, however tenaciously his successors may cling to his ideals and, secondly, the education of the German nation must be undertaken: they must be instructed in the aims and ambitions of other nations from sources which are not polluted.

Unless some German statesman arises who has the courage of his convictions and, taking his courage into his hands, will tell his people that their old idol had elements of clay in his construction there is no shadow of doubt, that, secure in their own ignorance, the German nation is going to plunge itself into further international complications from which only a knowledge of the truth will save them.

OUR IMPROMPTU CONCERT.

"Sixty marks in prizes for the best turns at an impromptu concert to be held in the dining hall." The amount it is true would not break our bank, but the notice caused unbounded interest in this abode of blue clad men gathered here from every unit in the Rhine Army.

The hospital dining hall was duly rigged up for the great event. The platform consisted of three long tables with a red screen in the background. The piano, minus one leg, and borrowed from the Y.M.C.A. occupied one corner. The auditorium was arranged by the men to their own liking the point of vantage being the chairs placed on the top of some tables in the rear.

The rich, appetising smell of the turtle soup, then being boiled in the huge vats of the cookhouse near by, pervaded the atmosphere, whilst through the open window on the other side icy currents of air chilled the marrow in the bones. It was cold, very cold and greatcoat collars were turned up, but what mattered it, anything to break the dull monotony of hospital life.

What a crowd, too, boys and seasoned veterans, the halt and the lame; the poor and the needy, for marks and postal orders are none too plentiful here. There is no audience so enthusiastic as an audience of Tommies and they are easily pleased.

Between the breezes on the one side and the scent of fragant soup on the other, mixed with clouds of tobacco smoke, these lads were anticipating the surprises in store for them. There was to be keen rivalry and woe to the ward that was not represented!

The Padre presides and sets the ball rolling by a rollicking song and for the next two hours volunteers come forward to sing or recite, to whistle or dance, to win fame or marks, but above all to give amusement.

Here is Jock, full of life, a second Harry Lauder. He is a great turn and brings the house down by his antics. You laugh until you must almost cry. He sings and dances with amusing rapidity. Jock is a real terror in many ways, but a prime favourite with the men. "Now then Flying Corps!" someone shouts.

There is an immediate response and the lad gives a whistling song, warbling like a nightingale on a summer's eve. The competition between the wards becomes exciting.

"Come on B.L.!" is the shout followed by "How about C.2?" and other numbers. A Yorkshireman gives a recitation in his own dialect. It is all so amusing. A great find is a perfect tenor who renders "I send thee red, red roses" in a marvellous way. How the men cheer him as he steps off the platform! And yet he is very modest, and does not seem to realise his success.

Ragtime songs, songs as ancient as the hills, Cockney songs, and Irish melodies follow each other in quick succession.

The judges are hard at work for they have great responsibility. The pianist has no scores, but it is remarkable how he manages to pick up the airs by his quick ear. And so the programme draws to a close, and another pleasant evening in Rhineland, long to be remembered, ends with the announcement that five prizes have been awarded: 1, twenty marks, 2, fifteen marks, 3, ten marks, 4, eight marks, 5, seven marks.

Wonderful! The winners feel like millionaires and retire to their wards to dream of how they will spend the money on the morrow. G.K.

THE DISABLED.

How They Are Making Good.

Truly, the way in which disabled men, even the most seriously disabled, are adapting themselves to the civil life occupations they have taken up is remarkable. The recent manning of the German submarine "Deutschland" by a crew recruited entirely from the ranks of the disabled, is but one of many instances that can be recorded. To mention a few others:

At Woolwich a man with a disabled right arm has become a proficient telephonist; two men with left legs amputated and two with severe gunshot wounds in the leg are doing excellent work at Hackney as polishers of tobacco pipes; in the West Midlands district, a man who has lost both legs is being trained in art metal work; at Ipswich several men with amputated arms are employed as watchmen, and one with a disabled left arm as storekeeper; the Tottenham Fire Brigade have engaged ten disabled men for their watch rooms, and five more are to be taken on; those engaged including two with legs amputated, and several with one limb missing; Edinburgh Employment Exchange has placed 21 men as tram conductors, one as a traveller, and another as a doorkeeper; at Bristol a man whose right leg has been amputated has been engaged as a chaffeur.

A number of men who had lost their legs have, through the good offices of the Catherine-street, London, Employment Exchange, recently been placed in employment as bead-threaders. A former stage manager of a London theatre, now suffering from severe neurasthenia, has also been placed as a clerk by this Exchange at a salary of £200 per annum. A Deptford a man whose right arm is useless, has taken over a position as an overseer at £4.2s. per week. The General Post Office at Birmingham has asked for 30 disabled men, while at Hereford steps are being taken to replace women by disabled men in the National Filling Factory. At Smethwick the placings of disabled men in positions, under the 5% scheme, have increased from 6 to 38, and not one single firm in the town has refused to enter the scheme. At Sparkhill, an ex-Service man suffering from frost-bitten feet and the loss of all his toes, is now employed as an acetylene welder. In Portsmouth all the conductresses on the Tramways, with the exception of 12, have been replaced by disabled men. The Oldham Corporation has found permanent employment for 30 disabled men at a minimum salary of £3 per week; 8 of these men have lost either a leg or an arm; one is suffering from neurasthenia and other from epilepsy. The Burnley Corporation have placed 21 disabled men in the Tramways and Gas Departments, and a further 9 have obtained employment in the local Post Office.

Probably within the next few months, as a result of the National Roll Scheme (that is the employment, in response to the King's Appeal, of disabled men by all large firms, up to a minimum of 5% of their staffs), the variety of occupations being filled by disabled men will be infinite.

Meanwhile, however, it is very evident, from what we have indicated herein, that the disabled man is not himself going to allow the grass to grow under his feet—even though, unfortunately, he has sometimes no feet for it to get a chance of growing under.

It is to be noted with satisfaction that employers of labour throughout the country are every week becoming more and more impressed with the disabled man's capabilities, and are providing all the possible openings they can for him.

Really, there are very few occupations for which disabled men generally are unsuitable, although for each individual job, the individual man's disability has of necessity to be taken into consideration. Obviously, a man with an amputated leg cannot successfully manage a job where standing is essential, but can usually easily adapt himself to his old or a fresh occupation if it permits of his sitting, or standing but little at it. On the other hand, a man who has lost an arm, but has sound legs, can easily enough manage a job where sound legs are the main consideration, and can of course also adapt himself to a job at which the use of two arms is not indispensable.

Where the occupation is one that calls chiefly for mental capabilities rather than physical—well the disabled man is seldon at any disadvantage at all by reason of his bodily disability.

Good Luck to him.

He richly deserves every ounce of success that comes his way. From "The Ex-Service-Man."

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views.

EXCESSIVE CIGARETTE SMOKING.

Sir,—"Senior Officer" is to be congratulated on having the courage of his opinions. I know he won't increase his popularity by airing them, but though I'm one of the many who smoke "fags" from morning to night and enjoy them, I am sure it's a silly habit.

All this smoking gives one little satisfaction either. If one is puffing insipid Virginias all the time, where is the real pleasure? You see the smoke curling upwards and lighting and handling a cigarette keeps you employed; but compared with an occasional pipe or cigar, what is there in it? The average fag is a tasteless production—not worth putting in your mouth.

When one knows that if you smoke in a dark room and can't see the glow or the smoke from your fag, it is impossible to tell if it is alight or not, I think that is enough to show what a farce it all is.

Still, I go on buying the things. It has become a habit and I can't break myself off it. I know I'm wasting my money, but continue.

There's a certain element of sociability in the custom, of course. When you are with smokers, you don't want to feel out of it by not joining in. But I really intend to stop—some day. I haven't the courage though, to fix a date. VICTIM.

Sir,—So far as the young soldier is concerned I associate all this cigarette smoking with "swank." It's thought the correct thing to smoke, so whether he really enjoys it or not, he follows the crowd and contracts the habit.

In moderation, there is no harm in it. When the war was on, as "Senior Officer" says, it was excusable. Now it ought to be dropped.

Some people say it soothes the nerves. Rubbish! It does just the other thing—wrecks them.

And now girls are following our lead, puffing cigarettes everywhere. They pretend to like them, but here again much of it is just "swank." They think it is smart to pull out a cigarette case and light up.

No! "Senior Officer" is quite right. I hope his strong appeal will help to kill the cigarette craze. J.J.P.

Sir,—Replying to "Senior Officer" may I state that his condemnation is far and away too severe. Again his statement that our young soldiers are always puffing at cigarettes at all hours of the day is far from the truth. Where does he get his facts from, I should like to know? "Are they never on parade,?" would be my first question and is it because he has seen in the streets a number of Tommies smoking that he throws out a wholesale condemnation.

His remarks about the dangers of this pernicious habit are also far from what is really the case. How many of the men inhale the smoke? Did he ever think of that? The abuse of cigarette smoking lies in that a few smoke to excess (inhaling the smoke) and cases are proved of this.

"Senior Officer's" letter has aroused much resentment among the troops and his misplaced zeal for their welfare is having just the opposite effect to that which he desires. PRE-WAR THINKER.

Sir,—The letter published in your paper re excessive cigarette smoking have caused me to change my views as to the high price charged at certain canteens, clubs etc., for cigarettes.

I now see that it is a laudable desire on their part to discourage heavy smoking by our young soldiers. I feared at first that it looked like profiteering. STAFF SERGEANT.

A LATE CLUB.

Sir,—Some remarks have appeared in your columns re a late club. May I add that I am not free till eight or later each evening. There are many likewise placed and there only remains the doubtful pleasure of the restaurants, or encountering the perils of the streets.

I would suggest keeping one club or institution open till eleven at night.

It would be a welcome change. ORDERLY ROOM.

WHY NOT WRESTLING?

Sir,—Yes, why not? Wrestling is indisputably a fine sport, but for some reason it does not find favour with the British Army of the Rhine. As to the reason I am not qualified to pass an opinion, but I can give facts to substantiate my statement that it is not popular.

Some time ago an officer in Rhineland made every effort to organise classes and arrange matches, but there was not a single man interested enough to come forward. NEW BRIGADE.

WHY NOT WRESTLING?

Sir,—I have read without much surprise, the letter of "Anti-Box." Up till now,—although looked upon with suspicion by most healthy-minded men; owing to his ingenious way of shifting the onus of degradation from the pugilists themselves to the spectators, whose behaviour, I admit, is not always, unfortunately, in keeping with the manliness of the contestants,—he has escaped the universal contempt which is his due. His latest indiscretion (for I can call it by no other name) shows clearly and unmistakeably the unsportig instincts of the writer.

Anyone whose thoughts and instincts are so far removed from those of a gentleman, that he can speak in such terms of fox hunting and coursing, is surely not a fit person to offer an opinion on any matter concerning sport. JAMES PIGG.

GERMANS AND ENGLISH DRAMA.

Sir,—"Play-goer" and "Another Play-goer" seem very anxious that our late enemies should fill seats at the Deutsches that I should have thought our own boys were entitled to. "Another Play-goer" talks of the empty benches to be seen nightly; but I and most of the fellows in my unit object to allowing these to be occupied by Germans.

They have got their own places of amusement. The Deutsches was reserved for us, so let us keep it. There are plenty of troops in Cologne district to fill every seat nightly. It is not that there is any lack of clientelle, but the correspondence you printed recently, shows as plainly as can be what is wrong at the Deutsches.

The right kind of show is not being put on. The young soldier now in the majority on the Rhine would flock to plays on the popular kind that he can follow and understand.

I take the "Melting Pot" as an example of the sort of play, not to be put on, because it is running now. I went to it, and thought the acting very good; but having told my chums what sort of a play it is, they don't want to go, and I don't blame them. They would rather have a good thrill or an honest laugh. If these were provided, then there needn't be any talk of inviting Germans to fill empty benches. JOCK II

UNRESPONSIVE AUDIENCES.

Sir,—Apparently "1919" and I go to entertainments for different objects. I go to be amused, while "1919" on his own showing "pays his quota" and "expects to get his money's worth."

In that case of course, it is useless to expect him to realise that the playgoer owes a certain duty to the artiste. Imagine playing before an audience composed exclusively of "1919's" who, having gloomily, let their "saxpences" "go bang" sit down hard on their "right to applaud."

I am unaware that I mentioned "wild enthusiasm" and I certainly did not request "1919" to "shout approval." I merely asked for sympathetic and unbiassed attention. Circumstances alter cas s. I wonder if "1919' ever witnessed a Divisional or Brigade show at the front! He would doubtless have condemned many of the turns as childish and unworthy of his applause. Yet the "house" used to rock with laughter.

I disagree with "1919" on the point of hard work producing forced effects. The two are not synonymous. If a show is to be a success every artiste must work hard both at rehearsal and during the performance. It is a far cry from London to Cologne, and personally I feel very gratified to those London companies who have come so far to amuse us.

Regarding the year 1870, I must express that I did not expect to be taken so literally. Now that I remember, some war did break out then. However, the date is not an arbitrary one and I simply desired to designate by it a turning point of the nineteenth century—the transition from bigotry and narrowness to tolerance and wider sympathies. HONESTY.

DO WE READ TOO MUCH?

Sir,—I saw a letter yesterday urging soldiers to read Carlyle every day for half an hour. But why only Carlyle? And again why not think things out for yourselves and read less?

Now, I stand the chance of being thought a great heretic but I'll risk that. I contend that nowadays we are all reading far too much. There are libraries here, and libraries there, and every facility is given to absorb all sorts of literature. We are told to drink in the thoughts of other people but not enough stress is laid on our using our own minds.

I am sure from experience, that the country dweller or the seafaring man who reads little is usually a deeper thinker than the townsman who is skimming the press and poring over books in his spare time.

What I say to the men on the Rhine is, think more and read less. RURAL.

DUSK.

Gold of the sun's dead splendour,
Eve o'er the waiting land,
Peace and a stillness tender,
Touch of a trembling hand,
Never a zephyr sighing,
Never a star to woo,
Only the twilight dying,
Dusk,—and an hour—with you.

Heart I would wish of sunset,
None of its rainbow bold,
Let me but pray for twilight
Rest, and a dream to hold,
What if the Red Sun fling me
Sorrows or many or few,
So long as the twilight bring me
Dusk—and a thought—of you.

WINNING TICKETS.

Details of Lille Manchester November "Sweep."

RECORD RECEIPTS.

The draw for the Army "Victory" Sweepstake (Lille), organised by Major Denison on the Manchester November Handicap, as reported, took place in the Grand Salon, of the Bellevue Hotel, Lille, as reported in yesterday's issue, in the presence of a number of officers, N.C.O.'s and other ranks of H.M. Forces.

Over £50,000 was subscribed in less than a fortnight, including the subscriptions received too late for the Cambridgeshire draw and transferred to the November Handicap "Sweep."

The first prize amounts to £15,540, the second £7,770, the third £3,885, and every person whose ticket drew a horse (66 entries) will each receive £225.

Major Denison announced at the draw that in the event of the race being declared void, owing to inclement weather, the whole of the prize money would be equally divided among the sixty-six people who drew horses. This would give each person £886 10s.

LEAGUE 'NATIONAL.

England and Ireland Draw at Liverpool.

REPETITION OF FORM.

English League 2. Irish League 2.

Though England was generally expected to win in the League game against Ireland at Liverpool on Wednesday, the match resulted in a draw of two goals each.

This is a repetition of the result at their first meeting at Belfast when the teams draw with one all. England made several changes in the side for the return game on Wednesday but they failed to bring victory.

The teams were:—

English.

Hardy (Aston Villa); Longworth (Liverpool), Cook (Oldham Athletic); Curry (Newcastle United), McCall (Preston North End), Watson (Burnley); Hodkinson (Blackburn Rovers), Stephenson (Aston Villa), Browell (Manchester City), Clennell (Everton), Crisp (West Bromwich Albion). Reserves: Dixon (Newcastle United), Chambers (Liverpool).

Irish.

Liddell (Glentoran); Rollo (Linfield), Barrett (Belfast Celtic); Hamill (Belfast Celtic), Scraggs (Glentoran), McCandless (Linfield); Lyner (Glentoran), Robinson (Distillery), H. Reid (Distillery), McDonald (Linfield), McEwan (Linfield).

PLAYERS' PLUCK.

Northampton men Continue with broken Bones.

In the match with Leicester last Saturday two Northampton players, T. D. Handford and A. N. Platt, continued to play with broken bones for close upon half an hour. As the game was a grim struggle, in which many hard knocks were given and taken, their fortitude is remarkable. Handford had a broken rib and Platt had two broken bones in his wrist.

These accidents put Northampton in an awkward position, for in two weeks two complete left wings have been put out of action. Against the R.A.F. on the previous Saturday R. C. Jones injured his knee, and C. Haffenden twisted his ankle, and neither was fit for the Leicester match. Jones, the left centre, is expected to be fit for next Saturday's game with Coventry, but the club does not know where to look for a suitable partner for him.

FOOTBALL GOSSIP

By W. Le C.

Have you noticed what poor "first half" teams Aston and Sheffield Wednesday are, and they, curiously enough, occupy the bottom places on the table?

* * *

Bisset, Manchester United's new right winger from Falkirk, is said to be a second "Jockey" Simpson.

* * *

A critic says "Not a few remarks hurled at players and referees betray army origin."

* * *

Look at Newcastle United's "against" record. Therein lies the secret of their League leadership.

* * *

Blackburn, Leicester and Middlesboro' have had officials operating in Scotland. So don't be surprised if any startling transfers are noised about.

* * *

Thompson, of Ashington, resisted many tempting offers before he signed for Aston Villa. This back will make a big name for himself yet.

* * *

Lawrence, of Newcastle United, has twice broken the same collar bone. The first time was in pre-war football.

* * *

Max Woosnam, the Corinthian, Cambridge and Chelsea centre-half, is to assist Manchester City. They will be glad that he has secured a situation in Cottonopolis.

* * *

George Thompson, who understudies Boyle of Burnley, only got his chance through the latter's injuries. He assisted Burnley in pre-war football.

* * *

Harold Hill, the new Notts County forward, was but six short weeks ago working as a miner and playing with a local team in his spare time. To-day he is a fully fledged professional and first league player. Not many players have jumped so quickly into fame, as this clever exponent of the game.

IS PHYSICAL CULTURE OVERDONE?

The majority of young men who take up physical culture do so very enthusiastically and are inclined to overdo matters says a "Sporting Life" correspondent. I think that when a man has finished a day's work indoors he has not any too much energy left for practising weight-lifting, dumb-bells, and physical exercises generally as taught in the gymnasia and physical culture schools, but a walk or game of cricket or tennis would do good.

"SWEEP" QUESTION.

War Office to Enquire into the Matter.

Mr. Briant in the House of Commons asked the Secretary for War if he was aware that Major P. A Denison had been organising sweepstakes at Lille, one of which had distributed £40,981 in prizes, leaving a balance of £4,019 undistributed; and whether he could issue an instruction so that officers whilst on service should not be associated with the management of sweepstakes or similar undertakings.

Mr. Churchill: I am inquiring into this matter, and will write to my hon. friend later.

WARWICK RACING.

Outsider Wins The Wroxton Handicap.

FANCIED FOUR FAIL.

At Warwick, in dull and threatening weather, there was a fairly good attendance on Wednesday. For the chief event of the afternoon Wally, Miss Cheek, Warways and Marl were all expected to run well, but none of the fancied achieved success, Church History, a 10—1 chance winning from Marl and Miss Cheek.

Details:—

Corinthian Handicap:—1, Watergruel (4—1); 2, Pot Herb (5—4); 3, Raybarrow (7—2). Four ran.

Barford Handicap:—1, Laodicea (5—1); 2, Skookum Joe (8—1); 3, Little Charlie (100—8). Eleven ran.

Radford Nursery:—1, Ether filly (100—8); 2, Mexican Eagle (7—2); 3, Buck (8—1). Nine ran.

Wroxton Handicap:—1, Church History (10—1); 2, Marl (6—5); 3, Miss Cheek (9—2). Eight ran.

Adgehill Nursery:—1, Harrier (7—1); 2, Thendara (20—1); 3, Be Sure (8—1). Eighteen ran.

Stoneleigh Plate:—1, Hainton Bell (5—1); 2, Macgre (2—1); 3, Kings Own (4—1). Six ran.

LATEST LONDON BETTING.

Manchester November Handicap Saturday Next.

WAS KEYSOF OVERRATED?

Too Much Importance Attached to Doncaster Victory.

The fact that Keysoe, Lord Derby's runaway St. Leger winner, failed to give Pomme-de-Terre 6 lb. at Liverpool, suggests that too much importance has been attached to her Doncaster victory and that she has been considerably overrated.

Her efforts early in the year gave promise of no great things, and, in spite of the fact that she has carried off four races and is second in the list of winning horses, she may be said to have disappointed her supporters.

She was unplaced in the Column Produce Stakes at the Craven meeting, ran seventh in the One Thousand Guineas, again unplaced in the Coronation Stakes at Ascot and only managed to finish second for the Knowsley Dinner Stakes at the Liverpool Summer meeting when she was beaten a length and a half by African Star, the winner conceding her 15 lb.

Her First Win.

It was in the Gatwick Stakes at Goodwood that Keysoe met her first success, defeating Flying Spear by a neck, and being in receipt of 12 lb.

Then came the run-away St. Leger victory, as a result of which she was regarded by many as the best of her age. There had certainly been a marked improvement in her form.

But since then her performances have not been convincing. She was beaten by Flying Spear at Newbury on even terms and there was little merit in her win at Newmarket when she was only opposed by two moderate fillies.

Consequently she can scarely be the best of her age.

ARTISTS' RIFLES' REOPENING NIGHT.

Remembering the past glories of the School of Arms connected with the Artists' Rifles (28th Batt. The London Regt.), the reopening of the school and headquarters Duke's-rd, Euston-rd, after its long inactivity is received with enthusiasm by all members of the regiment. The classes will be held each Tuesday night from 6.30 to 9,30 throughout the winter, and in March it is hoped to hold an assault-at-arms.

BOXING ITEMS.

Disappointed Fulton Returns to New York.

KID LEWIS BACK.

Big Fred Fulton, the American heavyweight who came to England with his manager, Mr. Tom O'Rourke, in the hope of a match with Joe Beckett or Carpentier, left Southampton on Tuesday afternoon for New York. To say that Fulton and his manager are not disappointed at the barrenness of their visit would be untrue, but they are of philosophic temperament, and are hoping to find public and Press opinions in the States more favourable to them on their return.

Fulton is undoubtedly one of the finest heavy-weights in the world. Although he met no first-class boxer during his stay in Europe, he accounted for those he met with such ease as to place him in the front rank of the "heavies." Townley, Coghill and other lesser fry were summarily dismissed.

Despite his achievements Fulton did not catch on over here, and he returns without having realised his ambitions, having only himself to blame.

GUARDSMAN FAILS AGAIN.

Powell of Newport Causes Nash to Retire.

At the Queen's Hall, Cardiff, the outstanding feature of the programme was a 15 round contest between the heavyweights, Ivor Powell, of Newport, and W. Nash, of the Grenadier Guards, who had met on a previous occasion, when Powell proved the victor in the fourteenth round. On Monday he had no difficulty in again being returned the winner, as, after he had all the best of the exchanges, the towel was thrown in from Nash's corner in the twelfth round.

KID LEWIS RETURNS.

Kid Lewis, the one-time Aldgate featherweight, who won the Lonsdale belt at 9st and subsequently the American welterweight championship, has just returned to England after an absence of five years. In that time he has beaten some of the best men in Australia and the States, first in the "light" and then in the "welter" class."

Lewis has come back to England to fulfil a contract with Mr. Redmond Barry, who, with his brother, is promoting the big Boxing Day tournament at the Albert Hall.

DOYLE VICTORY SEQUEL.

The defeat of Bermondsey Billy Wells by Kid Doyle on Monday afternoon has had, as was feared, an unfortunate sequel for the young Londoner, for it has cost him the match with Johnny Basham which Mr. Bettinson had arranged as one of the attractions of his "complimentary night" programme at the Club on Dec. 22, and with it the chance of becoming first holder of the new Lonsdale belt, which was to be put up for competition.

BILLIARDS.

Wednesday's closing scores in the important billiard matches being played in London were as under:—

Smith (in play)	3,001
Falkiner	3,202
Reece	5,125
Stevenson	2,074

Chess Tournament.

The results of games played in connection with the B.E.L.C. Championship on Tuesday were as follows:

Gnr. Peck	2	Pte. Harrow	0
L/Cpl. Whyte	2	Cpl. Williams	0
Cpl. Jordan	2	Pte. Hartley	0

The following is the present position for the Championship.

1. Sgt. Yates.	11. Sgt. Fry, W. H.
2. Sgt. Kemplin.	12. C.S.M. Graham, A.
3. L/Cpl. Howes.	13. Sgt. Keight.
4. Pte. Wooster.	14. L/Cpl. Whyte.
5. Pte. Duncan.	15. Cpl. Williams.
6. L/Cpl. Harrison.	16. Pte. Scully, A. W.
7. Sgt. Taylor.	17. Gnr. Beck.
8. Gnr. Stanley.	18. Pte. Harrow.
9. Cpl. Jordan.	19. Sgt. Lloyd.
10. Pte. Hartley.	20. Dvr. Shaw.

SPORT NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

Carslake Rests.

Carslake is not riding at the Warwick meeting.

Blot Bought.

Blot was bought in for 410 guineas, and Cylenius for 600 guineas at Hurst Park.

Lost an Iron.

In the Syon Handicap A. Balding, on Greek Star, lost an iron early in the race, and under the circumstances did well to finish fifth.

Another Trainer for Epsom.

A North-country trainer with a dozen jumpers hopes shortly to come south and train and Epsom, providing he can find suitable stabling.

Rider from Abroad.

W. Krog has arrived from South Africa where he trained and rode with success. He is putting in for a licence to ride under National Hunt Rules this winter.

Jockey for India.

J. Clark sailed for India this week to fulfil a three months' riding engagement. He and Flanagan will be back in time for the opening of next flat race season at Lincoln.

Stable Lad's Strike Still Unsettled.

The Epsom stable lads are still out on strike, and as trainers there are unwilling to concede their demands, the strike is no nearer settlement than it was a week ago.

Fernie and Alliss Win.

Having led by three holes on the first half of a seventy-two holes challenge foursome at Pennard, Swansea, last week, over C. K. Faulkner (Pennard) and R. Walker (Southerndown), R. S. Fernie (Glamorganshire) and P. Alliss (Porthcawl) won the match in the concluding thirty-six holes at Porthcawl, by 2 up and 1 to play.

King's Jockey.

Herbert Jones, the King's jockey, is lying seriously ill at Newmarket.

Cardiff "Gate."

The "gate" at the Cardiff and Swansea match at Cardiff on Saturday totalled £390.

Veteran Trainer.

Mr. Tom Sherwood, the veteran Epsom trainer, was 81 years of age on Saturday.

Cup Final.

By arrangement, the final of the London Charity Cup between Dulwich Hamlet and Nunhead will be played at Champion Hill on Dec. 13.

Ground Purchase.

It is understood that the Cardiff Rugby club has accepted the offer made by the Marquis of Bute to purchase the freehold of the famous Cardiff Arms Park, Cardiff.

Challenge Cup Final.

At a meeting of the London F.A. it was agreed that the final of the London Challenge Cup be played on May 8. The question of fixing the ground and other details will come before a future meeting.

Football Injuries.

Playing in a Kingston and District League match at Long Ditton on Saturday between Long Ditton Old Boys and Graham Spicer Institute (New Malden), C. Hay, of the last-named club, sustained severe injuries including a broken leg.

Birmingham A.C.

At the annual dinner of the Birmingham A.C., it was announced that out of 175 active members on the outbreak of hostilities, 106 volunteered for active service. During the evening Mr. A. Allen, promoter of the B.A.C. entertainments to wounded soldiers at the different hospitals around the Midlands, was awarded the club's gold medal.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

MISS SHIRLEY KING.

An Appreciation.

It will come as a shock to patrons of the Deutsches Theatre to learn that next week Miss Shirley King, who is going to play the part of Lady Teazle in "The School for Scandal", will be making her last appearance in Cologne with the B.R.A.D.C.

Curiously enough Miss King played this very part, as well as that of Portia, to German audiences in 1913, and was very much appreciated. She first came out to occupied territory together with Misses Bensusan and Paul with the Church Army in March 1919.

In may of this year "The Mollusc" was given as a trial performance, Miss King playing the title rôle. She then went back to the Church Army for a fortnight, after which she started with the B.R.A.D.C. in "Man and Superman" and has been with them ever since.

Free with Criticisms.

I often think those who patronise the plays put on by the B.R.A.D.C. rather take the company very much for granted and are somewhat free with their criticisms, little realising the tremendously hard work that is done by these actors and actresses to please us all and lift us up from the ever threatening boredom that is liable to descend upon us during our hours of leisure. Miss Shirley King has undoubtedly been one of the hardest workers of the whole concern.

May I remind my readers of some of her triumphs? The title rôle in "The Mollusc", lead in "Man and Superman", title rôle in "Candida", the bewitching lady in the "Man of Destiny", the daughter in the "Younger Generation", Hildegard in "The Title", Gwendoline in "The Importance of being Earnest", Gloria in "You Never can Tell", Annie Roberts in "Strife", the Girl in "Damaged Goods", Mrs. Jones in "The Silver Box", Mrs. Proctor in "Helen with the High Hand" and (one of her most charming parts) Vera in "The Melting Pot".

COLOGNE OPERA HOUSE.

DAY	OPERA	COMPOSER	START	END
Fri.	Armourer of Worms	Lortzing	7	9.45
Sat.	Carmen	Bizet	7	10.30
Sun.	Flying Dutchman	Wagner	7.30	10.30

This enumeration is evidence in itself of the way in which Miss King has worked, and all those who have had the pleasure of witnessing her varied performance will bear with me in testifying that she is an exceedingly clever actress. Anyone who has ever been on "tour" or been associated with a dramatic company, amateur or professional, knows the importance of having members of the company who will work together in harmony. Petty squabbling and rivalry is often only too rampant, especially amongst the lady members of the company

Charming Personality.

It is, therefore, a great pleasure to me to be able to say from my own personal knowledge of the B.R.A.D.C. that no more willing and charming person could be found to work with than Miss King. Small parts, large parts—it was ever the same, always the same conscientious hard work put into anything she was asked to do, and in these days of partings the loss of Miss King will rank as one of the greatest which the British Army of the Rhine has had to suffer.

The reason of Miss King's departure is in thorough keeping with her charming character, with which we, who know her, are so well acquainted; she leaves us to join a lonely sister in London, who, like herself is worrying over the serious illness of a brother in far-away Australia.

Reports of her brother's illness are at the moment not encouraging, but I feel confident that the sympathies, best wishes, and, above all, the heartfelt gratitude of all of us here will accompany Miss King on her journey home. Miss King has played many parts, but the part she has played which will be always enshrined in the hearts of all of us, is the part of a truly British heroine who has done her duty.

Dance Club.

The third of the fortnightly subscription dances run by No. 1 G.H.Q. Warrant Officers and Sergeants' Mess was held at the Burgergesellschaft on Wednesday and proved a delightful function, easily the best hitherto. To the strains of the G.H.Q. Jazz Band, which has been engaged for the entire series of dances the large company had a thoroughly enjoyable evening.

Prohibition?

To-night's motion for the debate at the British Empire Leave Club will be, "That in the opinion of this House there should be absolute prohibition of the Drink Traffic," moved by Pte. Kenny, R.A.S.C., and opposed by Sgt. Cohen, Educational Instructor, attached 25 General Hospital. All interested should attend by 6.30 sharp.

JACQUES.

OUR COMPETITION.

No. 9 Contest: Final Coupon To-day.

The final coupon in the No. 9 contest appears below. If you have not yet entered for our prize do so now.

In last week's contest one competitor won the prize outright with but nine correct results. Is your knowledge of football form not equal to this?

Turn your attention to the matches now, and make your forecasts.

If you are going to be demobilized and wish to enter for the prize offered, put your home address on the coupon. We have already sent one winning cheque to a "Blighty" address.

In the coupon printed below, strike out the team you think will lose, or, if you predict a draw, leave both teams standing, add your name and address clearly, place the coupon in an envelope with one mark and send it along to this office. Any number of coupons may be sent at the rate of one mark each.

Coupons must be addressed:—

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Thanks, Everybody!

Yesterday congratulations on the "Post" having reached its 200th number poured into our office.

How Many?

I wonder how many soldiers' wives are now in Rhineland. All sorts of figures are talked about, some ridiculously high. Nobody seems to know exactly.

Not Disturbed Now.

Many soldiers billeted in the central part of Cologne used to be worried tremendously by the early morning bell ringing at the churches. They seem to have become acclimatized now, however, and one seldom hears complaints.

Down it Falls.

There are rumours that the mark is likely to drop to at least 200 to the pound. What will happen in Germany then?

Panto.

A great many people seem to be talking in whisners of a forthcoming big Christmas effort in the pantomime line in Cologne. If it is true there must be a lot of unseen preparation going on.

A Contrast.

There was a little farewell gathering of some Tommies in a German café. Several rounds of champagne were consumed—quite an expensive luxury—but when the cigarettes were forthcoming I noticed they were mere "Kingfishers."

English?

Is the well-known "Steeplechase" game really of English origin? I ask because I see it played a good deal in Germany. Tommy's favourite game "House" is of course the Italian "Lotto."

Burglars.

On Wednesday evening the house in which my billet is situated received a visit from burglars. When tackled by a civilian occupant they managed to render him unconscious and make good their escape. However, examination proved they had been disturbed before they could seize any valuables.

Closed for British.

No further burials of British soldiers will take place at the Duren and Euskirchen cemeteries, the French now occupying those districts.

All You can Get.

It is officially stated that the liability of the German railway authorities for compensation for the loss of property deposited in the railway cloak rooms is limited to 100 marks.

Not a Girl in the Case.

Yesterday I met an officer who used to be the most wretched individual in Cologne. Now he is bright and debonair. Then he told me what had caused the change. No — not what you think. He had dropped into a job that meant ten hours solid work a day.

Rumours Again.

There is great excitement at Bonn I hear, owing to the rumour that French troops are to occupy the town very shortly.

Aluminium Utensils.

Many shops are at present making big displays of aluminium goods. These are very popular as Christmas gifts.

A Bit Mixed.

I met a soldier in the Leave Club a few days ago wearing the cap badge of an infantry regiment, R.A.S.C. numerals, and artillery gun buttons.

Mementoes.

I hear that the postcard photos of the British graves in Sudfriedhof, are still selling well. The photographer tells me he is unable to produce prints quickly enough to cope with the enormous demand.

Demobbing Pets.

A soldier going on demobilization wants to take a cat home with him. Another wants to take a mongoose. I hope they will both pass through the customs safely.

Passes Needed.

All ranks proceeding to places in the American, Belgian and French Occupied Areas must be in possession of a Movement Order on Pass signed by their Commanding Officer and counter-signed by an officer of the Provost Branch. Officers and other ranks found in Allied Areas and not in possession of such a Pass or Movement Order will be liable to be arrested as absentees.

Never saw Them.

Many have inquired where I saw the medal which was awarded to the civilians who gave up their gold. Numerous civilians though they were aware that such a medal was issued have never seen it.

The Latest Additions.

I hear that you can now borrow the following recent books from the Y.M.C.A. Central Library: Sir Reginald Bacon's "The Dover Patrol", Stephen Graham's "A Private in the Guards," Sir Edward Cook's "More Literary Recreations," Seton Watson's "Europe in the Melting Pot," Oscar Wilde's "A Critic in Pall Mall," Francis Ledwige's "Complete Poems," Robert Hichens' "Mrs. Marden" and Gertrude Page's "The Veldt Trail."

Cruelty.

I wonder what an R.S.P.C.A. inspector would say if he saw some of the loads the German horses are set to pull. It is absolute cruelty.

Muffins Oh!

There is a fortune awaiting the enterprising individual who starts a muffin round in Cologne. I charge nothing for drawing attention to this untapped source of wealth.

Going Strong.

I went into the N.A.C.B. Coffee Bar in Sternengasse the other evening. There was quite a crowd of Tommies purchasing tea and cakes. There is a very good billiard table in use and a well-stocked canteen down the far end. It seemed to me that it was patronised quite as well as the Staplehaus.

The Rum Tot.

At the discretion of General Officers Commanding Corps and Divisions, on the recommendation of a Medical Officer an issue of rum may be given twice a week during inclement weather.

A Solution.

"When" asks a soldier, evidently weary of the monotony of German cafe orchestras, "may we expect a change from "Unter den Brücken," the old "Après la guerre fini?" Why not patronise British amusements instead? RHINELANDER.

OPINIONS OF THE MOMENT.

BACHELORS' TROUBLES.

Arthur Pendenys, writing on bachelors in that bright monthly, "Books of To-day and Books of To-morrow," says:— People talk of taxing the bachelor, but he is already taxed to the utmost by havin to buy theatre tickets for flappers, and boxes of sweets for her younger sister. It is true that the flapper in her occasional moods of expansion begs her bachelor friend to "tell me your troubles." The bachelor has no troubles really, but the intelligent celibate pretends he has sorrows, so that (metaphorically, of course) he may repose upon the flapper's shoulder and pour out his imaginary woes. The flapper likes this. The circumspect bachelor therefore writes off by return of post relating one trouble in each letter, and so spreads his stories over a long time, the flapper weeping over each one.

GIVE US PEACE!

Mr. Horatio Bottomley, in reviewing the situation as it exists twelve months after the Armistice, says: I earnestly suggest to the Prime Minister that the time has come when we should liquidate our liabilities abroad by making peace with Turkey—with or without the co-operation of the United States—and that a serious effort should be made by the Allied Council at Paris to clear up the mess in Eastern Europe and to arrive at a settled and united policy as regards the affairs of Russia. The fervent prayer of every household in Europe is, "Give peace in our time, O Lord."

SPOILED SONS.

Miss Lillie Ross Clyne writing on "Women who make men selfish," says: How often do we see men thoughtless and almost unkind to their mothers. They let the overworked and sometimes aged and even ailing woman minister to their comforts without offering to lift a finger to help, or even showing gratitude for what is done for them. Yet, should these thoughtless sons happen to marry self-centred, commanding wives, they become as mere willing slaves in their new homes. Why? The answer is simple. The mothers spoil them while the younger women prefer being spoiled themselves.

DISINTEGRATION.

Miss Lena Ashwell, the well-known actress whose concert parties gave delight to thousands of troops during the war, says: In every walk of life the old formulas are being discarded; in a ballroom, for instance everyone used to dance one dance, let us say the waltz. When waltz time was played there was an accepted form, or number, of steps, and everyone accepted the convention, and was a good or bad dancer, through the convention or form of the dance. Now, everyone dances something different, and it is essential for enjoyment to have a partner who is used to dancing with you, or the result is apt to be somewhat chaotic. So originality is supposed to be given a mode of expression. Art in general is going through the same sort of disintegrating process.

BURSTING WITH WEALTH.

Mr. Frederick William Wile, the famous correspondent who has just returned from the States, writing of the enormous wealth the war has brought to America says:—There are 20,000 more millionaires in the United States than before the war. About one-half of all the diamonds in the world, estimated to be worth £200,000,000, are owned in the same country. Importations of pearls jumped from £400,000 in 1912 to over £2,000,000 in 1917. Considerably more than 50 per cent. of the world's gold—some estimates place the amount as high as 75 per cent.—is held in American vaults.

BY THEIR FRUITS.

Dean Inge, in his new volume of "Outspoken Essays", says:—It is becoming impossible for those who mix at all with their fellow-men to believe that the grace of God is distributed denominationally. The Christian virtues, so far as we can see, flower impartially in the souls of Catholic and Protestant, of Churchman and Schismatic, of Orthodox and Heretic. And the test, "by their fruits ye shall know them," cannot be openly rejected by any Christian.

UNPOPULAR GHOSTS.

Mr. A. St. John Adcock the author and literary critic asks:—What has become of the ghost story? Once upon a time, and down to thirty years ago, when spiritualism was unpopular, the vast majority having no belief in it, ghost stories were almost as inseparable from Christmas as Father Christmas himself. Nowadays, when spiritualism flourishes and is comparatively popular, eminent persons vouching for the truth of its phenomena, ghost stories are out of fashion—nobody seems to be reading the old ones and hardly anybody is writing new ones.

WHAT BYE-ELECTIONS MEAN.

Mr. Bonar Law speaking at a political banquet appealed to his hearers not to be frightened by bye-elections. The wave of feeling which returned them to power must have a corresponding ebb-tide. There was a great difference between electing a member of Parliament when everyone know that the Government majority was already perhaps too big, and exercising the same franchise when the issue was what was to be the Government that was to carry on the destinies of the country.

ETERNAL CRIMINAL.

Mr. H. L. Adam, author of "The Story of Crime" says:—The maintenance of the criminal is costing this country a lot of money. It would be a consummation well worth achieving if we could convert him into an asset, or at all events render him self-supporting. I do not wish to advocate a policy of despair, but I am afraid that the wrongdoer, like the pauper, we shall have always with us. We must be practical about the matter and make the best of a bad state of things, not seek transient comfort and false security amid the delusive intricacies of official statistics.

SOMETHING NEW IN EDUCATION.

In the original announcement under this heading it is regretted that it was not specified that German Classes held at the B.E.L.C., were for other ranks only.

Officers and Ladies and Other Ranks however continue to be admitted to the Voluntary Classes in English Literature, French and Shorthand and Typewriting which are being held in Rooms 33, 34 and 35 at the G.H.Q. General and Commercial College.

Appended is a modified Time-Table of the Classes:—

FOR BUSINESS MEN IN RHINELAND.

CO-OPERATION TO SECURE STANDARDIZATION.

Many important combines are taking effect in Germany in order to better withstand foreign competition. There is to be an amalgamation in the Brick and Earthenware Industry and the German Government is now urged to allow all matters concerning this industry to be settled through the combine rather than allow single firms to approach the Goverment.

* * *

There is another amalgamation in the Motor industry affecting the three important motor works—the Nationale Automobilwerke Gesellschaft (N.A.G.), Berlin (a branch of the A.E.G.), the Hansa-Lloydwerke A.G., of Bremen and the Brennaborwerke, in Brandenburg, are combining in order to oppose foreign competition in the motor trade. The chief aim will be to restrict the types of machines and thus set up a few standard types so that mass production can be encouraged. The combine commenced its operations in October.

* * *

These companies, it is stated, have agreed to observe a definite common building programme, including that of body building; and they have already formed their sales agency by the creation of the "Gemeinschaft Deutscher Automobilfabriken" in Berlin, which commenced business in October.

* * *

A memorandum dealing with the measures to be taken for the purpose of standardization in the German automobile business has been published, and discussions are to take place with other works regarding the development and generalisation of this central organisation. It is also to be expected that other similar groups will soon be formed.

* * *

Talking recently to an international coal expert who has just returned from a European survey of the coal question, we were glad to hear that so far as coal production is concerned things are not too bad. England and Germany were the chief coal producing countries and at the present moment England is almost up to its normal pre-war output. Germany is not far behind and the total European output is about 80 per cent. of the normal pre-war figure. Transport is the great difficulty of course, and when the proper distribution organisation can be effected the situation will be greatly relieved. Austria, meanwhile is in terrible straits owing to lack of coal.

The well-known, naval, military and civilian tailors, Messrs R.C. Flack and Co, of Cambridge, now have a representative in Cologne at the Officers' Club, Ewige Lampe, with full ranges of new patterns for all service and civilian dress.

The next Breslau Fair will be held from April 25th to May 1st 1920.

The North-Eastern Association of Buyers of textiles are arranging the opening of a fair at Konigsberg for next spring.

The first official Dantzig Fair will be held next February.

A WORD ABOUT THE FRENCH ELECTIONS.

(FROM A FRENCH CORRESPONDENT.)

France has given her decision. She has proved that she always knows to do the right thing whenever she is in danger. The election vote could be summarised in those three words: work, order, progress.

In many other countries, and even in France, people thought that we could not cut down to its roots the Socialism, or rather the Bolshevism which intended to spread all over the world. We have given the proof that these men had a wrong idea about us.

The new party, which comes in the Chamber of Deputies, called the "Bloc National Republicain" has determined its programme: no use quarrelling among the Frenchmen. We have still the enemy next to our frontier, and he will remain there all the time. Let us all work together; and instead of the struggle of the classes, let us have complete union among the French people; everybody has done his share during the war, everybody must do the same after the victory.

We must work and not lose our time in useless quarrels. This war has unfortunately been in a way much worse for us than for the Germans, for all the industrial part of France has been destroyed, and if it took four years to do so, it will perhaps need half a century to rebuild what was lost.

The French elections have given the best guarantee for the security of the world, and if the other allied nations give to France all the confidence that she deserves and for which she has fought so hard, we shall soon be able o prove to the Allies that we are worthy to stand side by side with them.

HOPE FOR THE PEACE TREATY

AMERICAN SENATE ADJOURNS WITHOUT ARRIVING AT A DECISION.

DARING RAID FOR ARMS IN IRELAND.

NO DECISION.

TREATY IMPASSE IN THE SENATE.

The United States Senate has adjourned until December 1st without having arrived at any definite decision on the Peace Treaty.

Senator Lodge, the chief antagonist to the Treaty, met with two reverses. All reservations having been dealt with, and most of them adopted, he moved the Ratification of the Treaty, with the reservations. This was defeated by 55 votes to 39. A resolution was immediately moved that the motion should come forward again and the Senators agreed. Nevertheless on the second vote it was once more defeated, this time by 51 to 49.

A subsequent motion by Senator Lodge, declaring that the war with Germany is ended, was referred to the Foreign Relations Committee and there the matter rests.

Meanwhile a motion for the appointment of a conciliation committee has been tabled and efforts at compromise are continuing.

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

A REMARKABLE DEPUTATION.

The deputation from the Temperance Council of Christian Churches in England and Wales waited upon the Prime Minister on Thursday to urge the importance of temperance and the retention of the present restrictions until satisfactory reforms have been enacted by Parliament. The composition of the deputation was remarkable, as it included representatives of fourteen denominations, including the Church of England, Roman Catholics, the various Nonconformist Churches, the Society of Friends and the Salvation Army.

The Archbishop of Canterbury introduced the deputation, after which three delegates put their case. Mr. Lloyd George replied at considerable length and promised that their arguments should have careful consideration. Members of the deputation afterwards stated that they considered the results of the meeting as very satisfactory.

MARIE CORELLI VICTIMISED.

At Warwick Assizes Nellie Brown, pleaded guilty to obtaining by false pretences £2 from Mrs. Rice, of Warwick Castle, and £10 from Miss Marie Corelli, of Stratford-on-Avon.

It was stated, accused, who was staying at a hotel at Leamington, under the name of Lady Ramsay, wife of Sir John Ramsay, cousin of Lady Patricia Ramsay's husband, called at Warwick Castle and upon Miss Corelli to arrange about a visit to Lady Patricia. Accused was entertained at lunch at the castle, and she induced Miss Corelli to dine with her at Leamington. Finally, on the pretence that she had been robbed of her purse, she induced the ladies to lend her money to enable her to return to London.

The deputy chief constable said prisoner as a girl was sent to a reformatory from Lincoln. Since then she had served three years' penal servitude. There were several charges outstanding against her in London.

Sentence of eighteen months' imprisonment was passed.

PROTESTS AGAINST PREMIUM BONDS.

The National Free Church Council commenced an active campaign yesterday against the adoption of the Premium Bond system for raising revenue. It has circulated all the local Free Church Councils throughout the country requesting them, as a matter of extreme public urgency, to take up the fight. Amongst other means it recommends personal protests to Local Members of Parliament and the holding of protest meetings.

ROYAL DOCKYARDS MERCANTILE MARINE.

The Mayor of Portsmouth has been appointed to represent Portsmouth on the Committee constituted by the Prime Minister to enquire into the possibility of building merchant ships in the Royal dockyards. This step is contemplated with the idea of obviating wholesale discharges of workmen.

TRAINS TO CENTRAL EUROPE.

The Belgian Government has been requested to arrange for the resumption of the train service to Central Europe, viâ Ostend and Brussels.

The order restricting the consumption of gas and electricity in England has been suspended.

GUN SHOP RAIDED.

LATEST SINN FEIN OUTRAGE IN IRELAND.

In the presence of hundreds of passers-by and while a group of policemen were on duty within a stone's throw of the place, Sinn Feiners on Tuesday raided the shop of Messrs. T. W. Murray and Co., gunsmiths in the principal street of Cork. The fact that the raiders did not attract attention either in entering or leaving the premises with the booty is an indication of the coolness and skill with which the outrage was committed.

An assistant, who carried the keys of the premises, was followed, and, at a lonely part of the suburbs, he was set upon by a gang of masked and armed men who covered him with revolvers, took him into a field, and took from him the keys of the shop. Two other men then came up, took the muffler off his neck, and bound it round his mouth and eyes, after which they tied his hands behind his back with a rope and left him behind a hedge.

Taking his keys, the gang returned to the shop, which they opened and cleared of all the sporting guns and rifles, which they sewed up in canvas.

At the same moment a motor-car drove up, and the men left in it, locking the door after them.

Nothing was known of the raid until the assistant who had been waylaid worked himself free from the ropes that bound him and informed the police.

The raiders got away in a motor car shortly before the police arrived at the shop. Not since the Fenian movement, when the notorious Captain Mackey, with an armed party, raided a gunshop in the same street, has such a daring attempt to secure arms been made in Cork.

Mr. O'Keefe, the manager, said to a press representative that when the Arms Act was revoked in 1903 the trade in arms in Ireland got into the wrong hands, with the result that the country is now full of shot guns, revolvers, and ammunition. In Dublin, Belfast, and Cork the quantity of arms sold between that year and the war would not be permitted even in a South American State, and it would be a revelation if the Customs authorities had kept a record of the quantities imported.

No arrests have been made.

LABOUR BOROUGH COUNCIL.

INCREASES MUNICIPAL WAGES.

Bermondsey South London Borough Council, now composed of Progressive and Labour representatives, with only six Moderates, after deciding to grant the Mayor a salary of £300, resolved to give all their workmen an increase in wages of £1 a week, the minimum wage, including war bonus, to be £4 a week.

The women employed by the council are to be treated in the same way. Employees who are receiving advanced wages under any arbitration award are not to be affected by this increase. The minimum salary before the war was 30s. a week.

R. A. F. AND WAR OFFICE.

NO CHANGE IN POLICY.

In the House of Commons on Thursday Lord Hugh Cecil asked whether the Prime Minister's attention had been called to the anxiety which exists in regard to relations between the War Office and the Royal Air Force, and whether the Government would make a full statement as to their policy.

The Premier said there had been no change whatever in the Government's policy, but although he saw no reason for any discussion, if there was a general desire for one he would try to arrange it.

HOSPITAL SHIP'S PLIGHT.

The British hospital ship King Edward was towed into Christiansund yesterday by a torpedo boat. The King Edward was proceeding from Murmansk to London when she was caught in a storm about eighty miles off Lerwick and she drifted helplessly until yesterday, when she established wireless communication with the Grip lightship. When picked up the vessel had scarcely any coal and the cabins were full of water.

EGYPTIAN STUDENTS' CHATTER.

The Egyptian students now domiciled in Manchester are boasting that "Egypt will never acknowledge any foreign supremacy under any form. Egyptians have nothing more to say to Lord Milner's Commission. Any such supremacy will have to be maintained by force of arms."

NO REDRESS.

SPECIOUS ALLEGATIONS OF ATROCITIES.

A question was asked in the House of Commons yesterday as to whether the attention of the Government had been called to a publication called "The Egyptian Circular", which had been widely circulated among members of the House, containing seditious matter and whether the Government was taken any steps to prevent its further circulation.

The Home Secretary, Mr. Shortt, replied: "I have seen the publication. It contains allegations as to atrocities by British soldiers in Egypt which are certainly untrue, but they are so framed as to make prosecution difficult, if not impossible. No charges against specific persons are made so that proceedings for libel are not possible. It would be difficult to prosecute under the Defence of the Realm Regulations, when witnesses who could refute the statements are now in Egypt or scattered over the world. I am considering, however, what other action may be possible."

GREAT GOLD FIND.

INDIAN DISCOVERS RICH DEPOSITS.

Wonderful stories of marvellous gold finds have come from the newly discovered goldfields in the Copper Lake region, sixty-five miles North of Lepas, Manitoba, and also at Contact Bay, about 200 miles East of Winnipeg. It is said that one man recently came into Lepas with a canoe loaded with sacks full of gold, which he wanted to be made into ingots. There is an extraordinary stampede of prospectors, who are rushing to the new fields, and Winnipeg stores are doing tremendous business in fitting out expeditions.

The circumstances of the gold find itself sound like an old Klondike tale. The story goes that an Indian prospector Jacob Cook, while on the way to his cabin by Copper Lake, tripped and fell over a spur of quartz. Angered by his fall he struck the spur with his pick and saw evidence of gold. In a few minutes he had opened up a streak four inches wide and several feet deep, which assayers declare is almost pure gold.

"BE PATIENT WIT HUS".

EX-PRESIDENT'S PLEA FOR AMERICA.

Ex-President Taft was one of the speakers at a New York dinner given on Thursday in honour of the Prince of Wales by seven of the British Societies in New York. After he had paid an eloquent tribute to the Prince, Mr. Taft undertook to explain why some Americans find it difficult to adjust themselves to new conditions, now that for the first time in history the United States has been asked to join political combinations in Europe.

He said: "A great body of American people realize that they must unite with other nations in saving the world from future catastrophe. European nations must be patient with us."

After the dinner the Prince of Wales went to the residence of Mrs. Whitelaw Reid to attend a dance given in his honour.

NEW CARDINALS.

At the Consistory in the middle of December, besides the new Cardinals already known, the following will be consecrated Cardinals: Mgr. Saldevilla Romero, Archbishop of Saragossa; Mgr. Edmund Dalbor, Archbishop of Posen. The Pope will also announce the appointment of Mgr. Bertram, Archbishop of Breslau, whose elevation to the Cardinalate was reserved 'in pectore' in the Consistory of 1916. The conferment of the red hat upon Mgr. Ragones, Papal Nuncio at Madrid, is uncertain, the Spanish Government having insisted upon Mgr. Ragonesi remaining there.

UNEMPLOYED BRICKLAYERS.

Mr. Wardle, replying to Lieut.-Colonel Sir S. Hoare (C.U., Chelsea), in the House of Commons, said that on Nov. 7th 728 bricklayers and 840 bricklayers' labourers were drawing out-of-work donation.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir S. Hoare: Has the Minister of Labour called the attention of the Ministry of Health to this fact in view of their housing scheme?

Mr. Wardle: Many times.

PROFITEERING NET.

In the near future a number of new commodities will be brought within the scope of the Profiteering Act. The Committee on Trusts is investigating the effect on prices of the combine controlled by the Imperial Tobacco Company. Evidence has already been taken from several well-known firms in the combine. Lever's soap prices are also being enquired into.

SUPREME COUNCIL IMPATIENT.

The Supreme Council, sitting under the presidency of M. Pichon, decided yesterday to urge that all necessary efforts should be made to enable the Peace Treaty to come into force on the 1st December.

DILLY-DALLY.

LABOUR MINISTRY'S FATAL DELAY.

A crisis due to a peculiar combination of circumstances has arisen in the London building trade. The National Conciliation Board decided on the 4th November to increase the wages of mechanics by two pence halfpenny, and of labourers by threepence an hour, this decision being communicated to the Ministry of Labour for ratification. The Ministry, however, referred the matter for report, and advice to a Court of Arbitration which it was anticipated would deal it on Friday. The employers and workmen's organisations were informed on Thursday that the Court of Arbitration would not meet as expected, as it could not deal with the matter, and advise the Minister of Labour in sufficient time as to enable him to give a decision before the expiration of the Wages (Temporary) Regulation Act.

The master-builders telegraphed to the Minister of Labour on Thursday night stating that in the circumstances the advances would not be paid, declaring that the responsibility of any labour troubles which might ensue must rest with the Minister owing to his refusal to give a decision.

The Secretary of the London operatives stated that the workmen are just as indignant about the delay as are the masters. They too agree that the responsibility for any trouble must rest entirely with the Ministry of Labour. Their Council meets to-day to review the position.

BELGIAN ELECTIONS.

SOCIALIST GROUP SUCCESSES.

The results of the general election show that the new Belgian Chamber will be composed of seventy-three members of the Right, (Catholic), seventy Socialists, and thirty-four Liberals. Nine seats go to various parties, including the Combatants, the Middle-Class, and the Christian Democrats. The former Chamber was constituted as follows: Members of the Right, 99; Liberals, 45; Socialists, 40; and Democrats, 2. Yesterday's returns are the first results of the application of universal suffrage, pure and simple, previous Chambers having been elected by plural suffrage.

Amongst the successful candidates at Antwerp was M. Camille Huysmans, the secretary of the Internationale. No candidate with Bolshevist leanings has been elected.

The Socialists have gained numerous seats, but the result only confirms the equilibrium which was virtually established when universal suffrage was introduced. King Albert has commenced consultations with politicians, but the Ministry will not be constituted before the end of this month.

"IT'S A LONG, LONG WAY."

The Tipperary County Council has adopted a resolution expressing horror at the numerous outrages committed in the country and calling on every public body in Ireland to do its utmost to bring the perpetrators of such crimes to justice. It also requests the clergy of all denominations to condemn such outrages.

CONFIDENCE AND THRIFT.

During the past twelve months the sales of War Saving certificates have averaged nearly nine and a half millions per month as compared with eight millions a month during the war. There are now seventeen million holders of Government securities of one kind or another.

TRAWLER SUNK BY MINE.

The fishing boat "Ocean Crest the Second" of Yarmouth, struck a mine and sank off Cromer. The skipper and another were killed, but the rest of the crew were picked up.

AN UNNECESSARY STRIKE.

Sir Cyril Jackson, the arbitrator in the North Riding Elementary School teachers' strike, has given his award. It grants increases of salaries identical with those offered by the County Council while the teachers were on strike, which they refused. It will be remembered that the strike lasted for seventeen weeks.

HANDBOOK FOR EX-OFFICERS.

The Imperial Ex-Services Association, 34, Grosvenor-place, has issued an "Ex-Officers' Handbook," compiled by Captain H. H. C. Baird, which gives in clear summary all that a retired or discharged officer should know about his pension and other rights.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

The senate of the University of London has appointed Sir Cooper Perry to the post of principal officer, which has been in abeyance since Sir Henry Miers's resignation in the summer of 1915. He will take up his new duties on Feb. 1 next.

Sir Francis Mowatt, who from 1894 to 1903 was permanent Secretary to the Treasury, died on Thursday at the advanced age of eighty-two.

UNION TYRANNY.

CO-PARTNERS EXCLUDED FROM MEMBERSHIP.

Hundreds of co-partner employees of Messrs Lever Brothers, all Trade Unionists, held a meeting at Port Sunlight on Thursday to protest against the decision of the National Association of Carpenters and Joiners excluding from the Union any employees of Lever Brothers who benefit under that firm's co-partnership scheme.

Speakers said that Trade Unionists had been fighting for years for a share of the profits they helped to make and now that Lever's co-partnership scheme was a success there were trade unionists attempting to smash it.

A resolution was carried, amid cheers, pledging those concerned to resist such interference to the utmost. This practically means that the men will throw over the Trade Union rather than forego the benefits they receive under the scheme.

D'ANNUNZIO'S INTENTIONS.

REPORTED DESIGNS ON MONTENEGRO.

The following semi-official message from Spalato says:—

According to information from a very reliable quarter D'Annunzio is preparing a new raid, this time on Split (Spalato). It is stated that the original intention was to carry out this raid simultaneously with that on Zara, but it was postponed at the last moment, and D'Annunzio, who returned to Fiume on November 15 in a warship, will return in accordance with his own statement to Zara on November 22. Then he will carry out his programme.

Fifteen thousand troops and a naval detachment have arrived at Zara from Italy. The destination of this force is Split. A portion of the naval and military force is to go to Montenegro in accordance with a plan to attack that country either from Cattaro or some point inland. There are very large stores of arms and ammunition at Zara, and the whole route, particularly the strategic points on the frontier, is mined.

Admiral Millo has completely submitted to D'Annunzio and is working in harmony with him. On his voyage to Zara D'Annunzio was accompanied by the cruiser Cortelazzo, the large destroyer Nolo, and torpedo-boat No. 66.

A LAZY FRAUD.

NO INDUCEMENT TO WORK.

Mr. Bingley, the magistrate at Tower Bridge Police Court, mentioned yesterday the case of a woman who came to complain that she could not clean her bedroom because her husband, who was fit and well, stayed in bed all day and smoked.

The Court Missionary was sent to investigate and ascertained that the man was getting both an Army pension and the out-of-work donation, making together fifty shillings a week. The man said he did not see why he should work while he was getting that money.

The Missionary was of the same opinion.

So was the magistrate, who added that it was nasty cold weather and he rather envied the man.

"LOST AMONG THE HILLS."

In the Divorce Court, before Mr. Justice Hill, Hill v. Hill, a wife's suit on Thursday for judicial separation, was called on. A Mr. Hill appeared to conduct his own case. As counsel was opening the petitioner's case Mr. Hill exclaimed, "I never heard such a story! This isn't my case at all."

It then appeared that there was another case of Hill v. Hill for judicial separation, which had not yet come into the list, and counsel and his client in that case happened to be in the Court, and they came in to have the suit heard.

Counsel then said to the Mr. Hill, "May I take it that you are Mr. Hill, and the Christian names are—? "The respondent replied. "You may take it that the Christian names are nothing of the kind, and you are lost—lost, sir, among the Hills!"

MAD MURDERER SENTENCED.

His mind unhinged by the part he had to play as a juryman in the Prah-road murder trial, Walter Payne, of Kilburn, attacked his wife and two daughters with a hammer.

When he was indicted at the Old Bailey yesterday for killing Mrs. Payne a verdict of guilty, but insane, was returned, and the judge ordered him to be detained during His Majesty's pleasure.

LAST OF THE CONDUCTRESSES.

The last of the conductresses on the Underground Railways left the service on Tuesday, and were presented with certificates in recognition of their valuable work by Lady Stanley, wife of Sir Albert Stanley, at the L.G.O.C. Training School, Chelsea.

RAILWAY SHOPS CLOSED.

Owing to the lack of castings caused by the ironmoulders strike which began early in October and still continues, the majority of the shops at Crewe railway works have been shut down until Monday.

CAMP EPISODE.

STRANGE STORY OF AN ARMED VISITOR.

A strange story was told to the Woking Magistrate yesterday by Lieut. George Carter, Somerset Light Infantry, who charged a man named Gray with stealing a suit of clothes, a greatcoat and a revolver.

Lieut. Carter said that on returning to his room at Pirbright Camp at 3 a.m. on November 3rd he found his clothes were missing. Outside he saw the prisoner, who said he was an officer just back from Brookwood. Noticing that prisoner was covering him with an automatic pistol, Lieut. Carter then feigned intoxication and asked prisoner if he had a drink on him. The two then proceeded together to the guard's hut, accused constantly keeping Lieut. Carter covered with the pistol. Prisoner entered the hut, came out with a bottle of whisky and invited Lieut. Carter to go to his (prisoner's) hut, where they played cards till five. During the whole time prisoner had the pistol either in his hand or on the table beside him. Prisoner admitted, said Carter, that he was not an officer but a crook. Carter left him about 5 a.m. and did not see him again until 2 a.m. on the 19th, when he found him in the Camp wearing the missing clothes.

Gray was remanded till Monday, when it is understood other charges will be preferred.

OLD MYSTERY RECALLED.

From time to time the Stinie Morrison case is recalled to mind by allegations that new light can be shed on that mysterious crime.

It is officially stated, however, that no fresh facts have been brought before the Home Office recently, regarding the conviction of Stinie Morrison, who is undergoing a life sentence for the murder of Leon Beron on Clapham Common.

Mr. Claud Lumley, the solicitor instructing Morrison's counsel at the Old Bailey, is in communication with a soldier who is said to be in possession of information which will throw new light on the case.

Mr. Lumley, who, shortly after the trial in 1911, said that he would not rest until he had secured Morrison's release, is now awaiting the demobilization of the soldier before presenting another appeal with this object.

The body of Leon Beron was found on Clapham Common, S. W. London, on the morning of January 1st 1911. One mysterious feature of the crime was the fact that the letter "S" had been cut on the murdered man's cheeks. The theory held was that "S" stood for the Polish word "Spik," or spy. Stinie Morrison, who was the last man seen with Beron, was sentenced to death but was reprieved.

ALLIES BALTIC POLICY.

Replying to questions as to the maritime policy in the Baltic Mr. Lloyd George stated in the House that the policy was that of the Allied and Associated Powers, not of Great Britain alone.

In the strict sense of the term there had been no blockade of Russian ports. The Allies had been engaged in helping the Baltic Provinces to struggle against the Bolshevist Government. This involved operations to prevent Bolshevist warships from bombarding the ports and assisting Bolshevist troops, and also hindering the entry to Baltic ports of supplies useful to those troops.

The question had now been solved by the ice and it was not proposed that a British Fleet should undertake the patrol of the Baltic in the Spring.

MURDERER REPRIEVED.

The solicitors acting on behalf of Joseph Roy Hutty, the Canadian soldier who was sentenced to death at Liverpool Assizes for the murder of Nurse Jones, whom he shot on the steps of the Northern Hospital, have received a communication from the Home Secretary that, after considering all the circumstances, he felt warranted in advising a respite of the capital sentence with a view to its being commuted to one of penal servitude for life. The signatures to the petition for reprieve, which included those of the Lord Mayor of Liverpool and the leaders of the parties in the City Council, totalled 34,000.

CLEMENCEAU UNDECIDED.

It is considered unlikely, says Reuter's Paris correspondent, that M. Clemenceau will remain in office, although there is a remote possibility that he may be persuaded to stand for the Presidency. M. Millerand will probably have the greatest backing in the new Chamber, as M. Briand seems to have lost ground. M. Barthous and Viviani are mentioned as likely members of a Millerand Cabinet.

ADVICE TO OPERA LOVERS.

Lecturing on "How to Listen to Music," Mr. S. H. Nicholson said there should be a happy medium between the mere unintelligent "hearer" and the musical critic. The educated listener should be acquainted with such rudiments as melody, rhythm, and harmony, and perhaps also tone colour, and he should have some understanding of musical form, the basis of which was repetition and contrast.

THE MIDDLE CLASSES.

A section of the middle classes of Great Britain is to-day experiencing a time of difficulty and acute financial stress which it is almost impossible to exaggerate.

We refer to the professional class and more particularly to that section of the community living on fixed incomes, which, prior to the war, while admitting of no extravagance, allowed of the maintenance of a home and family in comfort.

The War has changed all that and now this class is metaphorically in the tight closed jaws of a pair of pincers. On the one hand their incomes have been greatly reduced as a result of the unprecedented amounts required as income tax, while on the other the almost trebled cost of living has minimised the purchasing power of the remainder to only a fraction of what it originally was.

One by one the little luxuries in which they had been wont to indulge have become impossible and in many cases the pittance remaining is insufficient to provide the necessaries of life.

There is a serious national aspect to the problem which is too readily ignored. The birthrate of the middle classes is falling rapidly, while the death rate, never very high, is showing no such tendency. If the present state of affairs is to continue, then the only result can be the slow extinction of the class.

Not only is the birthrate declining, but the marriage-rate has also fallen. Young couples are in no hurry to embark upon a married life which can only, with the present taxation, cost of living and price of houses, bring in its train discomfort and difficulty and a consequent deterioration of health. In order to escape the financial strain which it must involve, young men are avoiding marriage. Bachelordom is on the increase, and must carry with it inevitable and evil consequences.

If the "backbone of the nation," as the middle class have been rightly called, are allowed to go under or to become so seriously handicapped that they are unable to carry on their natural function, dire and disastrous results must accrue.

It is this class which has supplied the majority of the professions and produced a great number of soldiers and sailors, thinkers and administrators, a service which as a nation we can ill afford to dispense with at the present juncture.

OF MILITARY IMPORTANCE!

The tram came to a standstill, and my wife and I climbed hastily aboard in order to escape the driving rain. We seated ourselves as comfortably as the wooden seats permitted, and were just congratulating ourselves that we would soon be home, visions of a warm room and of a huge dinner were rising before my eyes—I am essentially materialistic and my wife accuses me of having no soul—when the conductor ambled up with a smile which nearly disturbed his balance.

"Bitte!" he ejaculated looking inquiringly at my wife. I saw her gaze travel down to her arm to see if her beloved brassard was in position.

"What does the man want?" she asked with exasperation in her voice. "I haven't forgotten my arm band." I had a guilty feeling as I remembered a recent G.R.O stating that in future ladies, not in uniform, must pay on the trams, and I dug my pocket case out of my pocket, produced a piece of dirty paper which had once been orange in colour, murmured a prayer that my German accent should be irreproachable, and said "Funf und zwanzig!"

The conductor beamed, opened his book of tickets and produced a piece of paper labelled "25" which he presented to me, taking care first to tear off one corner in case I should feel disposed to cheat.

While this transaction was in progress my wife regarded me with amazement, and, after gasping for breath she exclaimed, "What on earth are you paying for?"

"New order," I replied, hoping that none of the passengers could understand English and see how the mighty were fallen.

"Whose order?" was the next question. "Commander-in-Chief, I presume?" I answered, "All ladies except those in uniform must pay."

"Yes, but why should we?"

My wife, being one of the female sex, was unable to accept an order, even by such an august person as the Commander-in-Chief, as final.

"Why shouldn't you?" I replied. "You are only a civilian."

"Well then why should other ladies be exempt because they wear uniform?"

"Presumably because they are doing work of military importance," was my reply, my tongue curling lovingly round the last words—I love that phrase. My wife subsided for the time being, but reopened the attack when we were safely at home.

"Am I not doing work of military importance?" she asked. I flatter myself that my brain can follow most people, but this last question left me puzzled. I failed absolutely to see what work my wife was doing of military importance, other than consuming army rations, and I said so.

My wife regarded my failure to follow her argument with contempt, and remarked, "Isn't it of military importance to keep a hulking great ruffian like you well fed and in good health? Where would you be if I were not here?"

My mind flew back to the first months in Cologne and to some cosy cabarets, and I very narrowly escaped answering her question literally, but decided that it would be wiser not to do so, so I merely shrugged my shoulders and replied that orders were orders, and must be obeyed.

My wife now enters trams armed with the necessary pieces of orange paper, but she pays her fare with a grudge in her heart, as nothing on earth can convince her that she is not doing work of military importance.

HARRIS BARTLETT.

THE WORK OF THE ORDNANCE SURVEY.

The work of the Ordnance Survey is the subject of a discursive and informing article in "The Contemporary" by Lieut.-Col.-Mozley. R.E.:—The Ordnance Survey has many dealings with the public, who are often called upon to assist in the correct production of the national maps. Nomenclature, for instance, is almost entirely in the hands of local persons, nor would we undertake to christen any new edifice without the concurrence of at least two god-parents as sureties for the name. This recalls a correspondence I fell into with a well-known writer of guide books.

It was one morning when a punctured bicycle detained me at Clapham (the prettiest village in Yorkshire, not excepting Thornton Dale) that I came upon a magazine article by this gentleman, in which he roundly accused us of putting a mountain in Westmorland two miles out of place! Even a Government official will turn if treated with overmuch contumely so I got into communication with the writer, and invited an explanation.

HOW ANTIQUARIES HELP.

It then turned out that his quarrel was not with us, but with the persons who had given to a hill in Lakeland a name which, my correspondent asserted, had been filched from an eminence in the next valley. A very pleasant friendship, founded on a mutual love of rock climbing, has resulted from this altercation.

"The antiquaries, however, are our readiest allies, and often, I grieve to say, our bitterest enemies. Several propositions may confidently be made about antiquarians. First, they will always come to our help and give an opinion; secondly, if you believe them all, the map of England will resemble the British Museum spread out; thirdly, you can never know which to believe, since it is practically axiomatic with any antiquarian that all other antiquarians in his line of business are heretics.

"The survey theoretically attempts to record as much information about antiquities connected with the land as is generally agreed on by experts. It must, however, in practice record a little more than that; otherwise, for reasons given, the map would have to be silent on the subject of archaeology. A sort of Court of Appeal has, therefore, to be set up, and the evidence on the case weighed. It is a curious position for a soldier to find himself in, that of a judge in intricate technical questions involving immense learning, and although endeavour is made to keep fairly abreast of the subject by the use of county histories and guide books, it is impossible to expect much detailed knowledge from officers of the Survey when such a wide extent of country is being covered from month to month.

THE VALUE OF EVIDENCE.

"It becomes largely a question of judging the value of evidence. For instance, when, as has happened to me, a gentleman sends you a voluminous letter upon some Roman roads not hitherto mentioned in any guide book, and encloses a picture postcard of himself carrying the legend, 'The——antiquary,' his evidence has to be received with some reserve.

The clergy, again, although often of the utmost use, and always immensely willing, are liable to undue enthusiasm in recreating in their own parish the records of the Caesars and the Plantagenets.

There was one dear old boy, the vicar of a North Riding parish, who had re-established within half a mile of his church a British pit dwelling, a Roman camp, and a twelfth century battlefield. None of these had up to then found their way into the Ordnance map, nor was it possible to relieve his discontent by reminding him that the Survey adhered to the Biblical requirement of at least two witnesses.

THE CLERGY'S AID.

"In spite, however, of a certain tendency to local pride at the expense of historical truth, there is no greater service that the rural clergy render to England, next to their spiritual work, than their solicitude for the records of the past.

In so few parishes is there any one except the parson who cares two straws about the business. The land for others is either the rendezvous for their sport, or the mere scene of their breadwinning. Neither the squire nor the labourer, at least in the writer's experience, has as a rule anything to tell of the associations of the parish with the past glories and trials of England.

To be entirely just, it should be added that the labourer often possesses and hands down a pot-pourri of romance and remembrance which, though impossible to disentangle, may be a valuable confirmation of documentary evidence. Such a work as the late Canon Atkinson did for Cleveland in his 'Forty Years in a Moorland Parish' is pure gold. No one who has read that book can look upon the countryside in just the same careless way as he did before.

THE MEANING OF THE DOM.

And thou shalt know this city in that whon thou art yet a great way off thou shalt beheld from wheresoever thou comest Two Great Spires.

Although we may justly quarrel with the style of Cologne Cathedral, and regret somewhat that its builders threw old German tradition to the winds to take their inspiration from the France their children were to hate; although we may say that as a result their work shows much pedantic artificiality, yet we must not deny to them the accomplishment of a great design.

What does its Cathedral mean to Cologne?

Here is a city built on a plain, one to which nature has denied all advantage of site, a city hid because it is not set upon a hill.

The problem before its builders was this. They had by their work to give a mighty expression to this voiceless place; to make it speak as it ought to the flat lands around; to make it tell the farmers out East and West, North and South, that here was a market for the fruits of their fields — and the boatman leaning on the oaken tiller of his ship that round but another bend was the haven of his desire. And they did it by gathering all the twisted streets, all the crazy rabble of roofs and chimneys, the hum of its business, the laugh of its mirth and the moan of its sorrows under the shadow of this mighty House of God.

I look back at the city from the wooded slopes that rise towards the East, where now the trees are paying back Mother Earth for her Gift of Spring. The mists of evening spread slowly across the long flat valley of the Rhine, and through the blue haze I see the two Great Spires.

What city is this? The kindly veil hides all its blatant modernity; the cruel strong beauty of its bridges, and the hard clever lines of its warehouses and public buildings. Fancy sees only the old grey town where men of peace dwelt under the shadow of the House of God. I can pick out too the lesser churches, St. Martin, St. Aposteln, St. Maria im Kapitol, and a dozen others clustering like children round their mother. Yonder too is the tower of the Rathaus, symbol of that old Burghal Life that made the Middle Ages great in many ways.

So does the Present slip from us, this fervid present when the unbridled desires of men have swept together into the mighty cataclysm of War, and left the world weak and weary as a man who has felt on his brow for a moment the cold hand of Death. And so too do we step for a brief minute into the past and find again the clue of that which we have lost and must struggle to regain.

The mists rise higher, the evening falls and the Two Great Spires fade away into the darkness of Night. Y. M. K.

BROTHERHOOD.

The glorious day will come, rich fraught
With blessings that will banish hate,
And peace to its great throne be brought
By citizens of noble state.

True freedom yet shall belt the world,
And men to men real brothers be;
When binding chains away are hurled,
Then all will live in harmony.

Hold High Truth's torch, and hold it fast,
Till darkness shall be all dispelled,
Its glorious beams around far cast,
Till things that hate the light are quelled.

When each casts out the will to strife,
And fans the flame of amity,
Shall translate in his daily life,
The laws and rules of liberty.

GEORGE DENYS FAYERS.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX.

Our Readers' Varied Views.

CHRISTMAS IS COMING.

Sir,—The appearance of numerous brightly covered Christmas numbers of magazines on the bookstalls, reminds one of the rapid approach of the festive season.

May I remind all those whose job it is to organise the greatest dinner of the year, that the tameness of the majority of seasonable Army functions is largely due to the fact that matters are usually left to the last minute.

Now is the time to begin to think out a programme suitable to the occasion. Too much time cannot be spent upon organization and it will be found that by beginning preparations at once, many little "stunts" will come to mind to gladden the hearts of those for whom you are catering. On the other hand if the essentials have to be rushed, many details will be overlooked. F.G.

NEGLECTED HOCKEY.

Sir,—Several attempts appear to have been made in Rhineland to popularise the excellent game of hockey, but apparently nothing has come of them. It is indeed surprising that such apathy should be shown towards so healthy and exciting a phase of sport.

Last winter similar efforts to form hockey clubs were equally unproductive in results, but it was then argued, in extenuation, that lack of playing materials made the game impossible.

There can be no such excuse now and I am consequently at a loss to understand the total absence of enthusiasm.

PLAYER.

RECKONING THE MARK.

Sir,—I really must query your correspondent, "Marker's" assertion that the value of the mark is the same to "Jerry" as before the war. What possible authority has he got for such an amazing statement, or the following one that wages have risen practically on the same scale as prices?

I have closely questioned amongst others, several of the German clerks employed in this office. Their statements are all to the following effect. Wages for clerks, employés of business houses etc. have increased from 100 to 150 per cent. Wages for members of trade unions up to possibly 300 per cent., not more.

Now take the case of prices of bare necessities of existence. Is "Marker" prepared to deny that food prices have increased 900—1,000 per cent.. Let him look at the provision shops, read the prices of such articles as margarine, bread, butter, rice, meat, potatoes and then find out their pre-war cost.

Clothes and furniture are more than 1,000 per cent. over pre-war cost. Only rents (owing to prohibition by authorities) have not been increased by more than, I believe, 50 per cent., at most.

I maintain if this be correct, the mark cannot be worth more than 15 pfgs. to employés and the working classes in Germany. QUERY.

DO WE READ TOO MUCH?

Sir,—"Read too much?" Impossible. The failing with most of us is that we read too little. And when I speak of reading, I don't mean popular periodicals or even novels but serious books. We can well absorb what the great minds have written and still think for ourselves, but the majority of us have not got great minds—far from it—and are not trained to think.

True we can observe and make our own deductions and no one would I am sure wish to discourage this, but "Rural" is giving unsound advice in saying that we are reading to much. That is impossible.

The Germans are voracious readers; always ready to learn and profit by what philosophers and thinkers who give their lives to study and reflection have penned for our benefit. They are our formidable opponents. If we took "Rural's" pernicious advice we should be playing into their hands. T.T.T.

A LATE CLUB.

Sir, — The request of "Orderly Room" appears to be unreasonable. The number affected is probably not great, and if they do work till about eight o'clock I am pretty sure they get time for recreation during the day. To expect any organisation to provide a special club for them is outside of all reason.

No Army anywhere or at any time has been favoured with so many privileges as ours on the Rhine. It is really wonderful what is being done for us all and no reasonable man can expect more.

The next thing to be suggested, I shouldn't wonder will be a sort of Ciro's open all night for jaded orderly room clerks. There must be a limit.

ANGRY.

CIVILIANS IN OFFICERS' CLUBS.

Sir,—We should be glad if you would publish our letter in answer to "Never Die's" childish complaint.

Does "Never Die" wish to place his fellow Englishmen, even though unfortunate civilians on the same footing as "Jerry" and go begging for a smoke or be fleeced by German shopkeepers?

Evidently "Never Die" is not aware that the N.A.C.B. do not grant passes to a civilian for the mere asking, so that as ex-officers and other ranks we would prefer "Never Die" to give vent to his petty jealousies in a worthier manner, and would also like to point out that 90 per cent. of the civilians which "Never Die" has seen coming from the Officers' Clubs have not very long ago left their khaki behind, which possibly he has only just donned.

We are indeed grateful to the authorities for these privileges, which perhaps some day "Never Die" will wish to avail himself of.

TO CORRESPONDENTS AND CONTRIBUTORS.

Names and addresses, not necessarily for publication, please.

Several times have we made this request yet continually do we receive letters and articles with no more than a "nom de plume" attached.

All MSS., letters, drawings etc. must carry the name and official address of the person sending it in. Do not put it only on the covering letter, put it on the MSS. or other thing enclosed. And please print it in block letters; we are too busy to decipher cryptograms.

A TALK TO REFEREES.

BY

F. DUCKWORTH.

(THE FAMOUS FULL-BACK OF BLACKBURN ROVERS AND ENGLISH INTERNATIONAL.)

Perhaps it is only the football player who really appreciates all the difficulties with which the football referee is faced. In fact, I can assure you that at the end of a football match it is quite a common thing for such expressions as this to be heard in the players' dressing-room. "I wouldn't have been the referee to-day for fifty quid." It is indeed a thankless task, for in the first place the referee has to control twenty-two men who are in a highly strung state, and who are apt to do things they ought not to do in the heat of the contest.

Again, the work of the referee who controls a big match is done in full view of a large number of people. Some of them know the rules and are severe on the referee who does not interpret them correctly. Others are not so conversant with rules as they ought to be, but that does not seem a satisfactory reason for withholding criticism. In the Lancashire town in which I play football they have a popular saying: "There's nowt so queer as folk." I sometimes think that the phrase ought to be altered, and that it would be better if it read: "There's nowt so queer as folk, except football players and football spectators."

Now, although, as I say, I am fully aware of the difficult task which confronts the football referee, it is still true that some of them make more mistakes than they otherwise might make, and in quite a friendly way, I want to say one or two things about refereeing from the players' point of view.

UNNECESSARY STOPPAGES.

In the first place, I think the most popular of our referees are those who allow themselves to intrude on the play to the smallest possible extent. On the other hand, the referee who is not liked either by the players or the spectators is the man who seems to have an idea that the people have paid their money to hear him blow his whistle. Oh, I know very well that the whistle is often very necessary, and that with the best will in the world the referee will sometimes be called upon to officiate at a game which absolutely demands the whistle time after time. On the other hand, there are referees who blow quite a lot when it is not necessary for them to do so. The slightest breach of the rules, whether stopping the game for the breach will benefit the offending side or not, and the whistle goes. Now, I believe, the football spectator likes to see a game which is kept going from start to finish, and as a player I certainly enjoy that type of game better than the one in which there are frequent stoppages. Continual blowing of the whistle for mere technical offences simply irritates the players; gets them cross with themselves and with each other, and the result is more work for the referee.

How many times in the course of the average season does the footballer get pulled up when the ball hits his hands absolutely accidentally? In the same way, fair charges are often penalised, and again there are some referees who do not always remember that to stop a game for a foul may benefit the side which was guilty of fouling. Under these three heads there are quite a lot of stoppages which could well be avoided, and every unnecessary stoppage tends to spoil the game both for onlookers and players.

As a rule, referees are quite tactful and diplomatic in the manner in which they treat the player who offends against the spirit of the game. But now and again one comes up against a referee of the ultra-autocratic type who is apt to "get the player's backs up" by the way in which he treats them to a public lecture if they should overstep the mark in the heat of the contest. A quiet word in a player's ear will probably have more real effect than a long sermon delivered with a finger pointed in the direction of the dressing-room—a finger which says to every man in the crowd: "If you do that again I shall send you off the field."

WHY PLAYERS OVERSTEP THE MARK.

I appreciate the fact that the troubles of the referee come to him in this direction because of players who break the rules. You may consider it regrettable, but the fact remains that so long as you have football played at the present-day tension, with the huge crowds and so much depending on the games, you will have players who will over-step the mark of prudence. And, rotten as the duty may be, it is up to the whistle to do everything in his power to check the foul player.

After all, it is generally very plain to be seen when a game is developing a doubtful aspect, and I am quite sure that in such a case, a word to the captain of the opposing teams from the referee would have the desired effect of stopping the tendency towards foul play. Anyway, I don't think the public lecture on every conceivable occasion is a good way to get players mending their ways.

I sometimes think if I ever became a football referee—I shan't if I can keep out of the workhouse any other way—I should make more use of the linesmen than some referees do. There are quite a lot of incidents in the average game which of necessity the referee cannot see well enough to give a decision which he is sure is right.

THE LINESMEN AND THE REFEREE.

On the other hand, the linesmen are often in quite a good position. Yet occasionally the player will come across the referee who practically pins the linesmen down to deciding which side shall throw the ball in when it goes out of play. In regard to offside, and other technical points of the game, one or other of the linesmen are often in a much better position to judge than is the referee. Yet how often do you see a referee allowing the game to proceed when one of the linesmen is waving his flag as hard as he possibly can?

But while it is true that on the one extreme we have some referees who practically ignore the linesmen altogether, there is the man at the other end of the scale who does not seem to be able to trust his own judgment when he is in an excellent position for seeing exactly what took place. Not so long ago, I took part in a game when there was a scramble in the goalmouth. The referee was right on the spot, and seeing something happen he blew the whistle for a penalty. The players against whom the penalty was given objected strongly, whereupon the referee went first to one side of the field and then to the other to consult the linesmen in turn. Now to consult the linesmen in such circumstances—that is when the referee was in an excellent position to judge—was not a sign of strength, but of weakness.

And writing of signs of strength reminds me that I always like to see the referee who is big enough to acknowledge when he makes a mistake. That too, is a sign of strength, for no player, and no spectator, expects a referee to be absolutely right every time. I would take more than an ordinary mortal to go through even one football match without making some error. But with some errors, to admit they have been made is to obtain quick forgiveness all round.

ALDERSHOT RELAY RACE.

Cameron Highlanders win Great Event Easily.

The first Aldershot Command Final of the present cross-country season, a 12 miles Comrades' Relay Race, took place on Thursday afternoon, the whole course of two miles—there were six relays—being on the Queen's Parade grounds. Five groups have qualified, and ten teams figured on the programme, but the R.F.A. did not materialise, so nine started, and all completed the course.

In the first lap it was a good race between the East Surrey's and the Cameron Highlanders, but the latter got away near home and sent their second relay away 50 yards ahead. In the second lap they gained another 30 yards, and in the third stage went right away. The East Surrey's fourth pair were the weakest link in their chain, and let them down into fourth place, there being a great race hereabouts for second, but the Camerons were now 300 yards ahead, and never looked like being caught. In the end their runners-up were another Scottish team, the H.L.I. taking second position after being well down the list in the earlier stages.

Brig.-Gen. R. O'H. Livesay, C.M.G., D.S.O., acted as starter, Brig.-Gen. S. E. Hollond, C.M.G., D.S.O., referee, Mr. C. Otway (S.C.C.C.A.), chief judge, Capt. Keyworth chief whip, and Mr. J. Ogilvie timekeeper. Capt. C. Newington, hon. sec. A.C.A.A., and Sgt. G. H. Thompson, assistant hon. sec., were responsible for the general arrangements.

Ordnance; Gnome Athletic v. Custom House; Napier's v. R. and H. Green and Silley Weir Athletic; Tufnell Spartan v. Blackwall and Thames Ironworks. To be played on Dec. 6; kick-off 2.15.

SCULLING.

In the Cambridge Colquhoun Sculls final heat, A.A. Swan, Trinity Hall, beat D.H.L. Gollan, first Trinity by 1½ lengths.

WHY HE WON.

This Week's Football Contest Winner Sends Fourteen Coupons.

STAFF RIVALRY.

"Private Thomson"? was my inquiry as I entered the Intelligence Branch offices in Deichmann Haus yesterday, writes our football representative. "That's me!" came a voice betraying an unmistakably Scottish accent. Thereupon I introduced myself to the winner of the No. 8 Football Contest. Handing him a cheque for 1,731 marks, I congratulated him upon his success, and asked him for a few particulars for "Post" readers. He cordially obliged.

Private Thomson is a typical son of Scotland, burly, good humoured and in full possession of the "burr." He informed me that he is a native of Galashiels, and in his youth was an enthusiastic player and follower of the great game. The winner it may be added is now well on in years. His regiment is the K.O.S.B. and he joined the colours in August 1914.

A Regular Competitor.

Asked how he accounted for his success, he said that he had been a competitor since the No. 1 competition, and had regularly sent in coupons. Twice he had been within one of the number which won our prize and he attributed his successful coupon to the fact that he had allowed for West Bromwich taking their revenge, and that the three games which he gave as draws, looked to be of such an open "character."

When I enquired what he was likely to do with the prize, he replied, "I'm a family man, ye ken, and it's War Bonds that will receive your prize-money."

All Keen To Win.

Private Thomson is a member of a staff, who all enter for our contest weekly, and his success is all the more appreciated by them because of the rivalry which exists. Each one strives to beat the other in forecasting results correctly.

The winning competitor submitted fourteen coupons, thus again emphasising the obvious advantage of making more than one effort weekly.

£2,000 TRANSFER FEE.

John Marshall, the St. Mirren full back, has been transferred to Middlesbrough, the fee being given as £2,000. Marshall, who played for Scotland against Ireland in the match at Belfast on April 19, is young and exceptionally well-built weighing nearly 13st and standing 5ft 10in. He will play for Middlesbrough against Chelsea to-day at Middlesbrough.

LOCAL FOOTER.

18th G.H. Q., M.T. Coy. 2; Rhine Army Vehicle Reception Park 2.

The above teams met on the former's ground on Wednesday. The home team pressed heavily at the start and scored through a fine shot by Cpl. Beale. The game after a time became more even, and the R.A.V.R.P., after fine work by their outside right, drew level with a brilliant shot by their centre forward. The game was fast and evenly contested, despite the rain which continued throughout the game, and the sodden state of the ground. After 25 minutes, the R.A.V.R.P. drew ahead from a fine centre by their outside right, and although the 18th G.H.Q. made determined efforts, they kept their lead for a time. Eventually the G.H.Q. pressed with great determination, and after about 30 minutes drew level by a good goal by Pte. Evans.

The game continued even and each end was visited in turn, the players finding it hard to keep their feet. The R.V.P. pressed towards the finish but the 18th G.H.Q. defence kept them out.

F. DUCKWORTH.

Sterling Qualities of the Blackburn Defender.

On this page appears a splendid article from the pen of Duckworth, the famous Blackburn defender. He has represented his country in the Internationals and few understand better than he the subject about which he writes. He is a keen student of the game as well as one of its cleverest exponents. Short of inches, this talented player makes up for this deficiency by the brainy tactics he adopts to outwit, "The other fellow". A great believer in the axiom that, "If the game is worth playing, keep it clean", he is rarely troubled by the whistle-holder, but he understands only too well the effect of tactless officials on the members of a team.

His play is always of such a sterling character that the news of his having secured international honours did not come as a great surprise to Blackburn folk, although many critics were opposed to his selection. The defence he put up that day was such that one of the latter openly confessed to having erred in his judgment. Clean, clever and without any hint of "gallery" play, this popular defender is a great favourite at Ewood Park.

He possesses that rare quality of a full back, namely, "The knowledge of how to make his brains save his feet." None of those rushing tactics; he waits for his opponents and the ease with which he dispossesses of the ball, has caused many renowned forwards to fight shy of his approach. W. Le C.

SPORTSMAN'S FORTUNE.

Mr. Richard Gardiner Casey of South Yarra, Melbourne, a well-known Australian sportsman, who died at Honolulu on April 25 last, left estate in the United Kingdom amounting to £34,464. He left £100 and all his interest in the thoroughbreds and gear jointly owned by them to James Mansfield Niall, of Bourke street, Melbourne.

East Midland Fixtures.

East Midlands, in addition to meeting Kent in the County Championship at Blackheath on Thursday, Dec. 11, hope to arrange ordinary matches with Leicestershire, Warwickshire, and North Midlands in the course of the present season.

WELLS WINS.

Boxing Idol's Bid to Regain His Former Standing.

TOWNLEY'S PUNISHMENT.

On Thursday night at the Holborn Stadium, Bombardier Billy Wells was successful in the second step towards regaining the heavy-weight championship that he lost to Joe Beckett, by beating Arthur Townley in the ninth round.

From the sixth round onwards, Wells repeatedly knocked Townley down for counts of eight or nine. Townley commenced the ninth round very weakly and was soon sent to the boards. He recovered at the count of eight only to be downed again for nine.

At this stage the referee stopped the fight, Townley's seconds at the same moment, throwing in the towel.

Wells, despite his failures and disappointments, is still a public idol. He came successfully through his match with Jack Curphey on Oct. 17 last, and almost, if not quite, rehabilitated with the public, determined to keep in the game and, if possible, work back to his old position.

The beating of Townley is a stepping-stone towards the desired end, and it is almost certain that another match between him and Beckett will result. The match may not come yet awhile should Beckett beat Carpentier, for the English champion will possibly have bigger game in view. Wells finished his training at Putney fitter than he has ever been before.

DEMPSEY'S TITLE.

Willing to Fight Anyone—Anywhere.

In the course of a lengthy letter from U.S.A. to the "Sporting Life," Dempsey's manager writes:

"I think it is no more than right that I should answer some of the statements published in the sporting columns of various New York newspapers, during my recent visit to that City regarding the future intentions of Jack Dempsey, champion of the world.

"Up to date we have received no bonafide challenge from anyone who seems to want to meet Dempsey for the championship. When we do I shall answer it in the proper manner. Dempsey is ready to defend his title against any and all comers having no wish to avoid meeting any white man in the world whom the public thinks can give him a decent battle.

Real World Match.

"On Dec. 4. Beckett, the English champion, is to meet Carpentier the French champion in your city, and in my opinion the sporting world would welcome a match between Dempsey and the winner of that battle. It would indeed be a world's championship contest.

"Dempsey is eager to meet a foreign champion for his title, no such contest having been possible for many years, owing to the fact that neither England nor France has ever had a boxer who was considered capable of putting up a winning fight. We have already had large inducements offered us for this match and we propose to give it the preference, all things being equal.

Dempsey's Willingness.

"Dempsey is willing to go to England, France, or anywhere in the world to defend his title. He simply asks that the event be given to whatever spot offers the largest financial inducement.

"As his late antagonist, Willard demanded and received over 100,000 dollars for his part of the prize on July 4. last, there is no reason why Dempsey should not receive similar financial recognition the next time he steps into the ring. We have already been offered considerably more than that figure and reserve the right to make the right to make the best arrangement possible for Dempsey's service in his next contest. Dempsey fought his way to the top of the ladder. He never avoided anyone. He has been proclaimed America's greatest champion.

Dempsey is ready to defend his title when given any reasonable notice. He regards the winner of the Beckett-Carpentier match as his next logical opponent, and will gladly make a match provided that the bids for purse and place are left open to the world."

TENNIS AT PARIS.

N. Mishu's Success In Covered Court Championships.

In the world's Covered Court Championships which are in progress at Paris, N. Mishu, the Roumanian, who figured so prominently at Queens Club driving with great severity, beat P. Portlock with consummate ease in the Men's Singles Championship, while two Swiss victories were recorded by A. Simon and A. Megroz.

Details:

At the Leave Club.

To-day's programme at the British Empire Leave Club, Cologne, includes an impromptu concert from 5 to 6 p.m., a dance at 6.30 p.m. and a German class at the same time.

Theatre Bookings.

From Monday next all bookings for Army places of Amusement in Cologne will be made through the G.H.Q. Amusements Office, Komödienstrasse. Whether or no the Opera house will be included in the scheme has not yet been definitely decided, but this will be made known to-morrow.

"The Panto" Season.

Interesting arrangements are being made regarding seasonable performances at the theatres during Christmas. King Pantomine will reign at several places while the Yuletide amusements are already being organised. More anon.

Whist Drive.

The top score of 141 at the British Empire Leave Club on Thursday night was reached by Pte. Whittaker, Pte. Bryson and Pte. Goodeard being 2nd and 3rd respectively. The "ladies" prizes were won by Pte. Pike 166, Pte. Fielding 165 and Pte. Finlow 163.

Lieut. Higgins presided and L/Cpl. Moon acted as M.C.

Overheard at a Thé Dansant.

JOAN: "Black and White sounds so easy, but where to get a black dress or a white one, or half of each? 52 Breitestrasse is all very well—the Opera house is so-so, but—not chic." MAUDIE: "I've go—" (rapturous but inaudible). JOAN: "Now absolutely top-hole—I'm green with envy, Maudie. I really must get something smart for the Leave Club."

TO-DAY'S BIG RACE.

Manchester November Handicap Prospects.

To-day will mark the end of a flat racing season which has been remarkable for the wide interest it has evoked. Record crowds have been the order at all the big meetings while bookmakers make no secret of the fact that the season has been a record one from a betting point of view.

For the Manchester November Handicap, sixteen horses are due to face the flag and, as the anti-post betting indicates, there are at least half a dozen strongly fancied animals in the field.

"The Marquis," our racing correspondent in England, wires the following forecast:

1. Not Much.
2. Chat Tor.
3. Planet.

Trafford Plate:—1, Shoemaker (evens); 2, Cryptic (11-4); 3, Strom Witch (7-2). Five ran.

Thursday Plate:—1, Discussion (6-1); 2, Snakerley (6-5 on); 3, Grave Mac (100-12). Fifteen ran.

Delamere Handicap:—1, Golden Melody (evens); 2, Saint Eloi (20-1); 3, Challow (100-8). Twelve ran.

Woodlands Nursery:—1, Eager Agnes colt (8-1); 2, Lucentio (100-9); 3, Sunstroke (100-9). Twenty one ran.

Rothschild Plate:—1, Powerful (2-1); 2, Inniskeen (10-1); 3, Chasseur (2-1). Six ran.

RACING IN PARIS.

A telegram from Paris states that despite reports to the contrary, racing will probably be continued to the end of the year. The Steeplechase Society have already applied for authority to hold their meeting at Auteuil on December 31st in the place of the meeting abandoned last Sunday owing to snow.

Lord Charles Innes Ker, formerly of the Scots Guards died on Thursday in London. He was very well known in racing circles and a prominent gentleman rider in the sixties and seventies.

OUR COMPETITION.

Only Ten Results Required This Week.

To-day, we publish the first coupon for our tenth football contest. We have decided this week to submit ten matches only to be forecasted. In the event of no competitor getting all correct, the sender of the coupon containing the least number of errors will be declared the winner. If a tie occurs, the prize money will be divided.

In the coupon printed below, strike out the team you think will lose, or, if you predict a draw, leave both teams standing, add your name and address clearly, place the coupon in an envelope with one mark and send it along to this office. Any number of coupons may be sent at the rate of one mark each.

Coupons must be addressed:—

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Much the Same.

"Yes," said a Tommy the other day, "I feel quite at home in Cologne. The weather reminds me of dear old Newington Butts."

Hard to Kill.

At one of the canteens in Rhineland I asked if the sale of cigarettes had shown any decrease since "Senior Officer's" attack on the "fag" habit appeared in the "Post." "Can't say I've noticed any drop," said the corporal in charge.

Spartans Complain.

Those intrepid people who still take their daily dip in the Rhine are complaining that since the frost and snow have gone, the water seems uncomfortably warm and enervating.

Getting Shabbier.

Lots of officers' clothing is getting in a disgraceful state of repair, yet they dare not risk speculating in new outfits, for at any moment demobilization may sweep them out of the Army.

Week-Ending.

"Week-ending" is becoming a popular habit with many officers. A party of ten, I hear, this week went away to a delightful little spot in Rhineland. As wives were well represented among the excursionists, dancing and music played an important part in a jolly little holiday.

"FARES, PLEASE!"

Now that British ladies have to pay for their joy rides on the Cologne trams Mrs. Mc Brassat practices how to say "Funfundzwanzig" and look sweet at the same time.

Described as—

At the Summary Court. President: "What is this woman?" Tommy (the witness: "She's what we call in England, a war widow, sir."

Spick and Span.

I have already commented on the old-fashioned and ungainly mail vans used by the German Post Office. Yesterday, however, I noticed two brand new and exceedingly smart motor vehicles on this service.

New Homes.

I hear that various barracks round Cologne are being got ready rapidly for occupation by our troops in the near future.

A Tip.

A tip for those who object to walking in wet weather and have a great abhorrence of tramcars. Take a "growler". It will be found far less expensive than a taxi.

Useless.

I have many times endeavoured with no success to fathom the "figuring" of the German taxi-meter and it always ends in my paying up and looking pleasant.

Expensive—to Them.

The taxi is an expensive item for Germans in these days, at somewhere about eight marks a mile.

Dye First.

It should be noted that no person other than an authorised representative of the Allied Forces is permitted to sell any article of Allied uniform unless such article has first been dyed.

Profiteering.

The huge profit made on one bottle of wine is evidenced when one enters any of the cafes etc., in side streets. The price for the same brand is often five to seven marks less than that charged in the big establishments.

S.W.A.K.

Many envelopes are reaching us in our Football Contest bearing these magic letters on the reverse side. Quite nice the sentiments so expressed.

Taking no Risks.

Have you heard the story of the two Jocks who entered the tramcar and seated themselves opposite an attractive looking young lady? Said one Jock to the other "That's a nice wee lassie." "Nae so bad" was the reply. "Why dinna ye hae a word wi' her", said No. 1. "I canna", said No. 2, "she has na' paid her fare yet!"

Fame.

I notice that near the Hohenstaufen Ring are three streets bearing the names Rubens-strasse, Beethoven-strasse, and Mozart-strasse. It is not often one finds so much art in one place.

From the Southern Cross.

The Rev. Mr. Dossetor, the new C. of E. padre at the 25th General Hospital is a native of Australia, and laboured for some time in the Bush after leaving College. He has many interesting stories to relate of his experiences under the Southern Cross.

Hospital Blue.

I notice that one German tradesman has hit upon the idea of Tommy in his hospital blue for a working model drawing attention to his wares.

Ignorance not Bliss.

The G.R.O. which says that wives must pay on tramcars caused the trouble. "Bute, fünfundzwanzig?" said the conductor to the wife who was out shopping. "Will that be enough", sweet innocence replied, handing to the schaffner two notes, one for twenty marks and the other for five. When the husband heard of the incident he spoke in an uncouth tongue understood only of the Army.

Glass Ornaments.

The elegant crystal glass chandeliers are quite a noticeable feature in Germany, being much in favour in all large private houses and institutions, as well as hotels and wine restaurants.

Proud of it.

I met a sergeant going on demob who had been out since 1914. With his unit in every action, he had only been absent from the "Line" whilst on leave. He had never been a casualty, and was justifiably proud of his record.

Pavement Artists.

The pavement artist, such a familar figure in the London streets, does not seem to have a prototype in Cologne—at least I have never met any in my daily walks abroad. Perhaps there is a bye-law prohibiting such exhibitions.

Strange Language.

I witnessed an example of effect of strange language on Army mules yesterday morning. The German driver seemed to have no difficulty with the pair, until getting excited at the approach of a tramcar he commenced to shout. Then they promptly slowed down and it was only after a British Tommy had taken them by the head that they could be persuaded to move.

RHINELANDER.

AROUND AND ABOUT.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.

An amusing story of Queen Maud of Norway when, as Princess Maud, she was staying with Queen Victoria at Osborne, relates to a bazaar at Shanklin. The Princess was assisting at one of the stalls. Presently a young Army officer walked up to her stall, and, making some small purchase, tried hard to get into conversation with her. As a last effort he said, "I'm sure I know you; you live near here, don't you?" "No," replied the Princess, "I am living with my grandmother." "Oh, that's it," responded the officer, "I suppose I know her. I know most of the people round here. What's her name?" he added, somewhat patronisingly; "I must look her up." "Queen Victoria," was the reply.

A GREAT MAN.

"I were a-laying down behind the breast-work one day," said the veteran boaster, "a-firin' at the enemy, an' a sittin' of 'em every time, when I 'ears the patter of a 'orse's 'oofs behind me. Then a voice said: 'Ho, there, you with the deadly aim! Just come 'ere 'a.f a mo'.' I turn round 'an saluted, an' who should it be but Sir Douglas Haig. He came up an' shook me by the 'and. 'Wot's yer name?' sez'e. 'Logan, General,' sez I. 'Your first name,' sez 'e? 'Dan sir,' sez I. 'Dan Logan, General.' 'Well, Dan,' sez 'e, 'go home. You're a-killing too many men. It don't seem 'ardly fair. It's massycree, that's wot it is. An' look here, Dan, don't call me General—call me Duggie,' sez 'e."

A SOLDIERS' FRIEND.

British soldiers have no firmer friend in the House of Commons than Major Cohen. Although both his legs were amputated through being badly wounded while leading his company to the attack at Ypres, in July, 1918, nobody would realise the fact as one gazes at the figure of that handsome, weather-beaten man as he sits just inside the House above the small cross-bench on the Ministerial side.

FRANCE'S WATER POWER.

The "Echo de Paris" states that the necessity of purchasing foreign coal might be relieved by developing the water power of France, which is estimated at 10,000,000 horse-power. Before the war only about 750,000 horse-power was used, but a further 450,000 horse-power was developed during the war, and by the end of 1921, 1,600,000 horse-power or 16 per cent. of France's resources will be worked. This leaves a huge amount of water-power in reserve. One million horse-power would lessen the consumption of coal for power production by at least 3,250,000 tons, costing about 300,000,000 francs, and the comparison is more striking when the greater efficiency of the hydro-electric installation is considered.

THE POPULAR ARMY.

When I saw the other day a troop of Life Guards trotting down the Strand, headed by the Marquis of Blandford, the Duke of Marlborough's son and heir, and later a company of Grenadiers led by the Hon. "Toby" Bailey, heir to Lord Glanusk, I was struck by the fact that the Army remains as popular among the "classes" as it was before the war, says a gossip writer. There are over 4,000 Regular officers waiting to be absorbed, and yet the pressure from outside to get in is immense. There are many men at the heads of companies and squadrons today who were brigadiers during the war. That must be rather galling to proud spirits. Captain Bailey aforesaid gallantly commanded the Grenadiers in many a battle with the rank of colonel. S.c transit.

WHY CLOTHES ARE DEAR.

The price of the raw material regulates the price of cloth and of clothes. The London wool sales are now open to foreign buyers, so that French, Dutch, Spanish, and American buyers come and put up the price against home manufacturers. If the Government, as soon as rationing ceased, had put large stocks on the market at a reasonable profit, the manufacturers, whose stocks were depleted because of the rationing system, would have had cheaper raw material, and the price of clothes would have been less. The excessive price of wool is a form of indirect taxation.

ODD-MAN-OUT DANCE.

Discussion is raging in the best London dancing establishments on our Prince's experience at a ball in Washington when he was initiated into the mysteries of the "Tag" or "Cutting In" dance. This development has been firmly established in America for many years. The "Tag Dance" may be any kind of dance—fox-trot, one step or waltz. Partners are chosen and the dance commences with one man unattached in the midst of the dancers. Then he, at his leisure, chooses any couple and gently taps the man upon the shoulder. Smilingly and gallantly the man so touched relinquishes his charge and "carries on", selecting a new partner in the same way.

A LIVELY BEGINNING.

AN AIRMAN'S EXPERIENCES.

Writing in "Blackwood's Magazine," Mr. Leo Walmsley describes "An Airman's Experiences in East Africa." This is how he begins his story:—

Mbuyuni is pronounced Imbewni, and it means the place of an ostrich; it was therefore quite appropriate that Mbuyuni should be the first of the R.F.C. aerodromes in East Africa.

It is situated just on the British side of the international boundary, in the centre of the undulating bush-clad plain that spreads from the foot of Kilimanjaro, north-eastwards to the Uganda railway.

The squadron to which I belonged arrived here by train late in the afternoon of February 1st, 1916, after a hot and tiring journey from the coast. We were led at once to our camping ground, a large, thorn-fenced square, just within the strongly defended perimeter of the main camp, and there we were left to shift for ourselves. We had no tents, and so with due philosophy we spread our valises on the ground, which, from the entomological point of view, promised to be of interest. Fortunately we had in the squadron several "old" East Africans, and soon the various mess baskets were sorted out, a roaring camp fire made, and a rough but very acceptable meal prepared.

Before turning in an incident occurred that to some degree disturbed our peace of mind for the night. Our fire had been built near to one of the enormous ant-heaps found everywhere in this country, which possess, as a rule, several large exits the size of a rabbit hole. Exasperated by the suffocating fumes of the dampish wood, suddenly there emerged from one of these holes an enormous snake, about ten feet long, and as thick as one's arm. The native cook, who was busy stirring the contents of a saucepan over the fire, caught sight of this horrifying reptile, and letting out an awful blood-curdling shriek, bolted as though the devil himself had suddenly appeared, shaping a headlong course through the mass of pots, pans, bottles, and glasses that littered the ground.

The overturned pan naturally extinguished our sole source of light, and there we were in the dark with that beastly snake wriggling about in goodness knows what direction. Each of us thought he could feel it crawling about his legs, and never in my life have I seen a more utterly panic-striken crowd of grown-up people. It took nearly a week's rum ration to restore the morale of the company, and we had just arrived at that stage where one begins to tell the others "what a darned good joke it had been," when a piercing howl from the direction of the servants' quarters fairly made our hair stand on end. Seizing whatever weapon heppened to be nearest to hand, we gallantly rushed to the rescue, and found Jones, our head servant, in a state of collapse. In vivid but highly descriptive Cockney, he told us that he was just getting into bed when "he put his hand right on it."

After a considerable amount of volunteering, we stood round with our spades and bayonets, while one of us very gingerly raised the blanket, and there, nestling ever so comfortably underneath, was—an empty beer bottle!

As the night dragged on we had ample opportunities for studying the zoological and nocturnal wonders of East Africa.

The whole place swarmed with ants, and although they appeared to be of a harmless species, one never felt certain that it was not a centipede or a scorpion crawling across one's chest. The buzzing of the beetles and the chirping of countless crickets was almost deafening, and loud above their unmelodious din came the occasional roar of a lion, and the more frequent wail of the hyaena. Jackals, frogs, grasshoppers, and various smaller fry each contributed to this wild and primitive concert, which, strange to say, quickly lulled me off into a deep and dreamless sleep.

* * * *

It took several days to bring up the airplanes from Mombasa, unpack them from their wooden cases, and erect them ready for flight. The need for aerial reconnaisance behind the enemy's lines was hourly becoming more urgent, and as soon as the first machine was ready we were ordered out.

I shall never forget that first flight. The performance of the machine on its trial trip had been anything but satisfactory, and as I happened to be the lightest observer with the squadron, I was chosen for the job. The pilot, Captain Creed, was also a feather-weight, but in spite of this we cleared the trees at the end of the aerodrome by inches only, and it was nearly half-an-hour before we reached a height of six hundred feet.

The view was extraordinarily interesting. The plain was much more open than we had at first imagined, for between the dense patches of bush were grassy glades dotted with solitary baobabs and acacias. Some of these open spaces were literally brown with game. On one of them was a herd of at least two hundred eland, and numerous odd groups of gazelle, hartebeeste, zebra, and giraffe were to be seen on the game paths which intersected the bush like the veins of a leaf. These paths seemed to converge on a small water-hole, where a couple of rhinos were disporting themselves. The noise of our engine drove them terror-stricken into the bush.

MORNING EXERCISES FOR THE TIRED BUSINESS MAN.

Rise 7 a.m.

Stand in the middle of the room, raise arms slowly overhead, take deep breath, and say, "Damn the Government," lowering arms in attitude of despair. Ten times.

Extend body flat downward on floor, cover eyes with hands, kick heels, think of the railroads and weep, till dry.

Kneel, wring hands, meditate upon the labour unions, and groan 150 times.

Collapse on floor. Grovel vigorously, think of the income-tax, and gnash your teeth as in anger. Ad. lib.

While cooling off try to get a number on the telephone.

Note.—Observe this simple regimen every morning before breakfast and you will reach the office with most of the cares and troubles of the day already out of your system.

FROM EVERYWHERE.

In Self Defence.—Women clerks have formed a trade union.

Lights behind.—Cyclists will continue to carry rear lights.

"Bleak House" Film.—Dickens' novel, "Bleak House" is being filmed.

For Bread.—20,000 tons of cereals has just left Argentina for Europe.

Worth it?—It will cost another million to complete H.M.S. Hood for sea.

Want an Elephant?—A baby elephant is on sale at a West End toy shop.

On Wheels.—In the Paris election motor polling booths were used.

Going South.—Large bookings for the Riviera winter season are reported.

Taken to Sport.—German ex-soldiers are keenly taking up all phases of athletic sport.

Grocer's Fortune.—The late Mr. H. W. Coppen of Surbiton has left £293,000 made out of provision dealing.

Hidden.—£1,100 worth of jewels stolen by a West End jeweller's employé were found in a drain.

German Toys.—Every day more consignments of German toys are reaching England.

For a Rest.—Sir William Joynson Hicks, the strenuous advocate of aerial development, is sailing to India for a rest cure.

A Prophet.—Mr. H. G. Wells claims to have predicted the use of the planeless aircraft being built in France.

Illegal Betting.—Seventy pounds was the fine inflicted on a Kentish Town man for keeping a betting house.

Overcrowded.—In a London ejectment case it was stated that eleven people lived in one small room.

Palestine's Language.—Hebrew is to be the official national language for Palestine.

Wastage.—In one of the Holborn Guardians' institutions eight officials look after 12 children.

Want Land.—Over 1,000 applications for holdings have been received by the Kent Council from ex-service men.

Equality.—The Women's Industrial League is demanding equal pay for equal work of equal value.

The First.—At the next Royal Horticultural Show, a blue orchid is likely to be exhibited.

Tally Ho!—There is a great revival of hunting, which is in full swing throughout Great Britain.

Modern Esau.—In Nevada there is a man who has a beard over eight feet long. He winds it round cardboard and tucks it under his waistcoast.

"Pimple" Broke.—The well known music hall and cinema comedian, "Pimple," has had to seek protection of the Bankruptcy Court.

First and Last.—Miss E. Bulfield was the first London conductorette to enrol and the last to leave. She travelled over 70,000 miles on 'bus journeys.

Police Forts.—Owing to armed attacks on the quarters of the Constabulary in Ireland, police barracks are being turned into formidably defended forts.

To be Hanged.—Ernest Scott and Ambrose Quinn, who cut the throats of women, will be executed at Newcastle next week.

Still Playing.—Madame Sarah Bernhardt has abandoned her proposed recital tour in England, but will appear in a new play in Paris.

Mobbed.—A man charged at Tottenham with cruelty to his daughter was roughly handled by the crowd on leaving the Court.

Big Price.—St. Ermin's Hotel, Westminster, has been bought by Messrs Vickers for £100,000. It will be used for offices.

Bishop's Estates.—The Bishop of Coventry has just sold a farm of 1,300 acres, one of the large estates he inherited in Wilts and Dorset.

Altered Vocations.—Sir Auckland Geddes started his career as a doctor, Lord French as a sailor, and Lord Reading as a stockbroker.

Selling More.—In addition to his Belvoir estates the Duke of Rutland is now selling the whole of his Haddon Estate. 30,000 acres.

Too Reasonable.—Judge Cluer told a workman willing to accept £50 compensation for injuries that he ought to have £500.

Dangerous Gang.—Paris police have arrested eleven individuals belonging to an association of burglars, specialising in stealing plate and jewellery.

Women Want More.—Men in the engineering and foundry trades having been given a five-shilling weekly rise, the women engaged in the same trades now demand an increase.

Unsatisfied.—Miss Mabel Wooley, the fiancée of Lieut. Douglas, one of the airmen killed at the start of the £10,000 Australian flight, is pressing her claim that the machine was not properly tested.

Dancing Canon.—Canon Dormer Pierce, vicar of Brighton, advocates municipal dancing halls to give young people greater opportunities of finding suitable partners in life.

Get Busy.—Colonel Sir Alan Sykes M.P., just returned, from a business tour in U.S.A. says if we do not settle down and make a great effort, America will get our business.

Jail Christmases.—A man who posed as a baronet, has been sentenced at the London Sessions to four years imprisonment. He has already spent fifteen Christmases in prison.

Police Heroes.—About 800 delegates of the Police Federation, went to the Cenotaph in Whitehall and placed wreaths in memory of policemen who fell in the war.

Made Father Squirm.—The Greenwich magistrate said that the father of a boy married at 15, and charged with theft, was a knave and responsible for his son's plight. The lad had not had a fair chance.

UNITED STATES DISUNION.

WORLD-WIDE CONDEMNATION OF REFUSAL TO RATIFY PEACE TREATY.

SHARP SKIRMISH ON AFGHAN FRONTIER.

U.S. AND THE TREATY.

ACTION UNIVERSALLY DISAPPROVED.

The action of the United States Senate in failing to ratify the Peace Treaty has aroused universal condemnation. Severest of all are the American newspapers.

"We shall not long remain in a shameful position," says the "New York Times" "hopefully standing before the world as the one nation that refuses to sanction measures for the prevention of war. The country will not for an instant be in doubt as to the responsibility."

The "New York World" gloomily questions whether an agreement, which was prevented by a policy of rule and ruin, can now ever be reached. "If the nation which helped to win a victorious war and negotiate a victorious peace is prevented by the Senate from ratifying that peace," the "World" declares, "such a Senate has made itself a menace to mankind, and the United States stands discredited as a nation. Already, however, there is an insistent demand that if Mr. Wilson re-submits the document to the Senate on Dec. 1 the sane men of both parties shall get together and ratify the Treaty without further delay. That will neither maim the Constitution of the United States nor make ratification a sham."

Sir Joseph Cook, the Australian Federal Minister of Marine, in a speech at Sydney on Thursday, said the decisions of the American Senate regarding the Peace Treaty constituted the greatest blow to European Peace since the Germans were put to action. He refuses to believe that the decisions are final and regards them as political manoeuvring in connection with the coming Presidential elections.

Newspapers in the Argentine consider the attitude of the United States a very serious matter. "La Nacion," of Buenos Aires, the leading South American newspaper, says this attitude may have a far reaching effect on the League of Nations, and that if the United States does not enter the League all the Latin-American Republics which have already joined the League will be in a peculiar position.

The article intimates that Senator Lodge's interpretation of the Monroe doctrine is not approved by Latin Americans. The journal adds that the Latin-American Governments will not leave the League, in order to follow the United States and expresses the opinion that American Senators do not recognise the seriousness of such a situation for future relations between the United States and the Latin-American Republics.

Mr. Bonar Law said in the House of Commons on Friday that the inability of the United States representatives at Paris to deposit President Wilson's Ratification of the Peace Treaty at the same time as those of other Powers would not prevent the remaining Allied and Associated Powers from proceeding to carry the Treaty into effect.

INDIFFERENT DOCKYARD WORKERS.

The Admiralty has decided that as the recent ballot of the workmen at Devonport dockyard has revealed no pronounced feeling in favour of the adoption of short time, the Admiralty scheme shall not be proceeded with at that dockyard. Notices of discharge of workmen will accordingly be issued as announced. There was actually a majority of three thousand in favour of short time, but only eight thousand voted out of eighteen thousand employees.

FALSE MARRIAGE DECLARATION.

At the Central Criminal Court on Thursday before the Common Sergeant, Guy Harold Unwin, 45, formerly a captain in the Royal Engineers, was brought up for sentence for making a false declaration for the purpose of procuring a marriage licence.

The defendant married Marie Louise Delphine van Uytven, a Belgian Red Cross nurse, and made a declaration in which he gave his name as Edward Robert Evans, and described himself as a bachelor. He was really a widower with three children.

The Common Sergeant said that the defendant had shamefully deceived Miss van Uytven, and sentenced him to five month's imprisonment in the second division.

WILL AMERICA RATIFY THIS TREATY?

Ratifications of the Treaty whereby Great Britain guarantees to aid France in the event of unprovoked attack by Germany were exchanged yesterday. The Treaty, however only becomes effective if the United States ratifies the corresponding Franco-American Treaty, one Treaty depending on the other.

AFGHAN FRONTIER.

BRIDGEHEAD ATTACKED BY TRIBESMEN.

The majority of the Waziris, Reuter learns, have agreed to the British terms. One section has refused to attend the Jurghas and aerial operations will be begun against it forthwith, while the attitude of two other sections is uncertain. Our aerial bombardments are already having a telling effect. The tribesmen are putting out peace feelers.

On Monday night four hundred of the enemy attacked the bridgehead covering party near Thal. An engagement followed in which the enemy lost ten killed and thirty wounded, our casualties amounting to two killed and sixteen wounded.

ENGINEER'S DEMANDS.

SEVEN CARDINAL POINTS FORMULATED.

At a meeting of the local railway shops committees connected with the Engineering and Shipbuilding Trades' Federation, held at York, a national programme and policy for the railway shops in the United Kingdom was drafted as follows:—

(1) That all craftsmen be called upon to at once join their respective craft Unions.

(2) District rate of wages to all grades.

(3) Consolidation of all war bonuses, including the 12½ per cent., into standard district rates.

(4) A 44-hours working week.

(5) Abolition of systematic overtime; local arrangements to be made for overtime in cases of emergency, breakdown repairs of plant, &c.; overtime rates to be not less than time and a half for time-workers and rate and a half for piece-workers.

(6) A week's holiday with pay, and payment for all recognised statutory holidays.

(7) Abolition of the age limit in the medical examination, and a share in the managements and control of railways.

OPERATIONS IN RUSSIA.

The following was the situation in South Russia on the 18th November, according to official reports received at the War Office. On the Caucasus Army front there is no change. West of Novokcopersk the Don Army captured St. Tishanka with 300 prisoners and a Brigade Staff. The Bolshevists gained some ground in counter-attacks South of Noronej, on the East bank of the Don, but on the West bank they have been compelled to retire for some little distance. General Skuro has held his ground at Kastornoe against repeated enemy assaults.

On the Volunteer Army front the Red advance continues and they have driven two deep salients into General Denikin's front East and West of Kursk, but there is no confirmation of the Bolshevist claim that they have captured the latter town. Further West the Reds have occupied Glakhov and are also pushing forward South and South-West of Chernegov. In this area a peasant rising is reported to have broken out behind the Bolshevist lines.

LABOURER'S INCOME TAX.

At Tottenham Police Court a man who was summoned for £11 arrears of income tax was stated to have earned £79 in the first quarter and £89 in the second quarter of the year. The collector said the man was a labourer, and that he had a home of Southend and another at Tottenham. An order for payment forthwith was made.

THREE ON ACCOUNT.

The Reval correspondent of Reuter's telegraphs that Litvinoff, who was due to leave Dorpat yesterday, has handed over three British prisoners of war to a British representative at Dorpat. They will go to Copenhagen in the same battleship as Litvinoff.

PRINCE PLANTS A TREE.

On Friday, the Prince of Wales planted a tree in the Central Park, close to that planted by the King of the Belgians. He afterwards visited Oyster Bay and placed a wreath on the late President Roosevelt's grave.

FOOD CONTROL IN U.S.

The United States Attorney General, Mr. Palmer, has been also appointed Food Controller. At first he will only deal with sugar, and it is understood that he will establish the wholesale price for all sugars at twelve cents a pound.

TO AUSTRALIA.

LATEST STARTERS FOR THE BIG PRIZE.

Four Australian flying officers started from Hounslow on Friday morning on a Blackburn Kangaroo machine to compete for the ten thousand pound prize for the flight to Australia. They received messages of good luck from Prince Albert, Mr. Winston Churchill and Major-General Sykes.

The Air Ministry has received the following cable from the Australian Premier for transmission to Captain Ross Smith, who left England on the 12th November for the flight to Australia. "Desire to congratulate you and your party on a successful start. While the Government and people of Australia hope that an Australian will be the first to fly from Europe to Australia and achieve a world's record in aerial navigation, we urge you to take no unnecessary risks. Do your best but do nothing foolhardy. If you cannot make Australia in thirty-five days, never mind. Good luck. (Signed) HUGHES."

COMPETITORS DISAPPEAR.

Extraordinary mystery surrounds the question of the whereabouts of Captain Mathews and Sergeant Kay of the Australian Air Force, who started from Hounslow on the 21st October on the flight to Australia. There are fears, says the "Globe", that they are interned in Germany.

One of the leading officials of the Sopwith Company says that the Air Ministry state they have no information. It is now three weeks since the airmen descended at Mayence and since then says the Air Ministry, they have "simply faded out of our view. Nor has anything been heard at the Foreign Office of their internment but the paper considers that this does not preclude something of the kind having happened.

SOVIET FREEDOM.

OFFICIAL LIFE IN RUSSIA.

A man who recently arrived at Helsingfors from Russia gives the following account of a day in the Soviet office.

"Work goes on slowly but conversation and hot arguments never cease for a moment, the principal topics being the immense rise in salaries and where bread, potatoes and dried fish may be obtained. The question of the day, however, is a resolution of the Petrograd Soviet, according to which all Soviet employees, from sixteen to forty, including women, are twice a week to assist in unloading sunken barges.

"At noon the Commissary walks in with the air of a Minister, the inevitable portfolio under his arm. All become silent and nervous under his dull gaze. 'To the consternation of all he announces according to a resolution of the Council you will now have to go off to unload wood for the Soviet commune.'

"Everyone's spirits fall and there is much depression as the Soviet staff departs to the barges. Soon ladies and young girls in white shoes are hauling heavy dirty beams out of the sunken barges, scratching and bruising their unaccustomed hands. Those who are somewhat slow are roused with a rifle butt by a grinning 'Comrade' who says 'Now then, you living corpses.' (the nickname given to the remnants of the Bourgeoisie) 'Get a move on.' Wet, hungry and cold, the citizens of the free Soviet State, their work done, plod their way home."

ANTI-DUMPING BILL.

The text of the Government's Imports and Exports Regulation Bill, has just been issued, consisting of 27 clauses and two schedules. Its main objects are stated as:

1. To constitute a Trade Regulation Committee;
2. To regulate the importation of goods with a view to:
   (a) Preventing dumping;
   (b) Safeguarding key industries and industries affected by depreciation of foreign currency; and
   (c) Assisting the revival of hop-growing.
3. To regulate temporarily the exportation of certain goods.
4. To authorise the granting of credits and the undertaking of insurances for the purpose of re-establishing overseas trade.

SALE OF SURPLUS STORES.

The total sum realised for the sale of surplus stores and property from the date of the armistice to Nov. 1, as far as figures have come to hand, is approximately £111,000,000. In addition to this £102,000,000 have been received during the same period in respect of sales of raw material dealt with on trading accounts.

A CLEMENCEAU PREDICTION.

Asked by a representative of the French newspaper 'Oeuvre' for his views regarding the present political situation, M. Viviani, the ex-Premier, is reported to have said "It is quite simple. Clemenceau will continue as Premier until the beginning of the new year and will then become President of the Republic."

FINE FOR FEEDING DOGS ON RICE.

Gertrude Lady Decies, of Scotswood Sunningdale, was summoned before the Ascot magistrates for giving rice as food to dogs, and was fined £2 and a guinea costs.

CASH INSULT.

RELATIVES LOSE A LARGE FORTUNE.

The late Mr. Nicholas Emmanuel Vouvalis, of 230, Willesden-lane, sponge merchant, of London, Florida, and the Aegean Islands, states that although an Orthodox Greek, "I was indeed an Ottoman subject, but my great admiration for the English race caused me to become a British subject." In leaving the bulk of his property for public uses he says: "My relatives are to make no complaint . . . because I do not leave them anything, as my principle is that those people who leave money to their relatives insult them by looking upon them as incapable people, and turning them into idlers." After making various bequests he left the remainder of his property to the Greek Orthodox Community of Kalymnis, for hospital and school purposes. His net personalty was £74,774.

A SILENT COUPLE.

LIVED TOGETHER BUT NEVER SPOKE.

A case "the like of which had not been heard since the Seventeenth Century" was the description applied by the President of the Divorce Court to the case of F. L. Hill v. G. J. Hill, in which the wife sued for judicial separation on the ground of her husband's alleged desertion and misconduct. The charges were denied.

The President said it appeared that the petitioner and the respondent had lived unhappily down to July, 1916. The husband was engaged in work which took him out early in the morning. He returned late in the evening, and there was very little communication between them. Ultimately he communicated with his wife on slips of paper, of which she had a vast number. In 1916 these unhappy relations became worse, and the husband wrote another slip of paper to say that he desired to have no further dealings with his wife. From that time she had not spoken to him and it was not certain that he had spoken to her.

The wife apparently cooked her husband's meals and made his bed. In January of this year she was ill, and the husband called in a doctor, but she would have nothing to do with either of them. Since July, 1916, the parties had been living in the same apartments, but holding no communication. The husband provided the wife with two pounds weekly. The Court was asked to hold that this withdrawal of the husband from his wife was desertion. It was nothing of the kind. There had been no complete breaking off or abandonment. With regard to the suggestion of misconduct on the part of the husband, his Lordship thought it was raised as a possible cause of the conduct of Mr. Hill, but there was absolutely nothing to support the charge. The petition would be dismissed.

GERMAN RETREAT MENACED.

The disarming of the Russian North West Army by Esthonians is proceeding. A Riga telegram dated the 19th states that the Lettish operations for surrounding Bermondt's troops at Mitau have so far progressed that the Letts have taken Dobele and Buski. The railway, forming the German's line of retreat to Germany, runs between those two towns. The Letts are also advancing in the Libau front.

A MANLY BISHOP.

Doctor Furse, Bishop of Pretoria, better known to Oxford men as "Mike" Furse, who has been appointed Bishop of St. Albans, in place of Bishop Jacob, resigned, is six feet six inches in height and of broad, athletic figure. Only two years after taking his degree he was appointed Dean of Trinity College.

In South Africa he proved something of a sensation, visiting club and cottage alike and devoting himself equally to rich and poor. He trekked all over the country looking up outlying settlers.

NEW HUNGARIAN PREMIER.

At a meeting of the Hungarian Cabinet, M. Karl Huszar, Minister for Public Worship, was chosen as Premier. The party leaders were informed that the Entente representatives had no objection to Huszar's Premiership.

R.M.L.I. APPOINTMENTS.

Colonel Commandant (temporary Brigadier General) Blumberg has been appointed Commandant of the Portsmouth Division of the R.M.L.I. and temporary Brigadier General S.G.B. Armstrong, Second Commandant.

FIREMEN'S WAGES INCREASED.

The London County Council Fire Brigade Committee has decided to recommend the Council to pay firemen at the same rate of wages as the Metropolitan police, and to introduce the double shift system.

POLAND'S MANDATE IN GALICIA.

The Supreme Council has decided to give Poland a mandate over Easter Galicia for twenty-five years, at the end of which period the League of Nations will definitely determine the future of the territory.

MORE HOUSES.

GOVERNMENT SUBSIDY TO BUILDERS.

In the course of the general discussion in the House of Commons on the Housing Question, the Minister of Health, Dr. Addison described what the Government had been doing and outlined their plans for the future. He said the war had depleted the building trade personnel by two hundred thousand men. The situation was also complicated by sixty per cent of the trade being engaged on repair work and thirty per cent in all kinds of workshop and shop extensions. There was also a considerable amount of extravagant building.

The Government proposed, in the case of houses of approved type, to make a free grant not exceeding £150 per house. It was hoped in this way to attract many small builders. An agreement had also been reached with the Builders' Federation by which each builder would take a fair share of housing work, whether or not other work was offered to them. It was also essential to be able to arrest mere luxury building, and the Bill contained provisions in this sense. The three essential requirements were: the pre-war methods of building should be restored, so as to get the utmost output; that some abbreviated system of training should be adopted in order to attract more men into the industry: and it would be necessary to give safeguards to workmen against unemployment, although, he added, there was ten years work ahead for the building trade.

Later in the debate Mr. Clynes said that the Building Trade Unions were anxious for an enquiry to be held into the allegations of limitation of output.

Mr. Lloyd George said he hoped the allegations were unfounded but he had heard it from so many quarters that he felt it to be necessary to make an appeal to the Unions. Moreover, the shortage of labour was so serious that he hoped the Unions would relax their regulations so as to admit what they would call "unskilled labour."

BECKETT IN TRAINING.

TOWN COUNCIL SQUABBLE.

The question whether the public should be allowed to witness Joe Beckett training at the Corporation Baths for his forthcoming fight with Carpentier led to a stormy scene at the last meeting of the Southampton Town Council. After an uproarious discussion lasting for an hour and a half, the gathering broke up in disorder and members went home as a protest against the time of the council being occupied by the matter, no decision being arrived at.

On the casting vote of the Mayor standing orders were suspended in order that the matter might be discussed. Councillor Bowyer declared that just as much indignation was felt in Southampton over the "kill-joy" attitude of the council as over anything else of public importance. After a good deal of uproar, Mrs. Palmer, a Labour Member, in a maiden speech characterised the proceedings as a disgraceful exhibition, and said that there were thousands of women in the town interested in housing who did not care a jot for Joe Beckett matters. The meeting grew noisier as the debate continued, and finally, on the motion of Councillor Blakeney, the council adjourned as a protest against the disorderly proceedings.

INCREASING COAL OUTPUT.

Official figures published yesterday of the output of coal show that the tonnage for the week ending November 8th., the latest available, was 4,604,456, the largest weekly output since the reduction of hours in July. The last week of June produced 4,803,933 tons. The following are the figures for the past four weeks:

Week Ending Oct. 18th 4,727,465 tons, Oct. 25th 4,761,037 tons, Nov. 1st 4,674,532 tons, Nov. 8th 4,604,456 tons.

FIRST WOMAN AIRSHIP PILOT.

A Paris telegram says that the popular actress Gaby Morlay, who for a long time past has been interested in lighter-than-air flying, has passed brilliantly all the practical tests required for a pilot's certificate. Having also undergone her technical examination with the greatest possible success she thus becomes the first woman pilot of lighter-than-air machines.

BOMBS AT DROGHEDA.

Two bombs were placed on the footpath—one opposite St. Peter's Catholic Church, and the second opposite the General Post Office at Drogheda. This was thrown into the river Boyne by a man who found it. The other was picked up by a postman, who took it to the police barracks. It had a fuse, which was timed to explode in an hour.

U.S. TROOPS ON THE RHINE.

The Paris edition of the "Chicago Tribune" states that the American troops on the Rhine will be withdrawn and sent back to the United States if the Treaty of Versailles is withdrawn from the Senate by President Wilson.

According to a telegram from Aix-la-Chapelle several Spartacists have been arrested in the Belgian zone of occupation.

INDIGNANT JUDGE.

INCREASES DAMAGES IN DIVORCE SUIT.

"It is much to be regretted that there is not some mode of marking the infamous conduct of men who take advantage of the absence of a husband on military service to corrupt and seduce his wife."

Sir Henry Duke, President of the Divorce Court, uttered these words yesterday in reference to two cases before him. In one case he awarded £600 damages, against the corespondent, disregarding the more limited sum claimed in the petition, and ordered the payment to be made within fourteen days.

"It is," His Lordship declared, "a bad, disgraceful and shameful case, considering the indignity and harm inflicted upon the man who is away doing his duty and serving his country as a soldier."

UNEMPLOYED.

APPEAL TO EMPLOYERS.

In connection with the meeting to be held at the Mansion House on Monday, when Sir Robert Horne, Minister of Labour will speak, Viscount Burnham, Chairman of the District Selective Committee for London, has sent to employers a letter, which includes these sentences:

"Including numbers that are to be demobilised forthwith it is estimated that there are at least 12,000 officers in the London District who are without employment. Of these approximately 2,000 have good some sort of technical qualifications, but the others have really nothing but clerical experience."

"In view of the serious nature of the present position of unemployment among this class to whom the country owes so much, I feel I shall not appeal to you in vain to attend the meeting, as it is only by the presence at that meeting and the support and co-operation of such as yourself that we can ever hope to repay all that we owe to those I have mentioned."

CHANNEL TUNNEL BILL.

Sir Arthur Fell, M.P., states that he believes the Channel Tunnel Bill will be presented to the House of Commons next month and he thinks there will not be much difficulty about its passage. "There is not now a single member of the Cabinet in opposition," he says, "and I do not anticipate any objections from the War Office. At one time there was opposition there to but the contrary attitude is taken by the present Chief of Staff, Sir Henry Wilson."

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN.

The International Labour Conference, sitting at Washington has unanimously approved a plan for submitting to the Governments of countries represented at the Conference, an agreement prohibiting the employment of children under fourteen years except in a few Oriental countries, where the age limit will be twelve.

BOLSHEVIST OFFERS.

The Esthonian Legation in London learns that Litvinoff has informed representatives of the Press that the Bolshevists are prepared to surrender their Fleet in the Gulf of Finland as a guarantee for peace and are also willing to establish a neutral zone between Russia and the Border States.

M.P. RETIRES.

Sir Hildred Carlile, Member of Parliament for the St. Albans Division of Hertfordshire, has applied for the Chiltern Hundreds, owing to ill health. The prospective Unionist candidate will be Lieut.-Col. L. L. E. Freemantle.

GRATUITIES FOR V.A.D.'s.

All V.A.D. members who have completed a contract in a naval, military, or Air Force hospital, and have not yet received their gratuity, should apply to the Secretary, V.A.D. Department, 52, Grosvenor-gardens, London, S.W. 1.

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.

Renewed strength and activity was manifest with investments. Oils were still in the forefront and commenced a fresh upward movement but finished under best on profit-taking. Diamonds were buoyant, due to recent agreement to limit the output and to sell to a diamond syndicate for five years. Other mining descriptions were strong, and increasing enquiries were based on the prevailing prices of gold and silver. United Havana Railway shares were a strong feature on the annual report and expectation of a record Cuban sugar crop. America and Spain took most of the bar gold offered at about 163s per fine ounce. Bar silver jumped to 73½ pence for spot parcels and 71⅝ pence on two months delivery, in response to the higher Shanghai rate of exchange. The Anglo-Persian Oil Company has increased its capital to twenty million sterling, of which £8,600,000 will be offered shortly. German marks were quoted 179 to 181 and Austrian crowns 520 to 520 per pound sterling.

STANDING OUT.

It is to be hoped that the significance of the recent decisions of the American senate will not be lost upon the peoples of the allied nations. Whatever cause there may be for forebodings there is none for alarm. European nations had come to regard the League of Nations as being America's splendid contribution to the maintenance of the world's peace.

If this was a delusion America is as much to blame as anyone else, for the people of that country encouraged the belief. But the recent decisions of the Senate must not be taken to imply that America is not anxious to preserve the world's peace. The methods are the only subject of discussion.

After it had seemed possible to advance from the old torturous methods of diplomacy it must be a matter for regret that a new country which has prided itself upon freedom from effete methods of government should be the instrument of reaction.

For should the senate persist in making such reservations as to annul the value of the peace treaty the allied nations must, of necessity, fall back upon the old methods of international treaties which, it was hoped, were to be abolished.

Further, such action would rob America of much of the power which she has gained by her intervention in the war. By her entry into the war and by the obligations which she then, and afterwards, voluntarily accepted she has given a European cast to her policy.

Should the suspected contingency arise she will have inherited the position of isolation which caused manifold regrets to both Britain and Germany when those countries had to endure similar isolation. For she must conclude a separate treaty with Germany and thereby sacrifice much of the trust with which the Allies have invested her.

However it is to be hoped that the dangers of the policy will appeal to the American people and that the subsequent course of action will yet permit the Senate to recover some of the ground which has been lost. The situation is far from being beyond remedy.

But without American approval the League of Nations, which in America is incorporated with the peace treaty, will become a mere paper Utopia.

THE ARMY AND RELIGION.

A committee of the Churches was appointed to inquire, with the help of the Y.M.C.A., into the religious beliefs of the British armies in the field. By means of a Questionnaire sent throughout the battalions a mass of evidence was collected embodying the opinions not only of chaplains, doctors, nurses, hut leaders and hut workers, but also of generals, officers of all ranks, N.C.O.'s and privates.

Special investigations were made at the great bases in England and in France. The result lies before us in a remarkable volume* which almost in its entirety has been written (and written with much literary skill) by Dr. Cairns, Professor in the United Free Church College, Aberdeen.

In the Preface the Bishop of Winchester states that the Enquiry did not include the troops from Ireland, Wales, and the Dominions. Even so, it is a Report full of startling significance to all those who are interested in the intellectual and spiritual life of Great Britain. For the armies contained the Nation's manhood, and the men who survived the war have gone or are going home to mould the opinions of the next generation.

The main questions were: (1) What are the men thinking about Religion? (2) Have they any clear idea of what the Christian religion is? (3) Has the war made any difference in their religious outlook? (4) What hindrances are keeping them out of the Churches?

These formidable questions received formidable replies which were briefly as follows: (1) The men are not thinking about religion at all. (2) They know practically nothing about Christianity. (3) They are puzzled about God's nature and by the fact that such a war was possible, and "there can be little doubt that while the circumstances and conditions of warfare have rendered some men religious, others, and a far larger number, have largely lost what religion they had" (page 91). (4) The evidence shows that the great majority are in no living touch with any Church. "No one is interested in theology." Dr. Cairns says "a constantly recurring note is that these men find the Churches lacking in the spirit of Reality. The doctrinal message unintelligible. They do not know what it is all about."

In an earlier chapter there occurs the following quotation from the report of an officer in a Highland Regiment—"They do not know what Christianity is. And after all, what is it? Does the Church know? A very general idea finds the symbol of Christianity in a fussy old lady asking the wounded soldier, 'Do they really give the poor men in the trenches rum to drink?'"

It will be readily admitted that the most remarkable feature of the book is its candour. Not only does the draftsman of this momentous Report reproduce verbatim the pungent criticism submitted by officers and men on doctrine and Church policy, but he accepts the criticism as being in many cases merited. While attempting to prove that the general paralysis of faith has been caused by the materialism of the nineteenth century, he confesses that the contagion of worldliness had spread to the Church herself, and had poisoned all the springs of her life long before the war broke out. Her hold on the intelligence of the generation which reached manhood before 1914 had been enormously weakened.

A Senior Chaplain of nineteen months' general service says "In the sphere of religion one's first main impression is that of almost incredible ignorance on the part of officers and men alike. The men do not know where to find St. Mark's Gospel to say nothing of an Old Testament book."

Dr. Cairns discovered, after a prolonged study of innumerable memoranda, that the answers to the question "Have the men in general any clear idea of what Christianity is?" were practically unanimous. "They (the men) have not the foggiest notion of what it is all about."

The war of course affected diverse temperaments diversely, but, writes one chaplain, "I have had more than one case of officers previously religious who have chucked religion altogether." From an ex-minister and officer with a West Country regiment, "What do they think of Jesus Christ? Their ideas are vague, few and of little import. They believe that He lived, and was the essence of all that is kind, good and just, but a trifle soft. The Virgin birth they think a kind of made up story. The death of Christ means as little to them as the death of Socrates."

In the report furnished by the Bishop of Kensington the following passage occurs: "The men with whom the chaplains are in contact simply do not know the very elementary truths of the Christian religion. The epithets they employ to describe this ignorance exhaust the vocabulary 'abysmal,' 'appalling,' etc. Probably 80 per cent. of these men from the Midlands have never heard of the Sacraments." No wonder, therefore, that Professor Cairns is constrained to admit that "in spite of all that has been said of the experiences of the Line, it would be a great misunderstanding of the situation to think of the mass of men as preoccupied with religion. This is what has made the highly coloured pictures of a 'revival of religion at the Front' so pernicious."

Some people like to run in blinkers, but the wiser and more courageous sort prefer to face realities even when realities are hostile to them. The draftsman and the authors of this Report on Religion and the Army must possess an overpowering conviction of the value of their assailed creed otherwise they could not have had the courage to publish so heavy an impeachment of it. And it ought to be made clear that testimony of an opposite kind is by no means lacking. Strange as it may sound, there were men who had first to pass through the hell of the struggle before they found religion. There were officers and men whose faith in an over ruling Providence survived the catastrophic horror of what, from the point of view of military mechanism, and from every point of view, was the most terrible war in history.

This is not the place to inquire how they were able to reconcile the existence of an almighty Guider of destinies with the fact that the blunders and ambitions of a few diplomatists, the arrrogance and vanity of a group of men leading and misleading a group of nations were permitted to derail humanity and to plunge into unimagined suffering a whole world of innocent victims.

War quickens superstition. When the old tribes went into battle, the altars of the tribal gods, were heaped with sacrifices as a kind of prepayment of victory. In 1914 the churches of both belligerents were overflowing with congregations multiplying prayers and alms and imploring the same God for decision by ordeal of battle. In moments of national and individual danger it is evidently still natural to turn towards the "supernatural". This has been described as "funk religion", and it is admitted that it was prevalent. Men, we are told, took the Holy Communion before going up to the trenches as if it were a talisman. At the base it was "lightly esteemed". No one can pretend that there is much ethical value in religious experiences like these.

The following dialogue took place between two men who had come safely through a battle—One said "After this there will be no more talk about there being no God." The other however, replied, "It's no use talking to me about God. No one who has been through the trenches can believe in Him".

Dr. Cairns is too candid and too cautious an analyst not to recognise that, on the one hand, the religion of fear is no religion at all and that, on the other, so far as a certain order of intellects is concerned, the old dogmas have perished for ever. "Men", he says in a powerful passage, "who have seen their comrades dissolved by high explosives will want to know what are the reasons for believing in immortality, and what is their present state. Men who have lived in the shambles and fortifications of the Salient and the trenches at Souchez will want to know how they can remember these things and believe in Almighty Love. They will want to know why prayer in danger gave them such intense relief, and why it seemed so often to be unanswered. They will probably give the churches a chance again in order to see if they have anything vital and comprehensible to say. If they do not get it from professional teachers of religion, they will take their own roads once more."

Within the limits of a review it is scarcely possible to indicate the wealth of philosophic, psychological, ethical and practical suggestion which such a book as "The Army and Religion" contains. The indictment is directed not only against the religious, but also against the educational system of the last hundred years. It is the deliberate finding of the Committee that "the men were poorly equipped spiritually and intellectually for so sudden and terrible a crisis."

The chapter on "Morale and Morals" should be read by people who, like the Bishop of London, talked about "God's War," and promised us vast spiritual results. Hitherto the results have been a large increase in the percentage of syphilis and an intensification of social hatreds and world unrest. It is time to be done with cant.

To ignore, in the interests of hypocrites and "hush-hush," facts like those which are revealed in "The Army and Religion" by some of the most prominent spiritual leaders of the day is to be guilty of treason towards the national welfare. A major of artillery writes "How shocked I have been at the revelations of what British education has done for the Tommy and the officer."

A chaplain of wide experience states, "The majority have had no real education". Yet another observer of distinguished ability who fell in the war wrote — "Englishmen, as contrasted with Frenchmen, Russians and Germans, do not think and never have thought. Education has been merely imposition — the learning of lessons, not the stimulus to thinking. The only men out here with the capacity for independent thought are the Colonials. To sum up, the war reveals the Englishmen as the best-hearted, the most enduring and most ignorant and least original man in the world." An officer in a South of England regiment remarks "I am sure that our education is at fault, both public school and otherwise. It leaves men with few general interests."

And yet in spite of the alleged poverty of its intellectual and religious equipment it was a victorious army. The inference seems to be that the pagan virtues rather than the Christian are necessary for war. Even great Christian soldiers like Gordon were fatalists, and an interesting portion of the evidence in "The Army and Religion" deals with the growth of fatalism in the ranks. A Y.M.C.A. worker in France states that "nearly all the men are fatalists." There was a sort of orientation towards Islam. As a matter of fact and experience fatalism can be the most steadying of all beliefs. It is essentially the religion of the soldier. What was called "Trench Fatalism" was widely spread throughout the Army, and a lance corporal in the R. E.'s writes, "Soldiers are fatalists, otherwise they would be madmen." In some passages we are reminded of the old-time fighting man whose gods were the God of Battles and the God of Bottles.

"The Army and Religion" marks the turning point of an era. We are in a new age, and a certain type of Christianity has become obese and obsolete. The cross which was once so heavy is very light to-day. It is worn as a jewelled trinket by fashionable women and by public personages who have been "decorated" and it reappears on hot cross buns.

This book should be read by all those well nourished and comfortable Christians sitting in cushioned pews safe from draughts. "The torrent of criticism" of which Dr. Cairns speaks may act upon them as a tonic and purge. "On all sides there is the emphatic assertion that the church is not fulfilling its functions and is losing hold because of its inefficiency." We are told that one of the chief criticisms against the churches is that they are full of "starch," that they are on the side of capital, that for the solution of social and industrial problems they are "futile," and that there is less brotherhood in the house of prayer than in the public house. It is added that there is the keenest resentment against the practice of reserving seats.

The truth is that all church services, even the most Puritan, tend ultimately to become operatic. All the world's a stage, but so is the church. In some cases it might not be too harsh to say of the churches what Heine said of the theatres—the oxen are in the stalls. Religions start, perhaps, with the sense of sin, but sooner or later they become syndicated.

But the men who had thus lost touch with formal religion had all come out of Christian homes. In the field they displayed, not merely the valour which the votaries of any religion may display, but those qualities of self sacrifice and devotion which are the essence of Christian ethics. Undaunted they faced the awful maelstrom of modern war. In horror and great darkness they laid down their lives for their friends. Their heroism of the bolder sort rivalled and out rivalled the heroism of the heroic ages. But their heroism of the gentler sort came to them with the vision of their homes. Who would dare to say that the spiritual traditions of their fathers and forefathers, however obscured, did not quicken and sustain their manhood in the hour of trial and decision?—

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX.

Our Readers' Varied Views.

DO WE READ TOO MUCH?

Sir,—My observation leads me to the conclusion that we do read too much—of the wrong stuff.

One's aim, it seems to me should be to read as much as possible but mainly of the class of reading matter that is likely to provide material, ideas and inspiration for the better performance of one's duties, personal, domestic, social and commercial.

All these contribute to the moulding of one's character, the shaping of one's career and the provision of one's pleasure.

Picking out all the short stories from a magazine, devouring all the latest mill-girl-to-peeress novels and burning the midnight gas over heart disease-library novelettes is like trying to build up a sound constitution on vanilla ices and meringues. PROFIT.

A LATE CLUB.

Sir,—"Angry" rather misses the point Keeping existing soldiers' organisations open until eleven is obviously impracticable, was never dreamed of, and moreover would not meet the case.

Such a club as is suggested is for the benefit of these very people, who by reason of their long duties, have no opportunity of using and resting in any of the daytime rendezvous and would welcome a little place of their own where they could repair at the end of a trying day, be ministered unto instead of ministering; or a place where they could be let alone with their friends for an hour.

These are the people who need such a club—the theatre workers (behind as well in front) canteen workers, yes Mr. Editor, newspaper men and others who work for the love of their labours and are too busy and interested and conscientious to take time off during the day. Believe me, Sir there are many such and I suggest duty passes should be issued accordingly.

ANTI-CLOCKWATCHER.

SOLDIERS AND WINE.

Sir,—I view with alarm the growing liking for wine which the British soldier has acquired since his arrival in Germany. Here, with the mark at the present value, wine is comparatively cheap for the Britisher, and as a consequence it is being consumed to a far greater extent than any other beverage.

This may be all right as long as he remains in Germany, but what will be the result on demobilization? Expensive wines will have become almost second nature to him, the old pint of beer will go by the board, and in many cases he will spend a far greater amount on such drink than he can afford.

Such a state of affairs can only tend toward increased poverty and misery at home. PERTURBED.

"THE EDITOR REGRETS."

Sir,—I address this letter to all budding writers. Are you a prospective author longing to see your literary efforts appear in print? If you are, you probably know those nice little slips of paper on which are inscribed those hope shattering inscriptions, "The Editor regrets". Oh yes! I know them well. I once spent a whole week trying to put a few words together, and in a form suitable for readers of the weekly magazine.

I must have wasted a ream of paper writing and re-writing that short story. At last I felt satisfied that my effort was well worth reading so I despatched it to the Editor of a well-known weekly journal.

But alas! how many hopes are shattered! A few days later the post brought me a slip of paper, "The Editor regrets". Still I keep on trying because I believe in the saying. A man does not know how well he can write until he tries. So, hopeful young writer, try, try, try, again. ASPIRANT.

MULTUM IN PARVO.

Sir,—May I briefly jot down my own views on the various subjects in your "Letter Box."

Excessive Cigarette Smoking. What is one man's meat is another man's poison. But a pipe is healthier; and, as it cannot be smoked everywhere, means a respite from constant smoking.

A Late Club. How would one prevent it from being almost monopolised by those who were not compelled to wait until eight or later? It would merely be an extended facility for them.

Why Not Wrestling? Hear, hear: but not too much of the mat-crawling kind.

Germans and English Drama. The success of the R.A.D.C. shows that the plays they have represented were desired. Possibly a change of type might be welcomed now by a number. If seats are to any considerable extent vacant, it is difficult to see why the Germans should not be allowed to be instructed in English ways and thought, as they might by attending the performances.

Do we Read too Much? That depends whether what we read is worth remembering. If it is, be it romance, character sketch, information, technical, economic or other, poetry, travel or history, we are richer by a wealth of which none can deprive us and by the society thoughts and experience of others with whom we might never come into contact personally. After all, isn't half an hour's reading usually worth more than half an hour of the ordinary "conversation" of to-day? You can choose your subject and select your author. And you can always "shut him up" when you have had enough. Whereas—! O.W.

DEFECTIVE ORGANIZATION.

And not Young Soldier to Blame says "Anti-Cant."

REPLY TO "OLD BRIGADE."

We are all acquainted with the old gentlemen who starts his homily "When I was a boy" and then proceeds to libel present day youth and when you have the temerity to reply says" I don't want to argue" and succeeds at once to amplify his previous denunciation of the colossal immorality of the present generation. Such is "Old Brigade" only he says "When I was a soldier."

Having the battle of words or vague charges against the young soldier—whichever we prefer to call it—firstlet usexamine the special case of his own battalion which "Old Brigade" has cited in detail. He painted for us the very picture of the confusion which is killing games in this army.

Cumbersome Committees.

In this battalion they forgot the necessity of decentralisation and tried to run the sports of the battalion through one cumbersome committee composed of over twenty persons. One of those generalities about which he is so scathing was thrown to the committee. They were told to hold conferences on all questions relating to sport. For example these twenty odd persons may have been expected to come together to discuss whether No. 9 Platoon should have their white shirts washed this week or next, there being no sports committee in "B" Coy or No. 9 Platoon. The commanders of those units had also been relieved of the responsibility for recreational training by the battalion sports committee which for some unknown reason had platoon representatives on it. A parallel case would be for town councillors to sit in the House of Commons.

Having formed a bat'alion committee the one representative of each platoon was given definite duties, namely, running platoon football team, platoon running team etc. (notice the etc.) In other words he was to do the duty of the platoon commander and be responsible for all sports in his unit and in addition was to do the work of the platoon sports committee and organise all sports as well.

Thus they had a committee running the battalion sports, an alleged company sports officer and an alleged platoon sportsman running the sports of the lower formation.

System a Failure.

This "System" was not successful. Some young soldiers thought they were being asked to do rather a lot. The platoon sportsmen saw no special call to arrange matches. Naturally under such an arrangement it would have been beside the point for the commanding officer to have sent for the company and platoon commanders and asked them to explain why they had not seen to it that their representatives were carrying on as they should have done. The "men"—mark you—"men" the officers were not in it—committee was a fallacy and therefore the sports officer took on the job of dragging men out to play games. Apparently competitions were not organised until the sports officer had taken over sole control and then there were no committees to carry out the programme.

From his office he carried on a campaign of paper. He drew up a complete winter programme so that he could not have arranged matches between definite platoons on definite dates. He called for the names, on paper, of volunteers for rugger—(can't you see the companies cursing the imposition of another return). He invited people to attend a lecture on how to play hockey. He asked them to take up a stick and run after a ball for exercise or to join the company of experts. He did not fix up a definite game of hockey on a definite day on a definite ground at a definite time. He did not even make it his business (as it was when he had made himself Sports Dictator), to go round personally and ask so and so if he would care to try his hand on such and such a day.

Chaos the Result.

Having exhibited this chaotic state of affairs to the public he has the effrontery to ask, "Who or what is to blame?" answering in the same breath "The decadent tastes of the young soldier. Now when I was a boy etc." Has "Old Brigade" sufficient of the sporting spirit to admit the true answer to that question?

I have not willingly displayed the slightest contempt for any war crock but only for the system which asks the impossible of them, and given my opinion of those who attack the progeny of the soldiers whose spirit pulled them through the war.

Bearing in mind the record of my own battalion which carried out during the three hottest months of the summer, an inter-company cricket league, soccer league, hockey league, basket-ball league, tug-of-war league, each company playing the other twice, also inter-coy knock-out aquatic sports, inter-platoon knock-out soccer and tug-of-war, not to mention taking part in "Cologne Post" cricket matches, a host of friendly matches, and battalion matches in all the different sports, I repeat, I can say that the facts show that the young soldier is not to blame, whoever else may be.

ANTI-CANT.

ANOTHER DEFENCE.

Sports Gear Packed Up: Weather A Cause.

Another reader says:—Having had the pleasure of reading the articles sent to you by various readers regarding the decline of sport in the Rhine Army, I should like to express my views on the subject. As you know several people argue that the young soldiers have grown tired of sport. Maybe some of them have; but there are other reasons.

One of the causes is that all sport gear has been packed away for some weeks. Another thing is that the weather has been against sport. That is one of the points which "Old Brigade" and several others have overlooked. No one is keen to kick a ball about a field which is covered over by snow to the extent of a few inches. Neither do they feel inclined to play on a quagmire, in which state a great number of football grounds are at present. I hope that when "Old Brigade" reads this he will consider before making statements about the sport of the young soldiers.

When the war was on, men did not have the chance every day of sport of any kind, and consequently there was a great rush by men when out of the line, to get recreation.

BOXING SUPERSTITIONS.

Some Strange Fancies of the London Fighters.

Many boxers are superstitious about fighting on certain days. Nearly half of the boxers in America are against holding matches on Sunday. When Sabbath bouts were tried in New Orleans some time ago, the boxers protested loudly.

Jim Jeffries' favourite day for fighting was Friday. He won most of his important match bouts on that day and his friends were greatly surprised when they heard that he had agreed to box Jack Johnson at Reno on the 4th July 1910, which fell on Monday.

Friday Avoided.

There was an extraordinary number of boxers who refused to sign agreements to box on Fridays. Among them were Tommy Burns, Abe Attell, Owen Moran, and Battling Nelson.

Pedlar Palmer called a pair of green tights that he always more in the ring in his big matches his lucky mascot. He wore them until they were actually shabby, but Pedlar didn't care, for he was winning all his fights. After eight years of wear they were discarded, when Terry McGovern beat him.

Jack Dempsey would not agree to tackle the easiest of men unless he wore the famous black tights in which he won some sixty battles. But the tights lost their magic charm the night he met Fitzimmons who knocked Dempsey out.

Hunchback Harbinger.

Stanley Ketchel had a little hunchback for his harbinger of good fortune. As superstitious as the rest of his profession, Ketchel had absolute faith in the power of the boy, called Little Toby. Toby used to be in Stanley's corner during all his big fights. He was there when Ketchel fought Papke, Kelly, the Sullivan twins, and O'Brien. A month after Toby left him, Ketchel was killed.

HOUSEHOLD BRIGADE CUP.

HOUSEHOLD CAVALRY 3. 1st SCOTS GUARDS 0.

In the Household Brigade Cup, first round, the Household Cavalry played the 1st Scots Guards at Windsor on Thursday. Following a corner-kick Seers opened the scoring for the Cavalry, who led at the interval by a goal to nil. Afterwards Holmes, as the result of splendid individual play, beat the backs and scored. Subsequently Robertson put in a splendid centre, and Martin easily beat Donnelly. Nothing further occurred, and the Cavalry won decisively.

Household Cavalry.—Cpl. Pakenham (1st Life Guards); Tpr. Tilling (1st Life Guards), Cpl. Coulson (2nd Life Guards); Cpl. Leggs (Royal Horse Guards), Cpl. Archer (Royal Horse Guards), Tpr. W. R. Smith (1st Life Guards); Tpr. Seers (2nd Life Guards), Martin (1st Life Guards), Holmes (Royal Horse Guards), Harris (Royal Horse Guards), Cpl. Robertson (1st Life Guards).

1st Scots Guards.—Cpl. Donnelly; Gdsn. Wallace, Sgt. Flockhart; Cpl. Roberts Sgt. Banks, Gdsn. Foley; Drummer Turner Gdsn. McBride, Smith, Friel, McDonnell

ENGLISH RACING.

Lingfield and Manchester Meetings on Friday.

BRIDGEWATER'S SUCCESS.

There was a fairly good attendance at Lingfield on Friday, the weather, was fine and the going heavy. The chief event of the day, the Gorse Handicap, was won by Bridgewater, the other places being taken by Our Stephen and Jupiter.

DETAILS.

November Nursery: — 1, Vale (8—1); 2, Santaquest (15—8); 3, Service Kit (100—6). Seventeen ran.

Lawn Plate: — 1, Narush (2—1); 2, Clairvoyant Gelding (13—8); 3, Maroon (7—11). Six ran.

Gorse Handicap: — 1, Bridegewater (7—1); 2, Our Stephen (10—1); 3, Jupiter (6—1). Sixteen ran.

Medway Plate:—1, Ocydrome (11—10); 2, Coylenius (7—1); 3, New Guinea (85—40). Eight ran.

Club Welter: — 1, Cricket (9—4); 2, Dorset (5—2); 3, Nubian (7—1). Eleven ran.

Yewhurst Welter: — 1, Tom Powrie, (4—1); 2, Quick Thrust (6—1); 3, Paragua (9—4). Thirteen ran.

MANCHESTER.

The weather was dull at Manchester and the going soft.

DETAILS.

Ordsall Nursery:—1, Fraise Filly (4—1); 2, Gamble (10—1); 3, Glenhattie (3—1). Fourteen ran.

Flying Handicap:—1, Miss Maud (5—1); 2, Sans Atout (6—1); 3, Lancovil (7—4). Eleven ran.

Sedgely Handicap:—Finshale (10—1); 2, Enniskeen (100—6); 3, Glaciale (100—8). Eleven ran.

Lancashire Nursery: — 1, Charlebelle (11—4); 2, March Along (5—2); 3, Catchup (25—1). Twentytwo ran.

Pendleton Plate: — 1, Lahloo (2—1); 2, Gripfast (evens); 3, Sword Lily (10—1). Seven ran.

Ellesmere Welter: — 1, Viviani (7—1); 2, Alderton (10—1); 3, Golden Quiver (6—1). Eleven ran.

BIG RACE RESULT.

Alasnam was "nowhere" in the Manchester November Handicap yesterday, King John winning by four lengths. Result:—

1, King John	13 to 2
2, Planet	10 to 1
3, Chat Tor	9 to 2

The seventeen runners were as per probable starters.

HANDICAP BETTING.

The latest available betting in the Manchester November handicap was as follows:

CALAIS SWEEPSTAKE.

Up to the time of going to press, the result of the draw in connection with the Calais November Handicap Sweepstake had not come to hand.

TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIPS.

Frenchmen win in Men's Semi-Finals.

A feature of the play in the World's Covered Courts Championships at Paris, on Friday, was the defeat in the men's semi-finals of Mishu, the Roumanian. He was beaten easily by Decugis, failing to win a single game.

DETAILS.

Men's' singles, semi-finals:—

Decugis beat Mishu, 6 to 2, 7 to 5, 9 to 7.

Gobert beat Mansit, 6 to 1, 8 to 6, 6 to 2.

Ladies' singles semi-finals:—

Madame Golding beat Mlle. B. Amblard. 6 to 4, 6 to 4.

Mixed doubles' semifinals:—

Mrs. Beamish and Decugis beat Miss Holman and Germot 6 to 3, 6 to 4.

The match between Partlock and Mishu, and Dupont and Hirsch in the men's doubles was stopped owing to the lateness of the hour, when the first pair were leading by two sets to one.

ON THE MAT.

Wrestling as an aid to Health and Strength.

A NEGLECTED SPORT.

Although I am a great admirer of the noble art of boxing, both as a means of self defence, and as a very valuable exercise, I maintain that wrestling (in which I will include, catch as catch can, Cumberland and Westmorland, Greco Roman and the style adopted by the Army) is a much better exercise for the development of the physique and for the production of stamina.

Why it is not more popular I cannot say. The benefits derived from wrestling are very valuable to the boxer, as they improve his physique and help to harden him. All who have taken part in wrestling know that I am not suggesting that every boxer would benefit, as it may tend to reduce speed in the expert, but to the average boxer, a little more strength would be of use.

The National Amateur Wrestling Association, which is the governing body in England, decide their competitions by flying falls, two shoulders on the mat, irrespective of time (catch as catch can and Greco Roman); this makes the bouts very fast usually and helps to do away with the mat hugging which is sometimes seen.

Great Physique not Necessary.

The average man believes enormous physique is required to take part in the sport and although this is a very valuable asset, it is not all, as often a speedier, and much more slightly built man wins. The latter, however, must have a fair amount of strength.

The man who has a physique below the average can practise the sport, providing he takes things steadily at first, and has an opponent of his own standard. He will soon notice an improvement.

Another advantage in training for wrestling is that practically every other sport can be indulged in.

I would say to the beginner:

Don't give up on account of stiffness, which is bound to come after the first few bouts. A few minutes bout next time will often remove this.

If wrestling catch as catch can, master the standing throws thoroughly, and learn how to fall.

A very good book on the subject can be bought at the British Empire Leave Club for 1/6d, "The text book on wrestling", in which the beginner will find all he requires.

W. E. HAYES.

MR. COCHRAN'S TERMS.

No "Win, lose or draw" for World's Championship.

In a letter to the "Sporting Life" Mr. Cochran says:—

With reference to the letter which has appeared in several papers from Jack Dempsey's manager, Mr. Kearns, I should be grateful if I could make public through your columns the following statement:—

I have offered a purse of £35,000 for a match between Dempsey and the winner of the Carpentier-Beckett match at the Holborn Stadium on Dec. 4.

The match to take place at Olympia in May or June next.

The purse to be divided 60 per cent. to the winner, and 40 per cent. to the loser. I am prepared to deposit the purse.

I shall not increase the offer, nor will I give either contestant a guaranteed sum, win, lose, or draw.

Carpentier and Beckett are both anxious to meet Dempsey, and Dempsey states that he is anxious to meet the winner of the match on Dec. 4, so there should not be any difficulty in signing up all parties.

BILLIARDS.

Reece and Smith Lead Well In London Matches.

Closing scores in the principal billiards matches on Friday were:

Smith (in play) 6666.
Falkiner 5101.
Reece 7364.
Stevenson (in play) 5664.

WINNER DISQUALIFIED.

Powerful not Qualified to Run in Maiden Race.

Powerful, the winner of the Rothschild Plate at Manchester was disqualified on the grounds that he was not qualified to run in a maiden race. Enniskeen becomes first and Square Meal 7 to 4 third.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

Madame Dayas in Cologne.

Madame Karin Dayas (Berlin) gave a pianoforte recital at the Disch Hotel on Friday evening under the auspices of the Cologne Society of Arts. Her programme consisted entirely of the works of modern composers—a big task to keep an audience constantly interested. That she succeeded, is evidence of her artistic abilities. Madame Dayas is a relative of the great W. H. Dayas, who was one of Liszt's pet pupils and in her playing one felt that she had great natural ability. Cyril Scott's suite, a work which, while not inspiring, strikes one as being a probing for new sensations in sound and harmony was excellently treated. Two pieces of Debussy were especially fine and beautifully executed. Of the modern living writers, Maurice Ravel stands on a height by himself. Ravel is of the Debussy school, but from thence onwards, he has created a world of his own. His "Jeux d'Eau" is a gem or colour and sparkling harmony and one could see that Madame Dayas played it with great liking. Altogether it was a great performance thoroughly enjoyed by a large and interested audience.

A Famous Film.

The film "Lest We Forget" which drew many enormous crowds in England was shown one night last week in the Cologne Central Y.M.C.A. In response to many requests, it will be shown there again tomorrow (Monday) evening. The entertainment will commence at 6.30 so that the whole film will be shown at one sitting. On Friday afternoon it will again be screened to the school children after the formal opening of the school on that day by Lady Robertson.

German Classes.

I have been asked to say in amendment to the weekly programme at the British Empire Leave Club, German Classes will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays, as well as on Fridays and Saturdays.

Lively Debate.

A lively Debate took place at the British Empire Leave Club on Friday night. The question debated was "That in the opinion of this house there should be absolute prohibition of the drink traffic." Pte. Kenny, R.A.S.C. spoke first in favour of the motion and Sgt. Sherman D.L.I. was the leading opposer. Perhaps, if anything, the weight in argument was on the prohibition side, but nevertheless the motion in its favour was lost by the narrow majority of two votes.

Next Weeks Topic.

This week's debate will be on the subject, "That in War all methods are justifiable." Sgt. Sherman, D.L.I. will move, and Pte. Doughty, Labour Company will oppose the motion. This debate takes place Friday next at 6.30 p.m. There is plenty of keenness and no dearth of speaking ability, but bigger numbers are wanted.

Beethoven Concert.

On Monday next, at 7.30., there will be a Beethoven Concert at the Disch Hotel, given by the famous pianist, Hedwig Meyer.

JACQUES.

FOOTBALL JOTTINGS.

By "Tynesider."

One critic of the Aston Villa—West Bromwich battle stated that with the exception of Hardy, the Villa eleven might as well have stayed in the dressing room. Scathing criticism.

* * *

The King has given his consent to the forming of a football team comprising members of the Buckingham Palace staff. He presented them with a full outfit and gave them the use of a playing pitch in the Kensington Palace grounds.

* * *

Tierney, Tottenham's capture from Durham City, is an ex-Sunderland policeman. He knows how to "arrest" the ball all right.

* * *

Jobey has relieved Currie of the responsibilities of captain of Leicester City. The ex-Newcastle player will never forget his Cup-tie experience at the Palace against Bradford City.

* * *

The Wolves' matches on November 29th, and December 6th, against Barnsley and Stockport respectively will be played at the Hawthorns, the ground of West Bromwich.

* * *

When will Micky Hamill recross the Irish Channel to don a famous jersey? Rumour says shortly and a London club is mentioned. Scotland may, however, be his destination.

* * *

Wilf Low, of Newcastle, has missed but 24 league games since 1910-1911. This famous pivot can adapt himself to whatever game his opponents adopt.

FENCING IN THE SERVICES.

Airmen Too Good For Army In Competitions.

The Army and the Royal Air Force met at Bertrand's Academy, on Thursday afternoon, in a series of competitions, in every one of which the Airmen proved their superiority. The teams were composed as follows:—

Army.—Capt. Ward Tetley, Capt. Smith, and S.M. Elliot (foils), Colonel Campbell, Maj. H. F. S. Huntington, and S.M. Elliot (sabres), Colonel Campbell, Capt. Ward Tetley, and S.M. Eggleton (epee), Capt. Barnes, S.M. Read, and Q.M.S. Reardon (bayonets).

R.F.A.—Maj. E. G. H. Clark, Flight-Lieut. F. G. Sheriffe, and S.M. Grainger, in all competitions.

During the afternoon the following officiated as judges and referees:—Col. Campbell, Col. Mathey, Maj. Pickin, Capt. A. W. Hammond, Mr. Bertrand, jun., and S.M. Owen. The results were as follows:—

Sabres.—R.A.F. beat Army, five hits to four.

Foils.—R.A.F. beat Army, five hits to four.

Epee.—R.F.A. beat Army, six hits to three.

Bayonets.—R.F.A. beat Army, six hits to three.

WRESTLING DECISIONS.

To be included in Amateur Sports Week.

At the monthly meeting of the National Amateur Wrestling Association Council Capt. Cuckow, O.B.E., and C.S.M. W Mason attended as (temporarily) representing the Army Boxing Association, in whose hands at present is vested the control of Army wrestling.

Approval was given to the action of the hon. secretary in making arrangements for the inclusion of wrestling among the events to be included in the amateur sports week being organised by Mr. A. Molinari to take place at the Holborn Stadium between Dec. 8 and 13.

The events to be decided are the 8½st, 10½st, and heavy-weights amateur championship, C.A.C.C. style. In addition, there will be a competition for Army wrestlers, in the Army style, the weights being settled at 9st, 10½st, and heavy-weight.

A COMPETITION HUMORIST.

Read The Rules Before Entering For Our Contest.

One humorist very kindly enclosed a ten pfennig piece and a letter with his coupons this week. The note read, "For the office boy from a competitor in the sweep-steak." We have passed this on to the office boy and he is, we believe, about to invest it in war bonds.

Apart from the humorous side of the question, however, we would point out that the competitor has broken the rules. They clearly state, "No correspondence may be enclosed with coupons."

Many competitors fail to read the rules and numerous entries are disqualified weekly owing to this omission. We are continually receiving coupons without the entrance fee. This means disqualification.

In the coupon printed below, strike out the team you think will lose, or, if you predict a draw, leave both teams standing, add your name and address clearly, place the coupon in an envelope with one mark and send it along to this office. Any number of coupons may be sent at the rate of one mark each.

Coupons must be addressed:—

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE IN A NUTSHELL.

Invalids' Progress.

The two invalid steeplechase jockeys, Mason and J. Kelly, are making very good progress, and the latter expects to be about again before Christmas.

Bristol R. Recruit.

Bristol Rovers have secured the transfer from St. Mirren of David Steele, a half-back. Steele usually plays at left half, but he can fill either inside forwards position.

Slow Starters.

Trowbridge, Foulmartlaw, Linonyx, Avoine, Funny Face, Hakone, Loxley, Tete-a-Tete, Beaverbrook (half-whipped round), and Theolin began slowly in their respective races at Manchester.

Next Season's Cricket.

Surrey have arranged to play home and home matches next season with all the first-class cricketing counties, except Gloucestershire, Derbyshire and Worcestershire.

Still a Star.

George Wall, of Oldham Athletic, has recovered his very best form. When he left Old Trafford it was generally thought that his best days were over, but he is establishing himself as a great favourite at Boundary Park. He has got back his confidence, which means a lot.

Offer and Refusal.

Norwich City have refused an offer of £3,000 for the transfer of Lonsdale, Doran, Broadhead, and Batey.

Christening.

The Clairvoyante gelding by Swynford has been named Swindle, and the Cyclamen-filly by Sunstar, Parasol.

Golden Melody's Owner.

Should the Jockey Club decide at their forthcoming meeting to do away with assumed names, then the identity of Mr. V. Stewart, the owner of Golden Melody, the winner of the Delamere Handicap at Manchester, will be disclosed.

New Players for Coventry.

Coventry City have secured two new players, Walker, inside right or centre, from Birmingham, and Hanney, centre half, from Manchester. The new men are the first outcome of the recent appointment of Mr. Harry Pollett as manager.

If—

Ivanhoe would have finished a lot closer to the placed horses in the Delamere Handicap at Manchester had he not slipped up and almost fallen with his jockey round the bottom turn. According to Templeman, who rode him, his mount was going very well at the time.

Shoemaker for Spain.

Shoemaker was bought in for 600 guineas, and Discussion sold to Mr. Joyce (acting on behalf of the King of Spain) for 800 guineas at Manchester yesterday.

Wolverhampton's Ground.

Wolverhampton have been granted permission to play home matches at West Bromwich while the Wanderers' ground is closed.

Training Resumed.

David Calderhead, jun., the Orient player, has been operated upon for an abscess on the ankle, and has so far recovered that he has now been able to resume training.

W. Smith fit Again.

W. Smith, who was rather badly knocked about when Cargo fell with him in the Valentine Steeplechase at Liverpool, is all right again, and expects to be seen in the saddle at Birmingham on on Monday and Tuesday next.

Scottish F.A.'s Decision.

The Scottish Football Association Council, at a meeting in Glasgow last night, decided to give their vote in favour of the proposed alteration of the international Football Federation Articles, whereby the Central Powers are to be excluded.

Next Year.

E. Gardner will probably ride for H. Sadler next season.

R. Stokes Home.

Reggie Stokes, who rode in Spain and France with such marked success, witnessed the racing at Manchester. He is on a holiday trip, but leaves for India next week.

Croydon Golf.

The opening meeting of the Croydon and District Professional Golfers' Alliance will be held at Roehampton on Dec. 3. A 36 holes medal competition will be decided, and for this the Roehampton Club is providing prizes value £25.

Joe Smith's Injury.

It is bad news to hear that the injury to Joe Smith, of Bolton Wanderers and International fame, is much more serious than was at first thought. The injury is an internal one. It is to be hoped that the gloomy view that his football career may be ended is grossly exaggerated.

Six Lengths Win.

Mr. Albert Lowry brought off a coup with Ugly Duckling at Manchester. Everyone connected with the horse had their maximum on and had the pleasure of seeing the horse come home in solitary state six lengths ahead of his nearest attendant.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

American Fashion.

I noticed a party of French Colonial troops yesterday. Each one wore his revolver slung Wild West fashion at his hip.

Short.

At the entrance to a business house yesterday, I noticed the legends "Tür zu", and "Please shut the door" Here at any rate the German language has it for brevity and for bluntness too. I prefer the English way of putting it.

Only Ten.

Only ten results are required in our No. 10 Football Contest now running. Turn your attention to the coupon on page 3 and make your efforts for our prize.

Everybody Busy.

I was surprised to learn on good authority that there is comparatively little unemployment in Germany.

A Floral Tribute.

In a large works I visited yesterday I saw a novel sight. The foreman's desk resembled a decorated shrine. It seems he had completed 25 years' service and the custom in such cases is for the man's desk to be florally adorned while he received an honorarium and a holiday.

Their Rations.

I dropped into an extensive German works the other day at an interesting moment. The employés were drawing the weekly family ration of butter, cheese and corned beef — on payment of course

A Distinction.

A witness in the Summary Court said he was a member of the same club as the accused, worked at the same place, lived in the same street, and walked to and from meals and home at night together. The prosecuting officer: "In other words, you are friends?" Witness (excitedly) "No, no!"

Hens on Strike.

Eggs in Rhineland are not only dear, but almost impossible to get, whilst in Belgium, although a little dear, they are quite plentiful—why I wonder?

New Books.

"The Cologne Post" bookshop—that is the one in the arcade of the Hohestrasse—has just received several new books which would prove attractive to everyone. For instance those wishing to study Russian will find Hugo's Russian Grammar in five parts, done in Hugo's inimitable style of language teaching. A fine assortment of Kipling is also on sale. Early next week it is hoped to have our sample Christmas cards on view.

Gas fire.

I noticed a fine piece of camouflage yesterday. It was a gas fire and was made to represent a log fire in an open hearth. At a little distance it certainly looked realistic.

The Secret of Youth.

Lieut. Esme Percy does not seem to age with the years. He is just as youthful looking now as when he was a member of Miss Horniman's Repertory Company at the Gaiety Theatre, Manchester. I have many pleasant recollections of seeing him in collaboration with Basil Dean, Iden Payre, Miss Ethel Darragh, Miss Nora Limerick and other talented artistes who helped to make Miss Horniman's Company famous.

By civil post.

Many entries are reaching us for our football contest through the German post. As some are from lady competitors we are tempted to think "Wifie" in having a shot for our prize un-be-known to her "Hubby". If successful it should provide her with sufficient "Pin money" for her immediate needs.

"Wie Stetz."

Much amusement was caused by this being said instead of "Wie Stets" to a German acquaintance by a Tommy. Stetz is in the language of Cologne "a dogs tail."

Renovating Hats.

Numerous advertisements appear daily in the German papers regarding the renovation of old hats. The price of these articles to-day is so prohibitive that the people largely patronise these advertisers.

Seven Months Idle.

There is a German waiter at one of the Officers' Clubs in Cologne who was for 24 years a chef in a London hotel. After being repatriated he was for seven months out of employment until he was fortunate enough to secure his present position.

Another Howler.

I saw another sample of murdered English yesterday. It was in a restaurant window and read "Hen and eggs, prize seven marks." No doubt it was a very cheap dish.

Looks Smarter.

Once no soldier ever walked out without carrying a swagger cane. It certainly improved deportment and I can't help thinking it would minimise the "hands in pockets" style so much in vogue to-day.

Against Bill Sykes.

I don't know whether the gentle art of burglary is practised in Germany more extensively than it is in England, but precautions taken against the uninvited visitor are extremely thorough.

Wedding Rings.

German women during the war even gave up their wedding rings to relieve the gold shortage. They received in exchange a rustless iron ring made at Krupps and bearing the word "Vaterlandsdank." The designing of the ring was carried out by a famous German artist.

"Pride in his Regiment."

Some time ago I heard an argument about the doings of certain regiments. One of the speakers told a member of a famous Irish Regiment that his unit never did any fighting. News to hand states that the wife of the speaker mentioned still wears black.

German Programmes.

The programmes issued in German theatres are generally folded and one has to tear along a perforated edge in order to open them. Probably to prevent attendants re-selling used ones.

Still Noticeable.

Pick up any illustrated German journal you like and it is ten to one it will contain a photograph with German soldiery in it. The idea that militarism is dead in Germany is not carried out by the photographs and items published.

RHINELANDER.

OPINIONS OF THE MOMENT.

DARDANELLES ECHO.

Lieut.-Colonel Repington the well-known military expert, says:—The expedition to the Dardanelles was undoubtedly the greatest of the co-joint operations attempted in the course of the recent war. It failed in spite of gallant leading and great heroism on the part of sailors and soldiers. It was not marred by any of those acute differences between the Services of which the past contains so many painful records, and still it failed. It will be taught in our future war-schools as a typical example of how not to conduct amphibious enterprises.

BERLIN PESSIMISM.

Dr. Otto Hoetzsch, Professor of Modern History at the University of Berlin, writes on the critical state of German internal affairs, which not only precludes interest in foreign politics but prevents Germany from participating in the progress of the world at large. Dark clouds, are collecting ever more densely over the Fatherland, the value of the German mark falls irresistibly, the menace of a complete collapse of the railway system becomes daily more serious, and these facts, combined with the internal political tension produced by various causes, remind me strongly that the stoppage of railway traffic in consequence of the heavy snowfall of February, 1917, was the signal for the March revolution in Russia.

PREMIUM BONDS.

Sir Oswald Stoll writes:—We are apparently on the verge of an issue of premium bonds. The wisdom of such an issue is difficult to perceive, but wisdom in finance from the national point of view is deemed folly when viewed from the prevailing international standpoint. So premium bonds will probably be the next episode in the tragedy of reconstruction which is being enacted. As it is useless either to point out that the wheel of fortune will add no more to production than the throw of the dice or racing; or to say that the "Flutter," however harmless as a form of amusement or an occasional excitement, is utterly rotten as a national economic policy; the only thing left is to hope that the Government will do a wrong thing in the least injurious way.

WHY MEN ARE SELFISH.

Lillie Ross Clyne writes:— When I happened upon an article some months ago entitled "The Spoilt Sex," I had not the least doubt to which sex it applied, because the spoiling of man has ever been woman's most joyous occupation. True, she may grumble at the effect once her object is accomplished, she may even blame the spoilt one and in time dislike him, but that won't prevent her from taking up another man with all the weaknesses of "maledom" and begin spoiling him. She means to be kind, but as a matter of fact it is a phase of cruelty. What is regarded as man's selfishness is really created by the women with whom he comes into contact from the cradle onward.

THE REAL PUSSYFOOT.

The Rev. R. W. Thompson, of Bolton, speaking at the Congregational Union meetings said that medical students might rag "Pussyfoot" Johnson to-day, but in a little while they would be joining the ranks of noble workers for humanity, and they would then find that drink was the real Pussyfoot that hindered the work of the physician, that emptied cradles and filled graves. The worst area for overcrowding was usually the worst area for drink.

WORRIES OF WINTER.

Mr. J. F. E. Coope writes. The housewife knows only too well that the money on which she managed to feed the family so comfortably in the warm months will not go nearly so far when the cold weather gives them appetites of an alarming size. A friend of mine has calculated that her husband eats nearly twice as much in winter as in summer. Again, the coal bill is trebled and the gas company's periodical visits to inspect the gas meter are to be more dreaded than ever. Clothes, too, always a heavy item of expenditure, are, by the decree of the powers that be in the clothing trade, to be greatly increased in price. That thick pair of shoes and warm scarf, which "we simply must have," are not to be bought for nothing now.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION.

Sir Robert Baden-Powell speaking on the vexed question of education says:—I should like to endorse very heartily the suggestion for the development of physical education of the individual as opposed to the more usual collective physical instruction. I would venture even to add for the "physical development of the nation's boyhood and manhood" by urging the still greater importance of bringing about increased physical welfare and knowledge on the part of the nation's girlhood and womanhood. To some extent we are carrying out the ideas in the Boy Scout and Girl Guide movements, where we are encouraging responsibility on the part of the individual for his or her physical development up to a standard and for his or her personal health and hygiene.

HAIG AND LUDENDORFF.

Field Marshal Earl Haig, speaking of Ludendorff's Memoirs which he has been reading says: — One of the things that most struck me, as a man who has had the responsibility of a great command, was the mental distress and hopelessness of outlook that overcame him when he worked, the great German Army, had broken to pieces in his hand. That is an experience that I never had to contemplate. I knew that even though the men I commanded were hopelessly outnumbered, though their own numbers were reduced and their strength tried to the utmost by the strain of great unequal battles, yet such men as remained to me would each of them fight a man's battle and fight it the more stubbornly the more desperate conditions grew. It would never break to pieces in my hand.

O.R.G.'S.

ISSUED FOR GUIDANCE OF OFFICER'S WIVES IN COLOGNE.

5866. TRANSPORT OF WIVES:—

Kissing of, wives, in mistake for.

In cases of this occurring an explanation will be immediately forwarded to the wife (See, "Perhaps" 1919).

WILFURD.

A CONCERT PARTY.

They arrived wrapped in furs with their faces wreathed in smiles, five winsome ladies, and their leader was known by the charming name of "Muriel."

It was a cold snowy day and so by the special permission of the G.O.C. a car had been sent for them, for were they not engaged in the greatest duty of all, that of cheering our boys?

We had engaged, for the moderate sum of sixty marks, a local Concert Hall, a really attractive building, with a good stage and well lighted.

The boys were marched to this building for it was more of a change for them. They formed an enthusiastic audience and were determined to give their visitors a great reception.

What a programme! Words fail to describe it. Miss Lena Ashwell's concert parties have always contained the best and most talented artistes of our country. I heard the first ever sent out in the old days in France, and since then millions of our lads have been sent into the seventh heaven of delight by the soul thrilling songs sung by the sweetest and fairest of the daughters of England?

Who can ever repay the debt of gratitude we all owe to them?

The violinist, a second Alfred Barker in skill, sent a thrill through the audience by the infinite sweetness of her selections.

She could make those strings thrill like a bird or hum like the bees. Her touch was perfect.

A dark haired little girl, with a cello, almost a big as herself manipulated her bow in a marvellous way. She made one forget for a time, everything but the charm of her art, and as she played the exquisite sweet melody "Drink to me only with thine eyes" in response to an encore, the faces of the men lighted up with intense pleasure.

The soprano had a voice of surpassing sweetness. She had the face of an angel and sang like one.

The contralto, who was also the leader of the party, had perhaps the greatest reception. She was encored again and again and scored by singing with great pathos those songs which have always appealed to the hearts of wanderers and awakened memories:

"Annie Laurie"
"My Ain Folk."

The side splitting jokes and humorous songs of a fair haired girl with a most captivating smile made a delightful change in the programme. She proved herself a great favourite with the boys, who are ever ready to respond to the best humour.

Again and again she was recalled by tremendous cheers and her stock of stories seemed inexhaustible. So another afternoon passed away for this particular Unit with the Rhine Army but its memory will live, and we pay our generous tribute to those who make it possible for us to chase away dull care and break up the monotony of our everyday tasks and duties.

C.K.

TO CORRESPONDENTS AND CONTRIBUTORS.

Names and addresses, not necessarily for publication, please.

Several times have we made this request yet continually do we receive letters and articles with no more than a "nom de plume" attached.

All MSS, letters, drawings etc. must carry the name and official address of the person sending it in. Do not put it only on the covering letter, put it on the MSS, or other thing, enclosed. And please print it in block letters; we are too busy to decipher cryptograms.

FROM EVERYWHERE.

LORD MILNER IN EGYPT.

FURTHER DISTURBANCES IN CAIRO AND ALEXANDRIA.

PRINCE OF WALES STARTS FOR HOME.

EGYPTIAN UNREST.

MANY KILLED IN STREET RIOTING.

Eleven Egyptians were killed at Cairo in the rioting which occurred on the 16th. One or two policemen fired ball cartridge instead of blank. Subsequently there was firing on the crowd of students and when the British troops were called out they too had to fire to free themselves. Police stations were attacked and one was set on fire. Later in the day British troops took charge of the town, which has since been fairly quiet.

Intense excitement prevailed at Alexandria on the 18th, in consequence of a rumour that Lord Milner had arrived in the harbour. During the morning the police had been compelled to fire on the crowd. Military pickets, wearing shrapnel helmets, and a number of armoured cars entered the town at two in the afternoon. A rabble consisting of some hundreds of small boys went through the town breaking shop windows in the by-streets.

Some excitement was caused by a funeral procession in which a flag bearing the words "victime pour la liberté" was carried. The crowd returning from the funerals of those killed in the riots filled the principal streets for an hour and trade was completely paralysed.

Troops were posted at commanding points and armoured cars and cavalry patrolled the streets of Alexandria. The entry of the troops was welcomed with expressions of thankfulness by the Europeans. An innovation at the demonstrations was a number of small girls walking in front of the bier in the funeral procession of a man who was killed in the disturbances, boys forming the vanguard and rearguard.

When the mob searched the tramcars for officers and soldiers, one officer owed his escape to his being hidden by some respectable natives under their robes. A big funeral procession of victims of the recent riots was not allowed to enter the European quarter. Those participating in the procession behaved in an orderly manner, excepting some roughs, who endeavoured to assemble in the Abdin quarter. British mounted troops soon dispersed them. A carriage procession of harem women carrying flags and indulging in the usual cries was held on the 18th. As evidence of the theatrical nature of the demonstrations may be instanced the case of one man who was buried with great ceremony. He actually died in hospital of haemorrhoids!

Lord Allenby has requested four local Nationalists to leave Cairo and to remain on their country estates, but they have decided to ignore the request.

It is reported that Wahba Pasha, ex-Finance Minister, has accepted the Premiership.

Delayed messages state that British troops have now taken over the maintenance of public security in Alexandria. Sporadic demonstrations continue at Cairo where British troops are patrolling the streets.

WOMEN'S R.A.F.

OLD COMRADES' ASSOCIATION.

A great number of friendships were made between women serving in the W.R.A.F. during the war period and afterwards, and the Air Ministry feels that some opportunity should be afforded for periodical renewal of those friendships. With this in view it is proposed to form a W.R.A.F. Old Comrades' Association to foster as far as possible the 'esprit de corps' that existed in the old days. It is hoped to form local branches, to arrange reunions and to hold annual meetings of members. Apart from the social side, the Association proposes to adopt practical means to assist members in obtaining employment, to help those who are in need of assistance and to endeavour to get suitable cases into homes, hospitals, etc. and to make arrangements during their convalescence for members who have been ill. All officers and other ranks have been invited to attend the inauguration meeting on the 29th November at Birkbeck College, Chancery-lane. The proposed subscription will be merely nominal.

RAILWAYMEN'S LEADER "RAGGED."

The President of the National Union of Railwaymen, Mr. Cramp, was "ragged" by the students of Glasgow University on Friday night. He was addressing the University Socialist Club, and bitter opposition was aroused by his stating that the attitude of the railwaymen during the strike was parallel to that of the medical profession when the National Insurance Act was introduced. The meeting closed prematurely and Mr. Cramp was hustled to the station amid jeers and hisses.

HOMEWARD BOUND.

AMERICA'S FAREWELL TO OUR PRINCE.

Scenes of enthusiasm even surpassing those already witnessed during the visit of the Prince of Wales to New York, characterised the dinner given in his honour by the Pilgrims' Society on Friday, at which more than 800 guests were present. In proposing the health of His Royal Highness, Mr. Chauncey Depew drew an eloquent picture of the splendid services rendered by the British Royal Family in the past to the causes of world freedom.

He declared, amid an uproar of cheering, that the Prince had been just amongst his own folk in the United States. "He has grasped," said Mr. Depew," and gracefully incorporated our American ways. He has won our hearts and carries home an appreciation of our sacrifices in the war."

The Prince, in reply, made graceful reference to all the kindnesses he had received, and referred to the wonderful confidence and goodwill manifested along the entire three thousand miles of the international border between Canada and the United States. "This state of things obtained," he said, "because you on your side and we Britishers on ours have, under different forms, the same political faiths, the same human aims and the same practical ideas."

Senator Depew read cablegrams from King George and Queen Alexandra. The King said he derived much pleasure from the gratifying message regarding his son's visit, and cordially thanked the Pilgrims' Society for their hospitality. Special interest, the telegram added, would attach to the gathering from the presence of Mr. Chauncey Depew, who had been associated with the welcome to King Edward many years ago. The Prince's arduous day ended with a reception by the 71st Regiment at the Armoury, after which he boarded the Renown for his last night's sleep in New York waters.

A storm of cheers arose from the great crowd assembled on the banks of the Hudson as the Renown began moving out of harbour to the thunderous roar of guns from the American warships. A huge procession of motor cars dashed in pursuit of the warships along the river banks for some miles. When last seen the Prince was waving his cap from the fighting top. As the Renown passed into the bay with her consort, the Constance, the American battleship Delaware, with seven American destroyers, closed in on her wake with the British naval ensign flying from their main masts. They escorted the Renown to the vicinity of Halifax, which was reached yesterday morning.

The Prince was busily employed on board. One of his acts was to decorate over a hundred British and American soldiers, sailors and nurses.

In a message of farewell to the people of New York the Prince of Wales said he would not say goodbye, as he intended to pay another visit to the United States as soon as he could, as he wished to see more of the country and people.

EXCHANGE OF COURTESY.

VIOLENT SCENES IN SPANISH PARLIAMENT.

Turbulent scenes occurred in the Spanish Chamber of Deputies at Madrid on Friday. Senor Laborda, addressing Count San Luis, Minister of Food Supplies, shouted "You are engaged in dishonest business," to which the Count retorted, "To use such an expression is to behave like a pig."

On being refused permission to address the Chamber, Laborda rushed at the Minister of Food brandishing a stick. Another Deputy managed to ward off the blow. Great disorder immediately broke out in the public galleries, one occupant shouting, "Get out. All this time we are without bread in Madrid."

The sitting was temporarily suspended but when it was resumed another violent altercation took place between the two Deputies and the endeavour to restore order failing, the sitting was finally suspended.

THE BERLIN PARODY.

FAMOUS SOCIALIST'S OPINIONS.

The well-known Swedish Socialist leader, M. Branting, writing in the "Social Democratin," describes the proceedings of the Parliamentary Investigation Commission at Berlin as a regular parody. He says the Commission has now adjourned indefinitely after standing hat in hand and humbly bowing before its pre-Revolution masters. "Everything," he says, "indicates that the old spirit is raising its head more impudently than ever."

SINN FEIN.

WHOLESALE OUTRAGES AND CONFLICTS.

An extraordinary crop of violent outrages occurred in Ireland during the week-end.

Despite the authorities, an attempt was made on Sunday at Limerick to hold a public procession in honour of three men named Allen, Larkin and O'Brien, who were executed fifty-two years ago at Manchester. The military were called out to support the police who made several baton charges during the three hours which elapsed before the unruly crowd was dispersed. The police barrack windows were smashed with stones and great excitement prevailed, Some of the police, several civilians and one soldier were injured.

A similar demonstration arranged to be held at Cork was proclaimed by the military authorities. Large numbers of military and police, fully armed, occupied the streets, the meeting, however, being surreptitiously held and addressed by one of the City Sinn Fein M.P.'s. When the military were leaving the streets, they were derisively jeered.

During an armed raid at the residence of Colonel Tootenham, Deputy Lieutenant for County Clare, a fierce struggle occurred between six masked men and the Colonel, who refused to surrender any arms. He was knocked down by a blow from a club, after which the raiders escaped with a quantity of arms and ammunition.

A party of men with revolvers attempted to hold up the Dublin-Cork mail train at Goolds Cross, County Tipperary. A police patrol opened fire and a running fight followed along the platform, the raiders disappearing in the darkness.

The Irish Prison Board announces that in future hunger-striking prisoners will not be released under any circumstances. The authorities declare that they will accept full responsibility for any consequences of such strikes.

WAZIRI REVOLT.

SECRET HELP FROM THE AFGHANS.

Reuter's correspondent with the British Field Force in Waziristan telegraphs that Shah Doula's propaganda led the Mahsuds to anticipate an amount of Afghan support sufficient to permit them defying the Government of India with impunity, but the extent to which these expectations will be realised remains to be seen. Undoubtedly any forces which are at Shah Doula's disposal will be used to assist the tribesmen, but the question which remains very doubtful is the extent to which Doula will be secretly or openly supported from Kabul.

Another reason which is doubtless influencing the Mahsuds in adhering to their attitude of persistent obstinacy is the nature of the British terms. These cannot properly be called severe, but are eminently just, which is inevitable if peace is to be preserved, and this to the Mahsuds means much the same as great severity. Anyway nothing is left, but to pursue the punitive operations with the utmost vigour.

NAVAL OFFICERS.

URGED TO COMPETE FOR CIVIL SERVICE.

The Admiralty announces that in view of the probable large surplus of officers in the Executive branch of the Service over post-war requirements and the consequent smaller chances of advancement which must exist in future, the attention of all those officers of the Executive branch who where born on or after the 2nd August 1891, is particularly drawn to the opportunities of entering the Civil Service, both Home and Indian, and of Eastern Cadetships.

Officers whose candidature is approved by the Board of Admiralty will be granted leave to compete in examinations and will be allowed to retain their position on the active list until the result of the examination is known.

AUSTRALIAN GRATUITIES.

In connection with the recent trouble in Australia over the payment of gratuities to returned members of the Australian Imperial Force, Mr. Hughes, the Premier, has now arranged for payment in cash instead of Bonus to certain classes of soldiers and their relatives. Employers in Sydney have agreed to cash these gratuity Bonds.

"AWAY WITH THESE BAUBLES."

At the last meeting of the Islington Borough Council a resolution was moved that it is unnecessary to have the mace at meetings of the Council, and undesirable that the Mayor, Aldermen, and Councillors should wear gowns, and that until the Council order otherwise the mace shall not be used.

JELLICOE'S APPRECIATION.

Lord Jellicoe has sent a cheque for twenty pounds to the Mercantile Marine Service Association as "A small token of my admiration for the magnificent work of our Mercantile Marine during the late war."

Y.M.C.A. APPEAL.

ITS WAR WORK AND ITS FUTURE.

Interesting figures relating to the war work of the Y.M.C.A. are published in connection with its present deficit of seven hundred thousand pounds and its appeal to the nation. It is explained that the object of the appeal is to enable the Association to meet the financial obligations of its war emergency fund and war work; to continue work amongst soldiers abroad and at certain centres at home where large bodies of troops are congregated; to maintain and develop its work at home and abroad, especially amongst the rising generation of lads and boys, many of whom have not had the benefit of control by their fathers or elder brothers for the last five years.

On its war work the Y.M.C.A. has spent £7,065,000. It has received in contributions from the public, as surplus from trading, and receipts from concerts billiards, beds etc. £6,460,000, leaving a deficit to August 31st of £605,000. It is estimated that by the 31st December this excess of expenditure over income will amount to £705,000. During the war the Y.M.C.A. spent £844,755 on free work for the Navy and Army, including £318,000 for free writing paper; £33,000 in providing free hostels and board for relatives of the dangerously wounded, who were thus enabled to visit their wounded relatives in hospitals in France; £54,000 in providing teas, smokes and rests for walking wounded on their way to the dressing stations; £141,000 on pioneer work for education in the Army; £29,000 on sports and athletic material; £166,000 on concerts and entertainments by professional artists at home and abroad; £100,000 on other items such as enquiry bureaux, hospitality, night patrols, newspapers, books, testaments, song and hymn books.

With the armistice the Y.M.C.A. immediately initiated a policy of rigid economy, retrenching everywhere it seemed possible to do so without letting the soldier down.

Even so, says Lord Askwith, the Treasurer, unless the public are prepared to continue to support the Y.M.C.A. and help them out of their difficulties, immediate and forced liquidation cannot be deferred.

LETTISH SENSATION.

RUSSIAN ARMY SURRENDERS TO GERMANS.

A Stockholm telegram reports that General Yudenitch and his staff have arrived at Reval. The Lett Commander-in-Chief has received a wireless message from General von Eberhardt, stating that the West Russian Army has placed itself under German protection. "I have taken over the supreme command and beg you to intimate your consent to conclude a truce," concluded the message.

The Lett Commander, who has not yet answered this communication, points out that the German Government recently disavowed these troops and now a German general takes these selfsame rebels under German protection in order to save them from final defeat, thereby making the aggression against Lettland an affair of Germany.

TROOPS FROM THE EAST.

An Official Return just issued shows that 143,752 officers and other ranks were conveyed in transports on long sea routes during the month of October. Of this number 9,812 sailed from Egypt, 21,697 from India and Mesopotamia, 10,670 from the Black Sea and 9,991 from Russia, to the United Kingdom. 28,095 sailed from the United Kingdom to India, and 2,020 to Egypt.

REPATRIATION OF PRISONERS.

The War Office states that during the week ending 12th November 13,908 German prisoners of war were repatriated from the United Kingdom, and 43 from Malta. During the same week 750 Turks and 58 Bulgarians were sent home from Saloniko, 610 Turks from Egypt and 66 Austrians from Malta.

ANTHRAX FROM SHAVING BRUSHES.

The possibility of anthrax being communicated to human beings from infected shaving brushes was mentioned at a Chelsea inquest upon George Duncan, a bank clerk, who lived at Lupus-street, Pimlico.

Medical evidence showed that Duncan, had died from heart failure following anthrax. It was stated in further evidence that the deceased had shaving apparatus of his own, but it was very old, and it was quite possible that he had recently been visiting barbers' shops for the purpose of being shaved.

TURKEY APPEALS FOR PEACE.

The Sublime Porte has appealed direct to the Peace Conference to hasten the settlement of the Turkish question, pointing out grave reasons for a speedy conclusion of peace. The Turkish Minister for War affirms that the Ottoman Chamber of Deputies will meet at Constantinople as usual.

Sir Stuart Samuel has completed his Mission to Galicia and will return to England next week.

FILIBUSTERING.

D'ANNUNZIO AND BALKAN STATES.

It is declared in authoritative circles that D'Annunzio's troops are spreading a reign of terror in Zara. All people not wearing an armlet of Italian colours, inscribed "Italy or death" are attacked and spat upon.

Supporters of D'Annunzio describe him as "Liberator of Dalmatia and protector of Montenegro, both of which are groaning under barbarous slavery."

Italian officers at Spalato (160 miles S.E. of Fiume) declare that D'Annunzio intends to attempt the delivery of Montenegro, giving to it the port of Cattaro.

A statement issued at Rome reveals that when D'Annunzio landed at Zara, Admiral Millo, the Italian Governor, was closeted with him at the Governor's residence for half an hour. Millo then addressed the officers outside, declaring that he had given his word that he would never evacuate any part of Dalmatia, which he said had been outraged by the Pact of London. Both Millo and D'Annunzio then addressed the crowd and reviewed the troops. When D'Annunzio returned to Fiume next morning the squadron hoisted the Dalmatian flag.

The Italian Government has disavowed Admiral Millo, who has been ordered to remain at his post pending Government action in his case. The Government also promises vigorous action to prevent the carrying out of other expeditions which are preparing against Sebenice, Spalato and elsewhere in Dalmatia.

Semi-official statements from Rome say that searches made at Ancona, Turin, and Milan show that exalted personages have attempted to profit out of the situation at Fiume. In view of seditious actions in Italy itself the Government is taking steps to prevent any disturbance of the country's internal peace.

WILD IRISH.

MILITARY ATTACKED IN LONDONDERRY.

Friday night was a wild one at Derry, a crowd attacking a number of men of the Dorset Regiment who were returning to barracks about midnight. The police vainly endeavoured to rescue the soldiers, and comrades coming to their assistance were attacked with stones and bottles. The soldiers finally took refuge in the Salvation Army hall, where fierce fighting proceeded until a strong armed detachment with fixed bayonets arrived. The crowd pelted them, shouting "Up Dublin" and booing, but the demonstration of force proved sufficient to disperse the crowd. A number of arrests were made.

PILGRIM TRAFFIC TO BAGHDAD.

Pilgrim traffic from Tabriz to Baghdad has now begun to pass through Sulemaniyah for the first time for many years. Some 500 pilgrims passed through that place during the week ending 25th October.

Sulemaniyah was recently the scene of a revolt against British authority led by Sheikh Mahmud. This rising was eventually suppressed by a force moving to Sulemaniyah from Kirkuk and Sheikh Mahmud was captured.

The fact that pilgrims are moving freely through the path of Kurdistan is confirmatory of the reports that have been received of the restoration of law and order in Sulemaniyah and its vicinity and bodes well for the future tranquility of Southern Kurdistan.

TOTAL WAR HONOURS.

Statistics of honours won in the field have just been issued by the War Office. Between August 1914 and the 31st October 1919, a total of 236,035 honours, exclusive of the Royal Air Force, were awarded for services in field, and 13,382 for other services connected with the war. For services in the field 576 Victoria Crosses were conferred, 8,882 Distinguished Service Orders, 3,019 Orders of the British Empire, 36,707 Military Crosses, 114,517 Military Medals and 21,192 Meritorious Service Medals.

The total number of officers and men who passed through the British Army during the war was about 6,196,000. In the South African War the total number of troops in the field was 448,435.

GERMAN ASSISTANCE REFUSED.

The Felixstowe branch of the National Federation of Discharged and Demobilized Sailors and Soldiers has returned to Baron von Bissing a cheque for twenty pounds which he sent to the branch on his leaving Felixstowe.

MINERS AND INCOME TAX.

The responsible leaders of the Welsh miners have issued a manifesto with reference to the income tax ballot, and advised the men to vote against resistance to payment of the tax.

DOCKYARD DISCHARGES.

In consequence of the four-and-a-half day scheme having fallen through discharges were resumed at Portsmouth Dockyard on Saturday, some hundred notices being issued.

"RECORDS."

SACK-THE-LOT FISHER'S NEW BOOK.

The "Times" began yesterday the publication of extracts from Lord Fisher's forthcoming book entitled "Records." Lord Fisher demolishes the legend that his mother was a Cingalese princess. Her name was Lambe, and she was born in the City of London.

In describing his joining the Victory in 1854 he says, "The lines of a modern midshipman are cast in pleasant places. They get good food and a good night's rest. Late as I came to sea, in 1854, I had to keep the first or the middle watch every night and was always hungry. Devilled pork rind was a luxury and a Spanish onion with a sardine in the middle watch was Paradise." He tells a humorous tale about ship biscuits which could walk and says the amusement of the midshipmen was to pit one piece of biscuit against another in a walking race. Another anecdote is that on the day he joined the Navy he saw eight men flogged and he fainted at the sight.

Much eulogy is devoted to one of Fisher's first captains, named Shadwell, who was "about the greatest Sailor on earth." Another friend of Fisher's was Admiral Hope, "a very stern and stately sort of man whom everybody was afraid of."

"I entered the Navy penniless, friendless and forlorn," says Fisher. "I have always had to fight like hell and fighting like hell has made me what I am."

MAKING SURE.

JELLICOE ON THE LEAGUE.

Speaking at a dinner given in his honour at Calgary on Saturday, Admiral Jellicoe said his mission to Canada was to advise the Dominion Government in what manner they could co-operate, if they so desired, in maintaining the sea-power of the Empire. "There is a feeling abroad" he said, "that the millenium is in sight and that there will be no more wars. I sincerely hope the League of Nations will meet with the best possible success, but events in the past few days have disheartened those who had faith in immediate results from the formation of the League. These events need not make us pessimistic regarding its future possibilities, but the consideration, I cannot help thinking, that people want to be sure of is, that they must be absolutely secure under the League before they consent to any cutting down of expenditure on Naval defence.

BARRACK FIRE.

GREAT DAMAGE AT CHATHAM.

A mysterious outbreak of fire occurred at South Hill barracks at chatham on Sunday morning, resulting in extensive damage, estimated at ten thousand pounds. The barracks are occupied by troops, but fortunately nobody was injured, for directly the alarm was given the men were called out to assist in fighting the flames. Considerable anxiety was felt for a long time owing to the proximity of a large petrol tank.

The outbreak was noticed about one o'clock by a policeman who saw flames suddenly envelop a section of the barracks. The Chatham Fire Brigade was quickly on the spot and strove hard for several hours before subduing the flanes. The fire originated in a small workshop and spread to a large motor shed, totally destroying three motor lorries and steam tractors and a Daimler car belonging to the G.O.C. Eastern Command.

DENIKIN HITS BACK.

The Helsingfors correspondent of the "Svenkadagblad" telegraphs that recent messages from Denikin state that his army has broken through the Bolshevist front between Orel and Jamboff. He claims to have annihilated 55,000 Bolshevists and states that the peasants and workmen in the manufacturing centres are revolting against the Soviet regime.

At Narva, adds the correspondent, the situation is critical. The Esthonians have been forced back and the North West Army is now in a difficult situation.

KING'S THANKS TO CANADIANS.

Lord Milner has telegraphed to the Duke of Devonshire expressing the King's desire to give publicity to his appreciation of the valuable services rendered by the men who volunteered from Canada to assist in the construction of ships and the making of munitions in Great Britain during the war. The message states that the excellent behaviour of these men, together with their sustained and steady application to work, earned the highest praise.

RANGERS' MEMORIAL SERVICE.

A memorial service for officers and men of the 12th Battalion the London Regiment (The Rangers) was held at the Headquarters, Tottenham Court-road on Sunday. After the service the members of the Old Comrades' Association, comprising past and present members of the regiment, under the command of Colonel Bayliffe, marched to the cenotaph in Whitehall headed by their band and laid a wreath on the memorial.

THE YOUNG SOLDIER.

To-day the British Army of Occupation is composed of almost entirely young soldiers. Demobilization of the old-timers has practically reached completion and only those remain who have voluntarily elected to stay on for a longer period.

There has been a tendency on the part of what we will call the "fighter soldier" to regard the part played in the war by the younger comrades as negligible, and in view of this it will perhaps, be useful to examine the record of the more youthful Tommy.

In the first place it is well to remember in 1914 that the majority of the present Rhineland occupants were only fourteen years of age and at that time, when there was much highflown talk about a six months war, even the most pessimistic would have been staggered at the suggestion of these lads eventually donning khaki in defence of the Motherland.

As they attained the age of eighteen, however, they were automatically drafted into young soldiers' battalions and after a very few weeks the awkwardness and rawness having been removed, they passed into the graduating battalions bearing the names of our London and county regiments. Weedy-looking youths at first, they blossomed under Army training, into healthy, robust Tommies in the course of a very few months.

That the majority of them saw no active service is no fault of theirs; they could not help the armistice being signed before they attained the age of nineteen. But, whereas youth prevented them from taking an active part in the great struggle, it has been their lot to help to hold secure the fruits of victory won at such a cost by the veterans of the older battalions.

In thinking of the majority, the valiant part played by the minority must not be forgotten. In the fateful days of spring, 1918, thousands were sent out to help to stem the overwhelming efforts of the enemy and to fill the gaps as older men fell, and right nobly did they take their stand by the side of seasoned veterans

A more trying ordeal it would be difficult to find in the history of a war pregnant with ordeal. They were hurriedly rushed from the tranquility of camp life in England into the cruel realities of a modern battlefield. Almost without warning they were transferred from the peaceful scenes associated with the home countryside into an inferno of death dealing devices.

Many were called upon to make the greatest sacrifice and to their honour, be it said they died nobly and bravely.

And it is such an example that the youthful Army of Occupation is called upon to emulate: will they be found wanting? They have the same spirit and it is the spirit which conquers.

WHAT TO SEE IN RHINELAND.

S. MARIA IM CAPITOL.

Between the bottom end of the Hohestrasse and the Heumarkt there stands the Church of S. Maria im Capitol, one of the oldest and most interesting Churches in Cologne. It is very much hidden away and for that reason is probably not so well known as St. Gereon's or the Apostles Church, both of which stand facing open spaces.

According to tradition it occupies the site of the old Roman Capitol, whence its name—S. Maria im Capitol. A church is said to have been erected on this spot as early as the 7th century, but the present building dates from the 11th and 12th centuries. The exterior of the East end has the familiar outside gallery which is seen in so many of the Rhineland Churches, but the plan of the church is somewhat uncommon,—a cross with apsidal terminations to both choir and transepts, with an ambulatory running round each.

The church is both large and lofty and the vaulting of the nave dates from the 13th century.

There are several things to notice in the interior—above the altar on the North side of the High Altar is a very uncommon crucifix. Our Lord bound to a tree instead of the ordinary cross; on the South is a beautiful Virgin and Child; beneath the Rood are representations of the heads of the Apostles; the windows are good; the stalls in the ambulatory of the transepts very interesting; the organ loft, originally a screen, dating from the 16th century, is richly carved. In the vestibule, forming the 14th station of the cross is a beautiful Gothic "Entombment" which it is interesting to compare with the one in St. Gereon's. The little figure in the right hand corner probably represents the donor.

Beneath the choir approached by a flight of steps from either transept is a very fine crypt, the vaulting of which is supported by massive pillars. It is of considerable extent and contains several tombs, that of Plectrudis, being a 12th century work of great beauty.

The Cloisters are often missed by the casual visitor. They are at the West end of the Church and contain some very old tombstones and highly interesting bas-reliefs, presumably dating from the 14th or 15th century.

The gate in the screen at the West end of the Church is usually locked, but one can generally get in by the door facing towards the Heumarkt.

"MUSIC HATH CHARMS."

"Did I ever tell you that tale about a snake charmer," enquired the old soldier.

He paused.

Instinctively my hand went towards the bottle to refill his glass.

With the preciseness of a machine, and without taking his gaze from my face, his hand came out to the now brimming glass.

The flame of reminiscence should always thus be fanned.

"It 'appened in India," he continued after a long pull.

"We were down Allahabad way. Them was the good old days of soldiering. We 'ad a pretty good time taking things all round. There was always plenty of "wallahs" 'anging around the camp that you could get to do the 'ard graft, and we never reckoned to work much after midday,

"Well one day me and my old pal "Nobby" Clark not 'aving much to do, strolls out into the town.

"Old "Nobby" was always one for a game, and although we 'ad been warned not to go into the bazaar we did go there.

"You've never seen one of them bazaars 'ave you?

"Proper places they are.

"You can get all sorts of things in them. Wooden idols, carpets, fruit and all sorts.

"Well, we buys a thing or two, watches the magicians, and them "fakirs," and was just makin' our way back when we comes across one of these e're snake charming blokes.

"It was marvellous 'ow 'e made them snakes 'armless with 'is music. 'E seemed to be able to do any old thing 'e liked with 'em. I wish I could charm my old Dutch like it."

But there" he went on with a sigh "that's a case where music doesn't 'ave' charms.

"Well" he continued meditatively, "we watched 'im for some time; when all of a sudden old "Nobby" takes a fit into 'is 'ead to 'ave a bit of sport with the old boy.

"E knew them snakes was 'armless, so all of a sudden 'e makes a dive for one of 'em. Well I can tell you that just about caused it. To think that a 'eathen soldier should touch one of 'is precious snakes.

"Before you could say "Jack Robinson" that 'Indu was up and it looked as if there was going to be some dirty work on the spot. I gives "Nobby" a pull and manages to drag 'im away and we 'ad to make a run for it, I can tell you.

"Well" I remarked, "there's nothing remarkable in that.

"That was only the result of a little bit of sport.

He paused for a minute or two to give weight to his words.

"I know" he continued, "but the funny part about it is that I saw that darkie when I was down in 'ospital a little while ago. I couldn't mistake those eyes of 'is.

"I couldn't quite make out what 'e 'ad been up to at first for 'e was all wrapped up in bandages, and 'ad 'is arm in a sling. I thought 'e still remembered that little 'appening but it seems 'e didn't.

"But after a while I tumbled to it.

"De mule sahib", he said in broken English.

"He gave a imitation of the way 'e used to squat and play tunes to them snakes.

"Then I suddenly tumbles to it.

"It seems 'e 'ad been trying to charm a mule with 'is music and 'ad come off second best.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views.

TRAFFIC TROUBLES.

Sir,—The subject of this letter is a matter of common interest to all those members of the Army of Occupation who drive motor cars in this city of sleep-walkers, either on duty or for pleasure.

I have held a driving license for 12 or 13 years and have driven in all the large cities in Great Britain and also in many of the smaller provincial towns. But never, until I came to Cologne have I had to sound my horn or similar contrivance for the benefit of those vehicles and pedestrians who were coming towards me.

The crop of daily accidents, I believe, is fairly heavy, but the wonder to me is that there are not more. The children of Cologne and environs are a race of born suicides and the adults are not much better.

The German policeman is apparently helpless when more than two taxis and a hand cart are gathered together in one spot.

Put these folk down at the Mansion House crossing about noon on any day of the year--and they'd either get killed out of hand—or die of starvation.

I never realised how many congenital idiots of both sexes there were in this world until I drove a car in Cologne—and then I met them all inside a couple of hours.

GEORGE.

APPRECIATION.

Sir,—As one of the shortly to be demobbed, I feel I must say a few words of heartfelt thankfulness for all the splendid clubs and institutes provided for us boys here in the Rhine area.

How we shall miss them when we go back to our native towns and villages—oh so dull—in dear old Blighty!

We shall have none of the tip-top shows, and not any of the well appointed resorts to enliven our evenings. Where I live there is just the pub, the free library and a church institute. Not one is to be compared with the many glorious places provided for us here with willing kindly helpers to do so much for us.

What are sorely needed in England are places like the central Y.M.C.A. and the Leave Club in every town of any size; and then our dear dull but dear old country would become a real "Merrie England."

DEMOB.

A GROWING "EVIL."

Sir,—Replying to your correspondent "A Senior Officer," might I also be allowed to draw attention to the growing evil of the consumption of edible gum by the younger generation of the "Guards."

It is truly heartbreaking to observe the deleterious effect this bad habit is producing on these young fellows.

Quite apart from the adhesive powers of this substance to one's nether garments, when discarded by thoughtless devotees of "My Lady Spearmint," one's finer feelings are outraged by observing youths, still in their teens, taking the air in Cologne, the while they make grimaces reminiscent of the chimpanzee at the Zoological Gardens, in their endeavours to extract the very last grain of goodness from the succulent gum, or perchance, to transfer it from one molar to another.

I have received information from a reliable source that this pernicious habit was imported, among others, from "across the herrin' pond" during the course of the late war.

It seems a great pity that with so much material to hand for the forming of bad habits, that one that has travelled 3,000 miles, more or less, should hold sway.

I would ask your kind consideration of a proposal to form an Anti-Chewing Gum League.

H.W.H.

THE ARMY AND RELIGION.

Sir,—The article signed "W. Romaine Paterson" I found of absorbing interest. The facts he quoted were appalling in their frankness, but I am convinced from four years' experience of war that they are true and it is creditable to the compilers of the book he reviewed that they have had the courage to publish the plain unvarnished truth.

The fact that our men were brave and even callous in the face of all the horrors and terrors of the most ghastly war the world has ever seen, proves nothing. Savages and pagans act similarly.

But what is to my mind revealed most clearly by the passages quoted is that the soldier, and equally the civilian at home, had no faith and no confidence in the half-hearted watered-down religion preached by the divided sects our country is plagued with.

They are all teaching different kinds of dogma—nothing definite. One rejects this portion of the New Testament message; the other throws out that. Thus is bred not faith but doubt, and finally disbelief.

Until all the scores of so-called "Churches" come into one Fold with one Shepherd, proclaiming one definite common doctrine I see no hope of any change.

C.K.P.

RHINELAND DRAMA.

Sir,—I don't see why we should take into our calculations the possibility of there being any empty seats at the Deutsches and of having to fill them with Germans. If there are such gaps, there are plenty of our own men to fill them; and given the right plays they will never be empty so long as we have any considerable force in Rhineland.

Individuals there are of course who like "The Melting Pot" and similar plays, and doubtless the actors like to play in such pieces, which is to their credit, if they are ambitious, but when a theatre is provided for Tommy, it is up to the producers to consider the majority.

It is the same outside the drama. If you wanted to provide reading for all the Rhine Army, you wouldn't dish out the "Quarterly Review" to all and sundry—you would see that they got "Tit-Bits" or similar fare.

I hope we shall hear no more of filling our shows with German audiences. It is not our business to entertain or instruct them. We are in their country from necessity and for something else.

BRITISHER.

SOLDIERS AND WINE.

Sir,—Although since I have been in the Army of Occupation I drink wine rather often, a custom so much deprecated by "Perturbed", yet the reason is mostly that in the best restaurants and cabarets they won't serve you with anything else.

Beer is the drink I like, and always have in Blighty and would drink from preference here, but one isn't always allowed a free choice, worse luck!

Most of the wine too, is inferior stuff, not worth a quarter of what is asked for it and I find it soon gets into your head and often causes internal trouble. Either it is too new or is full of chemicals, so give me honest beer every time!

I may be the exception, but I think that most fellows out here are of my mind in this matter of wine.

X.X.X.

DO WE READ TOO MUCH?

Sir,—In reply to "Rural" I should like to say a few words on the subject of reading.

Evidently "Rural" is a thinker, and not a reader, and where, on the face of this planet, will you find a thinker who is not also a great reader?

Too much reading may prove disastrous, but reading in moderation is an excellent thing. By all means let us think for ourselves, but let others think for us too.

Most of us are young men and we require the most careful training in order to develop our faculties to the utmost; and one of the best way of attaining this end is by reading the best books.

Listen to what Francis Bacon has to say on the subject of reading. "Read not to contradict and confute, nor to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider—reading makes a full man.

Why only Carlyle? asks "Rural." There are seasons for reading books, just as there are seasons for sowing and reaping. In times of unrest we read Carlyle's "Past and Present" because of the way it appeals to the common sense of the employer and the worker, it gives advice to those who are not satisfied with their lot. In times of prosperity we read Samuel Smiles' "Thrift" because it tells us how to spend our money wisely, for even the most profound thinker cannot spend wisely. "Rural," if you find time, draw your chair towards the fire, light your pipe and read the chapter on reading in Ruskin's "Sesame and Lilies."

R.M.

Sir,—In reply to "Rural's" letter on reading too much, I would like to say a few things. Firstly that he appears to suffer from the want of thought himself. If we don't read so much, what are we going to occupy our thoughts with? It is through the medium of reading that we think. We read a book and if it makes an impression on us, we think over what we have read.

Perhaps he means that we should read less fiction. If that is so then I agree with him. What I suggest is that we should think more and reason out the meaning of what we read.

He speaks of "libraries here, libraries there" and that we are told to "drink in the thoughts of other people." If he has a good look at any of the libraries he will find there food for thought to satisfy everyone's taste. By all means drink in the thoughts of other people, but make use of them. Think over them.

BOOKMAN.

Sir,—Anyone who is commencing to study English literature would, in my opinion be making an error, in commencing with Carlyle who in spite of his genius, is very difficult to understand. Advice has previously been given in these columns against selecting too difficult literature at first, and this should be borne in mind when thinking of Carlyle.

One would think from "Rural's" letter that it is almost impossible to read and still use our thinking powers. I think that it is wrong.

Reading good books gives direction to our thoughts and enables us to take full advantage of the thoughts of great men who have gone before.

A man who has given great study and time to reading is, I believe, far, far, better equipped to give a decision on the problems of life, than another who has not. In fact, the latter is not qualified to judge.

No one can read good books without being made to ponder and think.

J.W.

WHY SO SAD?

Sir,—I have been once or twice to Jazz teas in Cologne. I don't dance myself. I just go to look on. But not withstanding the super-exhilarating strains of the band which one would think were sufficient even to rouse the dead from their long slumber and take a turn, strains that excite one so that it is difficult to restrain one's self from leaping off one's chair and giddily careering round the room, I notice a sad and sorrowful expression on the faces of the dancers, especially the men. They appear to be in the extremest stages of melancholy.

If I were a jazzer—perhaps I may be some day—I should think the appropriate thing would be to smile broadly and ecstatically, all the time I was jazzing around.

CHEER UP!

MY MOTHER.

What joy to look into those pensive eyes
And see in them the place where prayer abides
Kissing those lips of love so sweet to see,
Holding those hands of service, used for me

Oh! that I could for ever have you near,
And hear all day that voice to me so dear
Yes, mother mine, I'd hold you very fast,
And have your valued counsel till the last.

But should some unseen Hand lead thee away
From home and me, no longer here to stay
May memory retain those words and prayers
Which uttered were for me to smooth my cares

As like some star extinguisted is at peace
Whos light streams down after its own decease;
So shall thy influence and power live on,
An Aftermath of blessing to thy son.

GEORGE DENYS FAYERS

FOOTBALL RESULTS.

West Bromwich Fall To Sheffield W. At Home.

LEAGUE LEADERS FAIL.

Saturday's results provided not a few surprises, the chief one being the defeat by Sheffield Wednesday of the sprightly "Throstles." To be beaten by the bottom team was bad enough, but coupled with the fact that the venue was the "Hawthorns," the result is inexplicable. Sheffield are to be congratulated upon their victory, which was a great assistance to Newcastle United who fell at Roker Park, since it enables them to retain their premier place.

"Local Derbies" produce keen football, and the Sunderland battle was no exception. Newcastle were outclassed in every department and Charlie Buchan secured both the goals which gave the Wearsiders the points.

Burnley's lapse at home came as a bombshell. To be beaten by six goals to two on their own ground needs some explaining away.

The Arsenal won their first home match since September 20th which suggests that at last they have broken their spell of bad luck. Manchester United did well against their near neighbours, Oldham Athletic while Chelsea ran Middlesboro' to a draw at Ayrsome Park. This game was a tale of missed opportunities and provided but poor football.

SECOND LEAGUE.

Fulham gave a sorry display at Craven Cottages and were "hammered" by two to one. Tottenham suffered another check at Nottingham where the Forest were very unlucky in securing only one point. Coventry gathered another point by sharing the spoils with Blackpool; South Shields' draw with Leicester was a meritorious performance, while Barnsley's convincing win over the "Wolves" somewhat atones for recent displays.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

Plymouth Argyle bowed the knee to Bristol Rovers, but Portsmouth were more fortunate and succeeded in administering Cardiff's first defeat at home this season. Exeter fell at home, and so did Millwall, Southampton and Swansea. Such a haul for away teams has not occurred for many a long day.

SCOTTISH LEAGUE.

Last week, in this column, mention was made of the fact that Celtic have not been so unreliable for years. This was fully borne out by Partick Thistle taking a point from Celtic Park, an honour which falls to few clubs. Dumbarton and Queen's Park both carried off half the spoils, while Hearts came a cropper at Kilmarnock.

Appended are the results:

No. 36 C.C.S. defeat H.Q. VI Corps.

KEEN SPORT.

36 C.C.S. met H.Q. VI Corps on Saturday at Stadtwald, the former winning by two goals to one.

Despite the bad weather conditions a capital game was witnessed, the play, which was keen and clean, being fast throughout. During the first half the exchanges were fairly even. The C.C.S. had more opportunities to score, but showed marked weakness in their finishing efforts, and at half time the score sheet was blank.

A few minutes after the resumption, however, Thompson gave the "Medicals" the lead with a splendid shot from about 25 yards out, and a minute later Turner placed them further ahead after a scrimmage in the goal mouth. These reverses in no way discouraged the H.Q. team, and they were at length rewarded by a goal kicked by Cowan.

For the C.C.S., Lewis and Gregory gave another good display, whilst Nicholson was the best of a good intermediate line.

Capt. Makinson played a fine game at right back for the losers, and time and again by his splendid tackling he extricated his side from dangerous positions.

CAVALRY GOING STRONG.

Inniskillings easily Defeat Remount Depot.

Another spirited game was played by the Inniskilling Dragoons team against the Remount Depot at Cologne-Deutz on Sunday. The teams kicked off at 2.10 p.m. and at 2.15 the first goal was scored by Bennett, the Cavalry inside-left from a penalty. Prior to this penalty being given, some quick work took place in the Remounts goal-mouth, and their goalie had rather a warm time in defending. The second goal was scored again by the inside left. A vigorous attack was kept up by the Inniskillings, and some fine head-work by the Remounts' backs was witnessed, which undoubtedly prevented another goal being immediately scored. Play then going into the Cavalry's end of the field, a corner was given after a strong attempt by the Remounts to score, the attack being carried out in a fine style. A run down the field by Captain Humfrey, the Inniskillings' outside-left, enabled their inside right (Tptr. Albrecht) to head the ball into the Remounts' goal, in spite of the excellent attempt on the part of the goalie to save.

Another hot attack by Remounts before half-time was unsuccessful, Cpl. Jones and Fowler, the Dragoons' backs, giving a splendid exhibition of defence.

The second half opened with considerable pressure on the Dragoons' left wing, but play quickly transferred to the Remounts' half by the Dragoons' inside-right clearing with a long-shot down field, and a point-blank shot in the Remounts' goal-mouth was splendidly saved by their goalie. An exciting tussle then ensued round the goal, resulting in the Cavalry scoring their fourth point. The fifth (and last) goal was soon scored by Southwell, the Inniskillings' centre-forward, after a clever run-through from the other end of the field.

A good game finished without further incident, leaving the Cavalry victorious with a score of 5—0.

FAST, CLEAN FOOTER.

52nd Manchester Regt. v. No. 142 Field Ambulance.

An exciting match was witnessed on Saturday at Riehl between these two teams. The 52nd opened the game, immediately breaking through, only to be checked by Cox at the goal mouth. The Ambulance forwards pressed hard, and from a well judged pass from Harley, Booker scored the first goal, Harrison allowing the ball to dribble through his hands into the nest. The Ambulance showed some excellent combination, while Southall at centre half, upset the attacks of the 52nd forwards, Booker then secured the ball and running through passed to Harley who scored the second goal. The 52nd then pressed very hard and Clout excelled himself in checking and clearing. Eventually from a well judged pass by Lieut. Holland, Blackstone scored the first goal for the 52nd, and so the score remained at half time.

From the commencement of the second half, a ding-dong battle ensured first one, then the other goal being in danger. After ten minutes play Chadwick broke through and scored the equalising goal. Things became very exciting after that, but unfortunately the light failed, and the referee in fairness to both teams terminated the match which throughout was fast, brilliant, and thoroughly clean.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY CRICKET CLUB.

In their annual report the Middlesex Committee refer to the loss the club sustained in the death of MacGregor MacGregor. By permission of the M.C.C. a memorial in honour of the Middlesex cricketers who fell in the war will be placed in the pavilion at Lord's. The past season was financially very successful, the working of the club yielding a profit on the year of £615. The committee are, however, most anxious to increase the membership. Home and home matches have been arranged for 1920 with Essex and Hampshire, Kent, Lancashire, Notts, Somerset, Surrey, Sussex, Warwickshire, and Yorkshire, and one match with Oxford University at Oxford. In recognition of his long and splendid career the committee have decided to present J. T. Hearne with a piece of plate.

'VARSITY TENNIS.

There is a movement on foot for the establishment of lawn tennis matches between Oxford and Cambridge and Yale, the champion University in America, next Summer.

FOOTBALL GOSSIP

By W. Le C.

Bob McGrory is among the mentions for a new Scottish defence. I saw him at Boghead this season and would cordially endorse his selection. Clever, brainy and possessing a kick a mule might envy, he will be well worth his place.

* * *

Mr. A. S. Maley, of Clydebank is a brother of the famous Celtic and Bradford officials. What this trio do not know about the game could be written on a pin head.

* * *

A bird whispers that Patterson, the Rangers' winger is going south. I doubt it. It will require a bigger figure than most clubs can afford to tempt the Glasgow Directorate.

* * *

Watch Coventry, but buy a magnifying glass first.

* * *

Not considered good enough for senior Irish football, yet picked to represent his country, has been the experience of Snape, the Airdrie player.

* * *

Two teams in the Reading and District Wednesday League, each possess a one-armed player. This handicap does not hinder their being clever exponents of the game.

* * *

But three years ago, on meeting Albert Shepherd in Bolton, he informed me that he weighed fifteen stone. To-day, I learn his weight is eighteen stone. I can imagine the international "Magpie" player crashing through a defence in his old style with this weight. Exit the defence.

CHAMPION SWORD SWINGER DEAD.

The death is announced of the world's champion sword swinger, Corpl. Battersby, 1st Bn. Yorkshire Regt. On one occasion, Battersby swung two swords for fifty-two hours continuously.

ENGLISH RACING.

King John's Return to Form in Manchester Handicap.

UGLY DUCKLING AGAIN.

There was a large attendance at Manchester on Saturday for the final day of the flat racing season. The weather was dull and threatening. The Manchester November Handicap, the principal event on the card, is dealt with elsewhere on this page.

In the first race Ugly Duckling capped a series of successive wins by carrying off the Farewell Handicap and defeating Marl and Sir Berkeley.

A big gamble came undone when Fancy Man failed in the Worsley Nursery, but a lot of people won money over the winner Crevasse, for the public seldom let one of Lord Derby's horses win here without sharing in the spoils, and there were indications that the filly was really fancied. The meeting came to an end with Lord Glanely winding up a wonderful season by taking the Final Plate with The Midshipmite, who easily beat his solitary opponent Manilardo.

DETAILS.

Farewell Handicap.—Ugly Duckling (10-11), 1; Marl (8-1), 2; Sir Berkeley (7-1), 3.

Beresford Selling Stakes.—Rocksavage (2-1), 1; Shoemaker (3-1), 2; Burly (6-1), 3.

Saturday Selling Welter.—Minstrel Joy (100-8), 1; Be Wise (100-6), 2; Landing Net (100-6), 3.

Worsley Nursery.—Crevasse (7-1), 1; Orange William (100-7), 2; Foot Proof (100-8), 3.

Final Plate.—The Midshipite 1; Mawilardo 10—11 on.

LINGFIELD RESULTS.

The Finale Handicap at Lingfield yesterday furnished a surprise. So well supported was Aris that he started an odds-on favourite, but was beaten into second place by Nant Goch, with Black Lamb third. Results:

Four Elms Selling Nursery.—Quick Meg (5-1), †; First Leaf (100-8), †; Spider Legs (100-30), 3. † dead heat.

The Back End Handicap.—Bravo (3-1), 1; Twincat (5-1), 2; D'Amade (20-1), 3.

The Burstow Selling Handicap.—Porton (11-8 on), 1; Gally Strickland (7-1), 2; Eston Jetty (100-8), 3.

The Finale Handicap.—Nant Goch (20-1), 1; Aris (6-4 on), 2; Black Lamb (10-1), 3.

Country Maiden T.Y.O. Plate.—Ruckinge Queen 6-5), 1; Sun Bird (2-1), 2; Pretty Peggy (100-9), 3.

Southern Maiden Plate.—Flying Post 5-2), 1; Yellow Bedstraw (100-8), 2; Gay Goshawk (5-4), 3.

THE BIG RACE.

The result of the Manchester November Handicap was published in our Sunday's issue and to-day we are able to give some details of the race.

There were seventeen runners and the market business so soon as the ring was formed became very brisk. Chat Tor held his place as favourite until just before the start, when there became such a persistent demand for Alasnam that the Derby Cup winner finally wound up a hard favourite at 11 to 4, with Taylor's charge easing to 9 to 2. King John was the chief medium of the other heavy business. He ran in blinkers, and the policy proved a wise one, for Capt. Giles Loder's hitherto disappointing horse ran his race out stoutly, and always had the verdict safe in the last three furlongs.

A Poor Start.

The start was not a particularly good one, Chat Tor being one of the chief sufferers, and Mr. Singer's colt did very well to get a place just in front of Alasnam, who hardly for a moment faltered, although he always held a prominent position. It is doubtful, however, whether, with an equal start, he would have beaten King John, whose victory was gained in very easy fashion.

Planet ran very well, but was beaten on his merits, while Royal Bucks, after making the pace for a mile, dropped clean away. Gay Lord broke down, and it was clear that the stoppage in his work had affected John Jackett, whose owner was more hopeful than confident. The regular followers of Gilpin's stable had a very good race, and the public once more supported the horse although he had let them down so often.

FELTON V. BARRY.

Another Important Sculling Match In View.

The "Daily Mail" offers £500, the stake money required by Ernest Barry for a return race on the Parramatta with Alfred Felton, the Australian, who recently defeated Barry in a race for the world's sculling championship over the Putney to Mortlake course.

The earlier match took place on October 27th for a similar stake, when, it will be remembered Barry, British champion, took the centre of the river and, on account of rough weather, was water-logged.

The Australian, who won the toss, on the other hand, hugged the Middlesex shore and was but little troubled by the rough water.

THE OPPONENTS.

Felton scales 13st. 7lbs., and stands 6ft. 2½in, against Barry's 11st. 8lb. and 6ft.

Barry's first race for the championship was in 1910, when he was beaten on the Zambesi by Arnst. Two years later he turned the tables on Arnst over the Thames course, whilst the same year he beat E. Durnan. In 1913 he vanquished H. Pearce, and J. Paddon fell a victim to his prowess in 1914.

Barry's time of 21min. 12sec. against Towns in 1908 is a record for the championship course in a sculling boat.

LANCS. HOCKEY TRIAL.

A trial match of the Lancashire County Hockey Association will take place on December 6 at Bury between Liverpool and District and Manchester and District. Matches have also been arranged with Yorkshire for December 13 on the Sheffield University ground and with Cheshire on December 26 at the Northern ground, Great Crosby.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

THE SUNDAY CONCERTS.

It was really an oversight perhaps a combination of causes, but anyhow, quite unforgiveable that the Bender-Clemens concert at the Deutsches Theatre has not yet received the usual commentary in these columns. This is all the more to be regretted as it was perhaps, the most successful artistically and in its general appeal of all the Sunday concerts, so far given, also in fairness to the gifted artistes, who contributed to the evening's enjoyment and so successfully tackled a difficult task. I say difficult advisedly because to serve out really classical music, and in a foreign tongue at that, and succeed in making an irresistible appeal to a large and mixed popular audience is no mean accomplishment.

* * *

With two such great artistes as Gertrude Bender (soprano) and Hans Clemens (lyrical tenor) from the Opera House, the concert could hardly fail to be an enormous success, but their appeal was really greater than is sometimes the case when famous operatic stars take the concert stage, possibly by reason of the fact that their voices were more adaptable to ballad and the lighter music outside the realm of grand opera. One outstanding feature was the duet, which was an inspiration and a joy; the audience clamoured for more. Our own Barker, the wizard of the violin, we are getting to take for granted now and it only remains to say that on this occasion he more than made up, in quality and quantity, for what we missed when he was indisposed at the previous concert. The accompanist showed qualities that please an artiste and do not obtrude themselves upon the audience.

Opera Tickets.

From the 26th instant inclusive, the present allotment of boxes and system for obtaining seats will be cancelled, and the following substituted:—The following Boxes will be allotted only:— 2 C.-in-C.; 2 G.H.Q.; 2 VI Corps; 1 Rhine Garrison; 1 Independent Division. (reserved for General officers).

These Boxes will be held by the Amusement Officer, and with the exception of the boxes allotted to the C.-in-C., must be claimed by 6 p.m. two days prior to the performance. If they are not demanded by that time, they will be sold to the first applicants.

* * *

In addition to the boxes there are available six boxes and 123 seats reserved for officers, 28 seats for W.O.s. and Senior N.C.O.s., and 200 seats for Other Ranks.

These seats will not be allotted, but can be obtained by application, either in person or by telephone. If an officer's or a soldier's wife applies, she must be prepared to produce her White Pass. The booking for each performance will open four days in advance.

No Institution is permitted to book more than five seats for any one performance.

Not more than two seats may be booked by any one individual. This does not however apply to boxes, in which any number of seats up to four may be booked by an individual.

Fancy Dress Affair.

There will be a Fancy Dress Dance at the Leave Club on Wednesday from 6.30 to 10. Only those in fancy dress will be admitted to the ball room. There are two small dressing rooms for men coming from a distance. All wives of Warrant Officers, N.C.O.'s and men are cordially invited to attend.

To-night's Variety Entertainment.

To-night besides that clever one act play "Postal Orders" by Roland Pertwee, there will be several dances, at the Leave Club, beginning with a dance scena "Xmas Eve at Barrods". This is to followed by a violin solo by Miss West, a dance by Miss Bastard and a shadow song by Miss K. Campbell. "A Sicilian Episode" will be danced by Captain Preston and Mrs. Banford. Besides there will be dances by Miss Castelli and Miss McClean, and the Flower Girl Dance by Mrs. Banford.

Leave Club Concert.

There was an excellent concert given on Sunday night at the British Empire Leave Club by the band of the 13th K.R.R.C., (by kind permission of the O.C.) Two cornet solos by Bandmaster Fordham were loudly encored. Lieutenant Pratt sang several songs which were much enjoyed. "Oh for the Wings of a Dove" was very finely rendered by Miss K. Campbell. Lt. Diggins gave a unique performance in piano juggling. Several songs were very well sung by Pte. Green and Rfn. Ryder gave two violin solos which were much appreciated, whilst a feature of the evening was the Regimental March played by the band with the addition of six buglers.

Another Success.

When the "Blue Boys" Concert Party made their first appearance at the Wiesdorf Cinema a short time ago I predected a very successful future for them and their subsequent performances have more than justined my opinion. I was afforded the opportunity of witnessing their latest show, and it was a tip-top programme from start to finish. "Who is she?" was the question asked on all sides when a gracefully attired, attractive looking young lady appeared and sang, "Waitz me up to the Altar, Walter." Those of us in the know were smiling up our sleeve all the time because the young "lady" was none other than "Air Force," as he is popularly called. It was a very clever impersonation. I am anticipating crowded houses for the Concert Party, when it goes on tour as it is expected to do very shortly.

JACQUES.

RHINELAND BOXING.

Tim Healey to Organise Exhibitions in Cologne.

Tim Healey, late of the Middlesex Regt., ex-world's champion, will shortly return to Cologne. He proposes, next month, to organise exhibitions including all weights.

Healey is himself to meet Louis de Ponthier, the French champion, for the championship of Europe in April of next year.

Any bloods in Rhineland, who would care to participate in the events next month should write sending particulars of weight etc. to Staff-Sergeant Parker, c/o "The Cologne Post."

LIGHT-WEIGHT CHALLENGE.

Riflemen R.C. Jackson C. Company, 51st Bn. The Rifle Brigade wishes to fight any man in the British Army of the Rhine, for the Light-Weight Championship (Rhine Army) which he will claim if no applications are forthcoming. Conditions—Rhine Army Rules and the fight to take place in Cologne. All correspondence to be addressed: Sgt. J. Hall, C. Company, 51st Bn. The Rifle Brigade.

SPORT IN BRIEF.

Mr. Dawson's Future.

Mr. R. C. Dawson may have returned to Whatcombe by the commencement of next season's flat racing.

Birmingham's Acquisition.

Birmingham Football Club have secured the transfer of Peart, centre forward, from Notts County. Originally a Stoke player, Peart has also seen service with Newcastle United.

Complimentary Dinner.

Jesse Pennington, the old West Bromwich Albion player and international footballer, is to be entertained to a complimentary dinner on December 10 in recognition of his plucky fight during the recent municipal election.

Racing Pigeons.

In a strong show of racing pigeons at Castleton, Abraham Collinge, of Middleton, won the cup with a cock bred this year and flown one hundred miles. Other principal winners were: Young hen, flown 100 miles, Dr. White, Castleton; old cock, flown 100 miles, F. Stocks, Bamford; old hen, flown 100 miles, F. Stocks, Bamford; cock, flown English Channel, A. Collinge; hen, flown English Channel, Dr. White.

ONLY TEN RESULTS.

Our Skill Competition Is Easier This Week.

This week, we ask for a forecast of only ten matches to be played on Saturday next. No scores are required.

In contest No. 9, which is now being adjucated, some surprising results occurred. There were four home teams victorious, four draws and four away winners. This is the first time in the history of the competition that such a result has occurred. The four draws have upset many calculations.

In the coupon printed below, strike out the team you think will lose, or, if you predict a draw, leave both teams standing, add your name and address clearly, place the coupon in an envelope with one mark and send it along to this office. Any number of coupons may be sent at the rate of one mark each.

Coupons must be addressed:—

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

And Proud of It.
In the Opera restaurant the other evening I saw a German officer in a very swagger uniform complete with Iron Cross.

Force of Example.
In a crowded tram yesterday a German civilian rose to give his seat to an English lady, who in turn gave her seat to an elderly German woman. Two German men then offered their seats to our countrywoman.

Question of Taste.
At the close of a show at which low comedy had figured prominently I overheard an officer remark, "I have enjoyed this much more than I did 'Carmen'." All a question of taste, I suppose.

Not Hymns but—.
One does not associate a harmonium with ragtime, although the American organ hails from Jazzland, but at the "Earwig" the orchestra makes quite good use of one.

Taking Cover.
I was amused to see a number of fraueins taking complete cover behind their umbrellas in order to protect their "Sunday best" from the mud-splashing attention of passing taxis the other evening.

Lady Entrants.
Quite a number of coupons are reaching us for our popular Football Competition from ladies in Rhineland. Nursing sisters, lady workers and "better halfs" are numbered among our entrants.

"COLOGNE POST" CELEBRITIES
No. I. "AGNES".

Blaze Away!
All the troops will be delighted I'm sure to hear that a fine shooting gallery is in preparation for them at the Cologne Central Y.M.C.A.

Summary Action.
When announcing the opening of this new attraction, Dr. Francis being in a facetious mood, said that he would be constantly in the gallery so that he himself might, with unerring aim "shoot at dawn" the men who litter the floors with paper and fag ends.

Fag Ends.
The Café at the Opera House is besieged by men folk in the intervals, as that is the only place where one may smoke. At the door there is a plate which receives all cigarette ends as people return to their seats. Most of the cigarette ends are quite long. I wonder what the attendants do with them?

Remarkable.
In spite of the reduced number of troops in Rhineland, Dr. Francis tells me there has been no decrease in the numbers availing themselves of all the attractions the Y.M.C.A. offers.

Deadly Newness.
Lots of people complain that many of the Rhine and Moselle wines sold in Cologne have a nasty knack of upsetting one even when comparatively small quantities are imbibed. The trouble is that most of them are of too recent make. 1917 is quite a common vintage

For Lithuania.
A good many British officers who have volunteered for the new Lithuanian Army are floating around Cologne just now. Their uniform is not unlike that of the Belgian officers.

Moving Jobs.
Sunday seems to be a favourite day with the working classes in Rhineland to move from one dwelling to another. I saw several heavily laden carts carrying household goods and chattels last Sunday.

To Those Demobbed.
The Editor asks me to point out that if any of our contributors who have returned to Blighty are not too busy with their civil occupations, he will be pleased if they will still write occasionally for the "Post."

Sound Ranger's Promotion.
I notice that Mr. Harold L. P. Jolly late of the 4th F.S.B., where he worked as a Sound Ranger, has been appointed Research Officer and Scientific Adviser to the Ordnance Survey of Great Britain, Educated at Framlingham and Trinity, Mr. Jolly worked for some time as a research student under Sir. J. J. Thomson and then went as Metro logical expert to the National Physical Laboratory.

Baths Closed.
I see that the Officers' baths at the Hohenstaufen Ring, Cologne, are now closed until further orders.

Burnt Out.
Passengers on a tramcar near the Zoo had an exciting experience recently. A wire fused, causing a fire, which burnt the roof out; but fortunately there were no casualties.

"Our" Shop.
Now that "The Cologne Post" has taken over the Army Bookroom in the Hohestrasse Arcade, we of this paper, are more than ever keen on its successful development. Do you frequent it?

Their Libraries.
Demobbed soldiers of all ranks are sending home bulky parcels of books they have accumulated since peace-time soldiering began on the Rhine. One bookworm sent home nearly three hundred volumes recently, I hear.

Wasteful.
Some of the boys are amazingly prodigal with their paper money and don't seem to realise its value. Many, I know, just throw away such dross as ten pfennig notes, and won't be bothered with anything less than a mark's worth of paper.

Awkward.
An austere-looking Sergeant-major in full paraphernalia was walking down Breite strasse a few days ago when he felt something tugging at his heels. On looking round he discovered to his horror that one of his spurs had become entangled in a lady's dress. Having extricated himself he quickly disappeared round a friendly corner to escape the lady's voluble protestations.

Sleuthhounds.
A search is being made diligently by a number of sporting enthusiasts for our correspondent, "Anti-Box." Several suspects are being carefully watched, but so far no exact proof of identity is forthcoming.

RHINELANDER.

NOTES FROM LONDON TOWN.

LORD HAIG AND DAME RUMOUR.

It is amusing to read the various "inspired" rumours in the papers as to Lord Haig since the announcement of the abolition of G.H.Q. Some in superior fashion say, "We have every reason to believe Lord Haig will be Inspector General of the Forces"; others, "It may be found that Lord Haig will go to India"; and others having nothing very positive to say venture on the truism, "The post of Commander-in-Chief having gone, Lord Haig will be unemployed." At last a practical Scottish paper threw a cold douche on all these speculations by drawing from the popular Field Marshal the laconic reply, "Nothing has yet been decided." For my part I think there is real ingenuity in the suggestion that the Government may employ Lord Haig in working out a scheme of Army re-organization which might be undertaken as part of a new scheme of Imperial Defence But wait and see.

OLD BUCKETS FOR NEW.

A leading London paper seems to have been rather badly spoofed by one of its correspondents, who to the length of a quarter of a column deplored the evidence of Government waste afforded by the spectacle of numerous buckets "red with rust" and other articles left out on a dump not a thousand miles from Epsom. Inquiries revealed the fact that the correspondent had evidently hastily glanced at the dump from a railway carriage for the buckets were a pile of unserviceable fire buckets, which were certainly red, but not with rust. The other articles were a few old stoves.

FAKES AND HIGH PRICES.

Now that the cold weather is beginning. most women are bringing out their furs, and many are wondering how they can get better ones. On this point it is the advice of one of the managers of a fur-trading West End company that to buy cheap furs is not only bad business, but it is aiding that parasite of the fur trade—the fur faker. The three most expensive furs this year, as they have been for some time, are natural black fox, sea otter, and real Russian sable.

OPERA IN ENGLISH.

Mr. Mullings, the American tenor of stentorian lungs would be hard put to it to sing "Parsifal" more than twice in one week. But I hear that Wagner's masterpiece is going to be performed in English six times in Manchester in a single week. This will surely mean a company of triple strength, but Lady Cunard and her enthusiastic backers, Lord Howard de Walden, Mr. Vincent Cailliard and Mr. Edward Hulton have raised a sum of over £100,000 with which to promote the attempt by Mr. Thomas Beecham to give us Opera in English. May success attend their fine effort.

IGNORANCE NOT BLISS.

A large quantity of doubtful wine has come to England owing to Government control, which is managed by people painfully ignorant of the elements of the business. Much liquid is being put on the market as of the nature of "port," for instance, and yet there is actually a Treaty with Portugal, signed no further back than 1915, which forbids that sort of thing. Such terms as "Spanish port," "Portugal wine," "Palestine port"—what a name!—are all against our Treaty obligations, and those using them are liable to prosecution.

WHISKY.

An old retired architect friend of mine will receive the news of the abolition of restrictions on whisky sales with a thirsty sigh of relief. I often met with his hobo-like walk during the dark days of 1918 and he told me that his one great hobby in the winter of his years was searching for whisky. The absence of restrictions will bring the finest brands within the reach of those who have up to now been compelled to accept any sort of vodka or train-oil. One excellent firm in the West End whose wares are world famous, sells a whisky of its own blending which never contains any spirit less than ten years old and it is now selling this whisky at the same price as other firms have been selling that war-whisky which brought only tears of grief to the eyes.

LADY ASTOR'S CHANCES.

The most reliable opinion in Plymouth has it that Lady Astor will be found to have won the Plymouth seat by about 1,500 votes. Even some of the most enthusiastic local Labour supporters will claim no more for Mr. Gay, the Labour Candidate, than that it was touch and go between Lady Astor and Mr. Gay. For one thing both candidates satisfied the dockers in the matter of their views on commercialising the docks. I should think Mr. Foot's place in the poll will be where his name puts it. A prominent Wee Free Devonian gave me this opinion on the ground that on the eve of the poll the Liberal meetings could not muster a dozen persons! Such are the vicissitudes of political parties.

PERISCOPE.

FOR BUSINESS MEN IN RHINELAND.

Some enquires sent to half a dozen firms manufacturing dolls and offering large orders elicited the information that delivery was impossible in any quantities, until well into next year.

* * *

Reports received by the United States Bureau of Mines state the glass industries of Germany will not be able to seek export trade or compete in the world's markets for some time to come. The heavy War demands for glass, together with the curtailment of production, have made impossible the building up of stocks of glass, and large domestic needs must be supplied.

* * *

The shortage of coal in Germany is so acute that most of the glass plants have been compelled to shut down, or to run with a very restricted output. Costs of production, and therefore prices, have increased so greatly that it is doubtful if German glass could compete with American-made glass.

* * *

The Steamer, Weimar, on her latest run Hamburg to Leith, carried the biggest cargo she has so far brought including 35 tons of seed and 30 tons of toys, small musical instruments, paper ware, and glass and iron ware.

* * *

From 1st October the price of cement was raised by all cement combines in Germany. Prices for delivery to the War Department and civil authorities increased from 1,465 to 1,533 marks. For all purchasers of cement in the area controlled by the North German Combine the price has increased from 1,535 to 1,603 marks.

In the area controlled by the Rhenish Cement Combine and the Rhenish Hochofen Cement Works, from 1,510 to 1,578 marks, in the area controlled by the South German Cement Combine, from 1,535 to 1,603 marks. The above prices are per 1,000 kilos.

* * *

The Board of Trade desire to notify consumers of dyestuffs that the first instalment of colours which are being obtained from Germany under the Reparation Clauses in the Peace Treaty will shortly be received and will be followed at intervals by further quantities. Any actual consumer of colour who is not a member of the Colour Users' Association or the National Federation of Paint Colour and Varnish manufacturers should immediately forward to the Board of Trade, Industries and Manufactures Department, St. George's St. S.W.1. information respecting estimated requirements for next six months not available from British Allied or neutral countries and approximate consumption in 1913.

* * *

The continually declining value of the mark remains the one topic of discussion in all quarters and many drastic measures have been proposed in order to get the rate of exchange back to some reasonable commercial basis. There has been talk of raising the entire standard of living throughout Germany by raising prices of all commodities and wages concurrently.

* * *

Much interest is being taken in the subject of German company law and the position of British firms or branch establishments on foreign soil. We should be glad if any of our readers would give us particulars of any books on these matters, preferably in English, for the information of several correspondents.

SALUTING.

BY AN OLD SOLDIER.

It isn't what it used to be; there's not that air of soldierly smartness about it and I have noticed one or two cases where it was beyond criticism because it wasn't there.

There seems somehow to be an idea among those very new soldiers that to salute an officer is to exhibit a sense of servitude. We older soldiers never looked upon it that way, although we held several pretty strong views about the way it should be done.

There is no servitude in a salute unless it is given in a servile fashion.

The smart "up and down" when one met a fellow fighter, dressed in the uniform showing that the wearer held a commission from the King, was simply a recognition of that King's commission.

The other point of view was that we recognised a comrade, when we saw him; recognised him in the pukka fashion and expected to be recognised. He was the man who went in front of us over the top and who saw that we got our rations O.K. And if a gleam of a smile did light up the mutual recognition of saluter and saluted, we had the satisfaction of knowing that it is not "verboten" in K.R.

Then again we always saluted the officer whenever we saw him, but there seems to be some idea among the young soldiers that saluting after dark is unnecessary. I suppose they've got mixed up in their ideas a bit, and think that because guards do not pay compliments after retreat, the individual soldier does not salute. Absolute mistake of course. The King's commission should be saluted by the individual whenever its holder is met.

But it is not only other ranks that should realise their responsibilites; it is the commissioned ranks as well. It is unsoldierly, and very galling to the saluter, if the saluted does not acknowledge same in a proper fashion. A careless flick of the cane without removing the cigarette from the mouth is not a proper acknowledgment, but we have seen it time after time.

A GREAT FIND.

The name of Jacob Cook has just come through among the news, and he will go down to fame as the man who stubbed his toe on what proved to be gold quartz and so discovered the new Canadian gold field. It is a pity that the name of the original finder of the South African diamond fields has not been similarly preserved, for they, too, were discovered by accident. It was in 1867 that a farmer was struck by a bright stone which a Boer child was using as a toy and had the phenomenon investigated. One would like to know the name of that child.

RUNNING SORE
CAUSED BY SHAVING CUT
Zam-Buk Again The Only Cure

"Whilst shaving I cut my neck", writes driver N. P. Gray, R.F.A., of 321, Romford Road, Forest Gate, London E. "Being run-down with long service in Italy & Egypt, the place took bad ways and a big sore developed.
"I tried many ordinary remedies but got no better. Finding that my sister always used Zam-Buk for any skin trouble I decided to give this herbal balm a trial. From the very first application I got relief, so naturally I used more Zam-Buk which dried up the discharge and soothed all the pain.
"Thanks alone to this wonderful Zam-Buk, there is now not a scar to show where the sore has been. I shall certainly recommend Zam-Buk to my pals."

Zam-Buk

Zam-Buk is unequalled for Ulcers, Eczema, Ringworm and Scalp Sores, Bad Legs, Piles, Poisoned and Festering Sores, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Sore Ears, Rheumatism, Cuts, Burns, Scalds, Scratches etc. Of chemists & canteens or direct from the Zam-Buk Laboratories, Leeds.

THE PEACE TREATY DELAY.

SUPREME COUNCIL DEMANDS TO KNOW GERMANY'S INTENTIONS.

STRONG NEW EGYPTIAN CABINET FORMED.

TREATY DELAY.

GERMANY COUNTING ON DISSENSIONS.

At Monday's meeting of the Supreme Council a Note was read from the acting head of the German Delegation explaining that Herr von Simon had been obliged to return to Germany to consult his Government regarding the Allies' proposals for administration of the areas of occupation. A second Note requested an adjournment of the negotiations between the Council and the German experts who had arrived at Paris to settle the details of this subject, as they had all returned to Berlin with von Simon.

General Bertholet suggested that this change of attitude was due to the events in the United States, the Germans reckoning on dissensions among the Allies.

A reply to the Notes was drafted demanding a clear statement of the intentions of the German Government regarding ratification of the Treaty.

STATES INDIGNANT.

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE.

The "League to enforce Peace," of which ex-President Taft is President, has issued a statement urging a speedy settlement of the differences at Washington, so as to permit the ratification of the Treaty as soon as possible after the Senate is re-convened.

The manifesto declares that the defeat of the ratification motion has been received by the United States with surprise and indignation. The people want peace and want the League to guard the peace. Failure to ratify the Treaty encouraged social unrest both at home and abroad.

BANK STRIKE.

ULTIMATUM TO IRISH DIRECTORS.

Irish bank officials have decided to strike as from December 31. The letter it has been decided to address to the directors of the several banks, states: "I have been instructed to inform you that on December 31 next, all bank officials who are members of this Association (except managers and agents) will cease work in every bank which in the meantime has failed to notify me, as Organising Secretary, that it is prepared to grant recognition (of the Bank Union) and not to facilitate in any way any bank that refuses to grant recognition, and will not resume their duties until it is granted."

The letter adds that should any board of directors take advantage of this notice to dismiss individuals or to introduce outside labour prior to the date fixed, the Executive holds itself free to order a cessation of work at any earlier date.

ENGLISH WIFE DESIRED.

Sir Nevil Macready, Commissioner of Police, has received a letter from a resident in the United States who desires an English girl for a wife. He states that he is a single man, aged 24, and served during the war. He would like to get married, but he "cannot bank on the American girls, for he has seen too much of them." Therefore he desires help in finding "a nice young woman in the twenties." He adds that he would like to correspond with her, or them, for he intends to be back here for the holidays. He encloses a photograph to aid decision on the part of any single young woman who may consider the offer.

It is understood that the Commissioner declines taking a hand in the matter.

THE TAXI-SIDE CAR IN PARIS.

The first taxi-side car plied for hire on Sunday in Paris. The innovation had been expected for months, for it had been reported that a large number of sidecars originally belonging to the American army had been bought for this purpose. The machines have been adapted to shelter the passengers from rain. The fare by these vehicles is naturally less than that for ordinary taxis, being 1 f per kilometre, or, roughly, 1s per mile.

MEXICAN GENERAL LYNCHED.

It is reported from a Mexican source that a large force of Mexican Federal troops recently captured Gen. Filipe Angeles, one of Gen. Villa's chief lieutenants, and summarily executed him.

LABOUR COUNCIL AND WAR LOAN.

In view of the considerable expenditure on road works in Islington during the half-year ending Lady Day next, the Borough Council has decided to dispose of its investment of £22,100 Five per Cent. War Loan.

EGYPT QUIET.

POLITICAL AGITATORS ARRESTED.

Lord Allenby wired on Sunday that Cairo and Alexandria were quiet on Saturday night. On Monday the situation was regarded more hopefully in view of the fact that the new Ministry is stronger and more united than the old one.

A Cabinet has been formed under Jussuf Wahba Pasha. Ishmail Sury Pasha is War Minister, Ahmed Juvar Pasha, Minister of Communication, Hussein Bey, Minister of Works, Ibrahim Pasha, Minister of Education, Jewfik Pasha, Minister of the Interior, and Zouttfikan Pasha, Minister of Justice.

Masmoud Pasha Suliman, President, and Ibrahim Pasha Said, vice-President of the local Committee of Zagloul Pasha's delegation, having failed to obey Lord Allenby's orders to leave Cairo, were arrested on Monday evening.

INDIAN REFORMS.

NEW BILL WELL RECEIVED.

The report of the Joint Committee on the Government of India Reform Bill has been very well received by almost all British politicians interested in Indian affairs, also by eminent Indians now in London. Mr. Arthur Henderson, Mr. George Lansbury, Colonel Wedgwood and other prominent members of the Labour Party are strongly of opinion that the people of India will be well advised to accept it, as now amended, the measure having been thereby much improved. On the other hand the European Association representing the unofficial British element in India regards the Bill as unacceptable as ever.

LIQUOR TRADE.

NEW LEGISLATION IMMINENT.

It is understood that the Government will introduce almost immediately into the House of Commons, a Bill dealing with the liquor trade. The Bill will provide for the constitution of a general authority by a general scheme. State purchase of the liquor interests is not at present contemplated, although it is not precluded. An alternative Labour measure advocates nationalisation of the industry.

"SAFETY FIRST" ECONOMIES.

Mr. H. E. Blain, manager of the Underground Railways, read a paper on the "Safety First" scheme, at the Roads Transport Congress and Exhibition, Royal Agricultural Hall, Islington. He said that since 1916, when the London "Safety First" Council was formed, there had been a steady decrease in the number of accidents in the streets and on the railways. The movement had since spread to factories and workshops, and one firm had reduced its first aid costs from £1,300 to £600 as a result of the "safety first" measures it had taken. Another firm had reduced its accident payments by over £50,000 per annum. The number of all accidents in which London General omnibuses were involved per 100,000 miles run, decreased from 22 in 1916 to 17 in 1917, and 14 in 1918.

NAVY IN PEACE TIME.

Mr. Macnamara, Financial Secretary to the Admiralty, states that this year about £160,000,000 would be spent on the Navy, one-third being deadweight war charges. Of the 400,000 officers and men in the Navy on active service there remained 160,000, and of the 18,000 mercantile marine ratings 1,500. Of the 1,005 ships under construction at the time of the Armistice 629 had been completed for sale, and 1,900 trawlers and drifters had been restored to commerce. Two hundred and sixty-nine craft had been broken up and 8,500,000 tons of stores disposed of.

ITALIAN CONSCRIPTION.

In Rome it is semi-officially announced that a decree will shortly be issued establishing the new army organisation. It will fix one year as the period for military service, reducible to eight months for almost yearly contingents. Compulsion will be universal but the period of service may be reduced for those having special family claims.

DIAMOND INDUSTRY.

Another diamond cutting factory for disabled soldiers has been erected at Wrexham by the South African diamond magnate Mr. Oppenheimer. It is designed for the accommodation of 150 workers.

ARMY ACCOUNTS.

FORMATION OF A NEW CORPS ANNOUNCED.

The King has authorised the formation of a Corps to be entitled the Corps of Military Accountants. This corps will form one of the administrative departments of each Command under a General Officer in charge of Administration at the War Office. An officer of the Corps will be appointed Command Accountant in each of the Commands, and will be responsible for the cost accounts of Units in the Command. He will be assisted by group and station accountant officers.

The ranks and rates of pay for officers vary from 57s 6d daily for a first accountant officer (Colonel) to 19s daily for the sixth class (Captain).

All officers now serving as military accountant officers will be seconded temporarily to the Corps of Accountants. Similarly all military accountant clerks will be transferred to the Corps on probation.

AERIAL SERVICES.

HANDLEY PAGE RECORDS.

A summary dealing with the actual experiences of running a fleet of large aeroplanes for commercial and passenger-carrying purposes, has been produced by the Handley Page Transport (Limited). The record since May 1 is as follows:—

Passengers carried	3,834
Freight	17,060lb.
Mileage flown	46,150 miles.

The scheduled services to the Continent and passenger flights at Cricklewood have been accomplished without mishap. Among the passengers carried have been the King of Greece, the Prince of Wales, the Crown Prince of Rumania, the Crown Prince of Sweden, two old ladies aged 73 and 75, and a baby of two and a half years.

On the London-Paris daily service since September 2nd, 108 journeys have been made, 517 passengers and 7,633lb. carried, the total distance being 24,600 miles.

On the London-Brussels service during the last seven weeks, 45 journeys have been made, and 182 passengers and 7,635lb. of freight and mails carried over a total distance of 10,350 miles.

FATAL PANIC.

FIRE AT A DANCING HALL.

A fire broke out at Ville Platte (Louisiana), on Sunday in a hall in which a dance was in full swing. The difficulties of rescue were complicated by the panic which ensued, and the death roll is a large one. So far 20 bodies have been recovered. The victims are descendants of French exiles from Acadia.

THEFT IN A POLICE CELL.

Duncan Henry Webb and Ernest Rusby, demobilized soldiers, were remanded at Bow street on the charge, to which they pleaded guilty, of robbing another demobilized soldier, named James Basedon, of £4 10s. in Treasury notes. It was stated that the three men were detained in an accommodation cell at Bow-street police station on Thursday on minor charges and that the notes were taken from a wallet in the tunic pocket of the prosecutor whilst he was asleep.

UNITED SERVICES' FUND.

As the United Services' Fund, of which Lord Byng is chairman, has decided that the administration of the Canteen funds shall in future be in the hands of the men themselves, the Incorporated Soldiers' and Saliors' Help Society wish it to be known at once that the branches of the Society in all parts of the Kingdom can no longer consider applications from men for grants or loans from the Canteen funds in question.

OFFICERS SECONDED FOR STUDY AT UNIVERSITIES.

Under a Royal Warrant an officer of the Regular Army seconded for a course of study at a University may, subject to the discretion of the Army Council, count three-quarters of the time spent at a University towards retired pay, if he serves for three years after completing his course.

BRITISH SUBJECT CLAIMED.

A member of the British Murman Legion was recently sentenced by the State Criminal Court of Finland to seven years imprisonment. The British representative, Colonel Warren, immediately intimated that no member of the Legion could be subjected to the jurisdiction of that Court and the man was at once handed over to the British.

LIVERPOOL WATER SCHEME.

Liverpool Corporation is seeking Parliamentary sanction to the laying of a fourth line of pipes from Vyrnwy Lake, Montgomeryshire, to the corporation reservoirs at Prescot, 68 miles, and for considerable alterations in the levels of portions of the third line, at a combined cost of probably £5,000,000.

20,000 OUT OF WORK.

MANSION HOUSE MEETING FOR EX-OFFICERS.

A representative meeting was held at the Mansion House on Monday for the purpose of helping the re-settlement in civil life of demobilized officers. The Lord Mayor presided, those present on the platform including Earl Haig, Sir Robert Horne, Lord Burnham and Lord Denbigh. Earl Beatty wrote apologising for his absence.

A message was read from the King assuring the meeting of His Majesty's interest in the welfare and future prosperity of ex-service men, and expressing the hope that the efforts being made will be attended with the utmost success.

The Lord Mayor explained that he had called the meeting in the interest of 12,000 ex-officers in London and greater London.

Sir Robert Horne, Minister of Labour, said there were about 20,000 ex-officers looking for work, of whom 12,000 were in London. Of that number about 10,000 had been engaged in commercial life. He ventured to suggest that they could be helped by establishing interview boards that would deal with vacancies. He wanted four hundred men acquainted with business pursuits in the City to deal with the applications and help to find them situations.

Earl Haig said it was not for him to tell the citizens of London their duty. They had done their duty right well throughout the war and he was equally sure they would now continue to do their duty. He said the Government scheme for improving the state of disabled officers and their dependants should have materialised long ago. (applause).

The following resolution was proposed by Lord Inchcape: "That this meeting, fully realising the claims of officers who have served during the war, pledges to do all in its power to assist the re-settlement in civil life of those whose careers have been interrupted by their devotion to duty." The resolution was carried.

WEDDING AT COLOGNE.

The marriage was solemnised yesterday morning at the Garrison Church of England, Cologne, of Corporal J. Danson Nye, 20th M.A.C. and Miss Frieda Steinor, a young lady of Norwegian birth, residing in Cologne.

The best man was Sergt. R. Nuttall, of 20th M.A.C., while the bridesmaids were the Misses Else Westhofen, Martha Kaft, Josephine Sering and Grete Schorn.

The bride was given away by her mother and the register was signed by Capt. O. S. Maunsell, O.B.E. and C. S. M. Howell, M.M. A large number of men of the bridegroom's unit as well as many civilian relatives and friends of the bride attended the ceremony.

The rarity of a British wedding in Germany attracted a very large crowd outside the church to watch the party emerge into the bright sunshine—proverbially a promising augury for future happiness.

GERMANY'S ARMED FORCES.

Replying to a question in the House of Commons regarding the statement that Germany has an army of over half a million on a war footing, Mr. Bonar Law said that to the best of the Government's belief the number given is exaggerated. He added that the limitation of numbers was only to take effect after the ratification of the Peace Treaty. Meanwhile, however, the strength of the German forces is one of the things not likely to be overlooked by Marshal Foch.

WILSON AND THE TREATY.

President Wilson's supporters in the Senate, according to messages from Washington, say that if Senator Lodge's resolution declaring war with Germany ended is passed, the President will veto it. This means that the United States will probably not be formally at peace with Germany until a long political fight has taken place.

It is quite probable that the next Presidential election will be fought on the question of ratification.

IRONMOULDERS' STRIKE.

The ironmoulders' strike in the Black Country resulted on Saturday in the stoppage of several works. Schools are closed in consequence of inability to secure materials for repairs to damaged boilers.

The moulders who resumed work last week in an attempt to break the three months' strike have been compelled to come out again by the hostility of the strikers, whose many angry demonstrations have compelled the others to seek police protection.

ST. ALBANS CONTEST.

Mr. Milner Gray has been adopted as Liberal candidate for the St. Albans Division. He opened his campaign on Saturday night with a meeting at St. Albans.

AUSTRALIAN DROUGHT.

The losses of livestock in New South Wales owing to the great drought, said a speaker in the State Parliament, would amount if capitalized, to fifty million pounds.

PREMIUM BONDS.

OBJECTIONS OF NATIONAL SAVINGS COMMITTEE.

The National Savings Committee, which once before stated the objections to Premium Bonds has again formulated them giving reasons why they should not be adopted. In a published statement the Committee says that since the beginning of the war the contributions to Government securities by the small investor have been as follows:—

Post Office issue of War Loans, Exchequer and War Bonds	£194,000,000
War Savings Certificates (less withdrawals and excluding accrued interest)	261,286,000
Increase of balances standing to the credit of depositors in savings banks	93,798,000
Total	£549,084,000

It will thus be seen that the small investor holds an interest in Government securities equivalent to about £50 per family in the United Kingdom. The number of holders of British Government securities has increased from less than 350,000 before the war to nearly 20,000,000 at the present time.

The average number of savings certificates purchased each month from their introduction in February, 1916, to the date of the Armistice was 8,000,000. The average number since the Armistice has been 9,500,000.

The savings movement and its satisfactory results can only be understood when it is recognized that it is not only founded on sound financial and economic principles, but that the appeal is based on patriotism and the highest interests of the individual and his family. The habit of saving, which was often begun during the war for patriotic reasons, has been found to be beneficial to the individual, and it is being maintained today on a substantial and satisfactory scale.

There are no such firm foundations and motives in connexion with an issue of premium or prize bonds. The appeal which is relied upon to bring in subscriptions to this type of security is frankly an appeal to cupidity and to a desire to become rich without effort.

The Committee does not desire to make any pronouncement on the general question of morality involved in an issue of premium bonds, but it is definitely of opinion that, on financial and economic grounds alone, such an issue would be contrary to the best interests of the nation.

BERMONDT BEATEN.

LETTISH TROOPS CAPTURE MITAU.

According to the Lettish official account of the capture of Mitau, the storming of the town began at 5 a.m. on the 21st. A fierce six-hour struggle ensued, in which the desperate resistance of the Germans was broken. The town was then occupied by the Letts. The capture was effected from the North-West and West. The amount of booty is very large. Fighting continues on the South East of the town. Bermondt's beaten troops have been obliged to retreat to the Lithuanian frontier instead of directly towards Germany. The German retreat on the Libau front is proceeding towards the Lithuanian-German frontier. The Lett advance was aided by a large amount of captured German ammunition.

CLACTON IS SO BRACING.

Resenting the action of the Clacton Council in relegating to obscurity a German field gun presented to the town by the War Office, a large number of men broke into the yard where it was hidden, removed the gun from a heap of rubbish, and dragged it through the streets. Admidst scenes of jubilation they finally placed the gun in a prominent position on the Marine Parade and chalked on the weapon the words "When will the Council wake up?"

SEAMEN'S EIGHT HOUR DAY.

The International Labour Conference has agreed upon the principle of the eight hour day and forty-eight hour week, with safeguards for the interests of exceptional industries. It has also agreed to apply this principle to transportation by sea. Details will be worked out by a special conference.

FATAL RACIAL OUTBREAK.

Three whites were killed and two wounded in a pitched battle between Trades Unionists and detectives assisted by ex-soldiers at Bogal, U.S.A., while the former were protecting a negro labour leader from arrest. The negro escaped during the fight.

J.P. STRUCK OFF.

Mr. Thomas Griffiths, the Liverpool shipwright who for two years has been a Labour Justice of the Peace, has been removed from the Commission of the Peace. He refused to swear in special constables during the railway strike.

The main buildings of Laval Univers ity Montreal, containing the medical research department were destroyed by fire on Monday.

PRICE OF COAL.

IMMEDIATE AND BIG REDUCTION.

Sir Auckland Geddes declared in the House of Commons that the actual output of coal from July to date was less than at the rate of 217 million tons per annum, though in recent weeks the output had shown a marked improvement. It was on export and bunker coal that great profits were being made. Coal for inland purposes was being sold at a loss. It was therefore desirable to modify the present system of coal control by limiting the amount to be exported, by limiting the owners' profits and by limiting the price of coal for domestic purposes.

It was proposed to fix the price of domestic and household coal at ten shillings per ton below the present prices. It was also proposed to reduce the price for coastwise bunker coal to the industrial level. Both of these changes would take effect from next Monday.

'VARSITY NOTES.

INVESTITURE OF FAMOUS WAR CHIEFS.

Owing to the number of distinguished men who have accepted the offer of honorary degrees and are waiting for formal admission to the same degrees, the installation of Mr. A. J. Balfour, as the new Chancellor of Cambridge University, originally intended for next June, has been arranged to take place on Thursday next.

Among the recipients of honours will be Admiral of the Fleet Sir Henry Jackson, Admiral Sir Charles Madden, Rear Admiral Sir Roger Keyes, General Sir William Robertson, General Lord Byng of Vimy, Air Marshal Sir Hugh Trenchard, and Air Vice-Marshal Sir J. Salmond.

Colonel H. J. Edwards has retired from the command of the Cambridge University O.T.C. which he has held from the commencement, after having been second in command of the old University Volunteers. He is succeeded by Colonel L. H. Shorton, who was the very popular Adjutant of the Corps during the war.

Dr. S. A. R. Munroe has been elected Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford, in succession to the late Dr. Merry.

As was anticipated, the veteran Dr. Lock, Warden of Keble, has been elected Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity, replacing Dr. Sunday.

WAR IN RUSSIA.

EBB AND FLOW OF SUCCESS.

A War Office communiqué dealing with Denikin's front to the 21st November states that General Wrangel repulsed a Bolshevist attack on a thirty-five mile front between the Volga and the Don on the 19th November and then advanced, capturing 830 prisoners and thirty machine-guns.

On the Volunteer Army front the Bolshevists continue to advance. They have taken the railway junction of Rijarva and Rakmach, but North West of Kiev the peasants have risen in the rear of the Bolshevists. Denikin's advance against Petlura continues and 15,000 Galician troops have deserted to Denikin's side.

The band of brigands who have for long been a thorn in Denikin's side have been surrounded South West of Ekaterinoslav. Advices from the North West Army up to the 22nd report heavy fighting North and South of Narva with little change in the situation.

U.S. MINERS' WAGES.

The acting President of the American Miners' Union, Mr. Lewis, on behalf of the bituminous coal miners, has accepted the Secretary of Labour's proposal for an advance of wages of thirty-one per cent. for day labourers, and twenty-seven cents per ton for hewers.

The mine owners have declined to meet the increases unless the Government assumes responsibility for the added burden to coal consumers.

EX-KAISER'S TRIAL.

In British delegation circles in Paris it is stated that not only will the ex-Kaiser be tried by a special court, apart from other Germans, but that all questions in connection with his trial will be dealt with by a special tribunal convoked solely for that purpose.

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE

Speculative descriptions opened with a fresh burst of activity, Oils being conspicuous under the lead of Mexican Eagle shares, which after touching 14 3/4 closed at 14 1/4 on the talk of political developments in Mexico. South Africa mining descriptions were buoyant but the best quotations were not maintained. De Beers deferred, after reaching the high record price of 33 closed at 32 1/2. Russian minings improved in anticipation of details of the recent combine, which will be entitled, Russo-Asiatic Consolidated, with a capital of twelve millions. Textile and Engineering issues were also favoured. Among investments, French and Brazilian issues were prominently firm on the improvement in the exchange. Silver advanced 75 1/2 pence through the demands of speculators and practically nothing available on spot. German marks varied from 165 to 169 and Austrian crowns 560 to 580.

PROCRASTINATION.

Someone has said in verse that the saddest phrase is, "It might have been—." How dreadfully true that is—the fatal facility one finds in slipping into the habit of putting off until to-morrow what might have been quite easily done to-day. Perhaps, nowhere, has this procrastination taken a greater hold than amongst the youngér generation of the present Army of Occupation.

During the period of the war, there was little incentive to individual effort — probably in most cases the only task calling for the exertion of thought and of orginality was the writing of letters and this was made necessary, if in no other manner, by the non-receipt of letters from home — even so, how many anxious hours have been caused to folks at home by the putting off until to-morrow of letter writing. From the East comes the origin of the proverb, "To-morrow never comes," and from the West the slogan, "Do it now."

And from all over the world comes the cry for men of action, for men who can make quick and accurate decisions. Obviously in warfare, as most of us have seen, this quality has been very necessary. It is, however, still more essential in everyday life.

In that brief Americanism lies the key to success. "Do it now" — and make that your motto — grasp right now all opportunities for improving yourself in any way. Training in the Rhine Army is both necessary and beneficial. After parade hours there is much time at the disposal of the present day soldier to learn, and of course, "Knowledge is power."

Schools, Technical colleges, Museums and Libraries are all available to the soldier on the Rhine — golden opportunities are before you — are you going to grasp them, not next week, not to-morrow, but to-day?

Taking the line of least resistance is easy, and like the road paved with good intentions, leads to hell. It's the man who does things that counts, not the man who is going to do them. In these present days of keen competition, the man who knows a little more than he needs, gets the pull. Years ago, there was excuse for those who did not learn, but to-day—particularly for those of the Rhine Army—there is no excuse. Knowledge lies at your door—will you throw away your chance? There is a certain school in Germany, where a scholar found to be idle, is forced to write out a number of times a phrase, of which the following is a translation, "Lost. One golden hour, set with sixty diamond minutes, which can never be recovered."

How many golden hours have you lost?

A FIGHTING RECORD.

How often do we quote the Persian poet's glib phrase, "Unborn to-morrow and dead yesterday," and how utterly false does its sentiment seem to-day. We who have fought 'neath the banner of Right, we who have seen our comrades fall from their places at our side—can "yesterday" ever be dead to us? I venture to think not.

Pregnant though those years were of sorrow and suffering, filled though those endless hours were with anxiety and uncertainty, we would not wish to—we could not forget them.

When our minds review the events of the war, the particular triumphs and setbacks of our units, then comes that feeling of pride, that admiration for the "other fellow" and one is thrilled again by the great spirit of selflessness that was so characteristic of those days. To have compiled a Battalion history from the overture until the curtain fell is a gigantic accomplishment and one accompanied with many pitfalls; not the least amongst these, is the difficulty for accuracy.

"Yet we do claim for this narrative that it has the veracity to be expected of an account, compiled in the field, of operations in which we have actually participated." That is an extract from the foreword to a most remarkable book entitled the "History and Memoir of the 33rd Battalion Machine Gun Corps and the 19th, 98th, 100th and 248th M.G. Companies", written and illustrated by members of the Battalion, and printed by Waterlow Bros. & Layton, Ltd.

A PRIVATE ENTERPRISE.

Sixteen hundred copies of the book only were printed for private circulation, on hand-made paper. Copiously illustrated in black and white together with a great number of oil and water colour sketches by Lieut. Col. G.S. Hutchinson, D.S.O., M.C., aeroplane photographs, diagrams and maps make it possible to follow the adventures of the Battalion with hardly any effort on the reader's part.

The struggles of the Machine Gun to come into its own, the fight of this arm against prejudice, and its ultimate success, are dealt with very fully. Not a little charm is added to this remarkable addition to the literature of the war, by the fact that it is not attributed to an individual, but to the whole Battalion.

Throughout its pages, the unique active service conditions are vividly brought before the reader—one lives again the days when the dividing line between tragedy and comedy was not very distinct. The final message from Lieut-Col. Hutchinson D.S.O., M.C., tucked away at the end of this publication rings true, and is an example of the spirit the great war has found in the sons of Britain. He says, "I shall go back to a humble position; my happiest days have been with the Battalion; my pride has been, and will remain, unbounded."

PLATOON OF TOWN MAJORS.

During the spring push of the Germans in 1918, many exciting and unusual situations of course cropped up, but one of the most amusing occurred as the result of a reconnaissance carried out by Col. Hutchinson and his Adjutant. Finding a flank entirely open, they gathered together a small force of men which consisted of members of at least twenty units, and an officer was despatched on a cycle to collect all available men—cooks, batmen, pioneers, anyone who could hold a rifle—and it is said that a platoon of Town Majors under an Area Commandant arrived on the scene.

In common with most Machine Gun Battalions, the 33rd had a party of American Machine Gunners attached to them for instruction. Their advent is described as follows.

The plenipotentiaries arrived en masse, and struck one at first glance as a concourse of very grave men with extremely tight uniforms. There was much saluting, handshaking and introductions, a diversion being produced by the band in full war paint, which vigorously played "The Star Spangled Banner."

There was one Company Commander whose quaint humour endeared him to all ranks. To all, one had to say, he listened with a grave interest. He never lost the grim humour of the thing. The loud report at dead of night of a battery of ours, would only provoke from him the injunction hardly audible, "Give 'em Hell."

Captain English was a typical American a la "Punch." His first introduction was to unpeel before our eyes, a cunningly twisted packet of chewing gum—duly producing sundry other packets and passing them round. He had a series of adventures remarkable in the extreme—he had been blown up by a gas shell and by a miracle had adjusted his box respirator before reaching the ground. He wanted to learn. Guessed he'd "cotton on" O. K.—and to do him justice, he did learn and quickly too. Afterwards his division (the 30th) earned a name for themselves round Le Catelet.

A STOLEN BAND.

This Battalion acquired a band in an amusing manner. The 18th Battn. Manchester Regt., was disbanded and their band lent to the 30th Battn. M.G.C. who were shortly after disbanded. The musicians had by this time become trained gunners, and a little "smart practice" hoodwinked the "powers that be," and found the 33rd Bn. complete with band. On the plea that they were trained gunners frantic wires were sent to various headquarters, and the Band personnel transferred to the Machine Gun Corps. Thus, by a piece of sheer bluff, by which, to quote the Battalion memoir, the Band was made happy, it made the C. O. happy and added very considerably to the happiness of not only the 33rd Battalion, M.G.C. but of nearly every unit in the Division. Over £600 was spent on re-equipping and to obtain new instruments etc. a "sub" was sent to England—so that he also was made happy. Subsequently the band was honoured by playing before King George at Lovie Chateau in June 1918, and in July of the same year, when it played before the King and Queen of the Belgians.

During the push in the spring of 1918, the commanding officer of the Battalion had urgent need of a lorry to rush guns and ammunition up to the line—but the story is best told in his own words. "The officer in charge of the column refused to give it, although the urgency of the case was explained to him, and the lorry in question was empty. Lieutenant Colonel Hutchinson thereupon put the motor transport officer to sleep with a right hook, commandeered the lorry, and took it to Battalion headquarters.

MORE "SCROUNGING."

On another occasion a French pontoon was "obtained" by the Transport of the 100th Machine Gun Company and towed up the canal from Suzanne into the Somme opposite the island. Chiefly under the direction of Sergeant Sturch and Privates Willetts and Willesden, the boat was converted into an armoured gunboat. In order to give her the necessary armoured plating, "scrounged" steel helmets were tacked round her sides down to the "Plimsoll mark" and machine guns were installed fore and aft.

By the time the boat was ready the thaw had already commenced; and it was hoped to manoeuvre the boat through the thin ice up to the German lines and co-operate with a Machine Gun landing party in a raid which was planned for the Glasgow Righlanders. A preliminary reconnaisance was carried out by Major Hutchinson and Private Morgan across the ice. In order to protect them both against mishap they were both secured with telephone wire. Pte. Morgan unfortunately for himself, decided to fall through a shellhole in the ice and was saived, half drowned. Major Hutchison proceeded as far as the island, about 100 yards from the German wire when he floundered through the ice. Twelve "good men" at the end of his telephone cable immediately jerked it taut and proceeded pulling.

By a series of these jerks Major Hutchison was retrieved about half the distance across the ice when, owing to a slackening of the wire, he was able to get on his feet and proceed homeward on his own. But no sooner was he once more started than another jerk came upon the hawser and he was jerked off his feet and tobogganed across the ice. This experiment was repeated several times until he reached home, and was immediately carried to hospital, from whence, having been curiously diagnosed as a case of spotted fever, he escaped and returned to his Company.

Space unfortunately will not permit us to deal more fully with this interesting book which is a most valuable addition to War Literature, and which reflects the greatest possible credit on the Battalion responsible for its conception. W.K.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views.

SOLDIERS AND WINE.

Sir,—I was rather surprised at the alarm caused to "Perturbed" by the alarming habit the British soldier has acquired since his arrival in Germany of drinking, and the liking he has taken for wine.

"Perturbed" evidently thinks that Tommy has discarded his beer for wine, on which point I beg to disagree.

Does "Perturbed" think that when Tommy gets home, he will go in for wine, and shall I say make it a kind of national beverage? I think not?

One only has to note the way in which the Government have brewed more beer, and a better quality (though not so much improvement on the war quality in my opinion) to see that the Tommies who have been demobilized still prefer beer to wine, although wine is obtainable.

Anyway does not the little ditty, "Here's to good old beer, mop it down, mop it down," still appeal to Tommy?

I don't think "Perturbed" need be alarmed over Tommy discarding his beer as in the first place most Tommies will not pay the exorbitant price charged for wine at home, and in the second place beer has been, and I might venture to say, always will be, our national beverage. "What is bred in the bone etc."

BEER MOPPER.

Sir,—With regard to the growing liking for wine attributed to the British soldier by "Perturbed," does it not strike him that the majority of Tommies only fall back on wine owing to the total lack of any other palatable beverage.

It is only natural that "Tommy" will patronise the large German cafes, with their various attractions, and he can hardly be expected to sit down and drink the awful concoction called, "German Lager."

If steps were taken to provide him with good English draught beer or stout or even English bottled beer, at a reasonable price, I'm sure the consumption of Rhine wine would greatly diminish.

This would not only have a far better effect on the stomachs of our soldiers, but would cause a very large sum of money to be converted from the pockets of the wealthy German café proprietors into the hands of our own countrymen. Anyone who has visited these large cafés cannot but help noticing that the lower the value of the mark becomes, the more they charge for the wines, an altogether home-produced article.

I do not think that there is any fear of the old pint of beer, providing the quality is good, going by the board when Tommy is demobilized. R.A.M.C.

[We understand that English draught beer is to be obtained at the N.A.C.B. Canteens, and bottled beer and stout is also obtainable. Ed]

DO WE READ TOO MUCH?

Sir,—I think "Rural" forgets that thought is dependent upon and is the result of reading.

In the cases cited of the country dweller and seafaring man these people have the appearance of depth in thought because they are so simple. An ordinary case of opposites.

Reading without thought produces that social barnacle, the "bookworm," but on the other hand "thought" unassisted by reading is decidedly a failure.

With reference to Carlyle, he is hardly a writer to start with. Considerable "booklore" is necessary to grasp his ponderous but magnificent style. Such ground is not for beginners in the field of literature.

READER AND THINKER.

Sir,—Your correspondent writing on the subject of reading and thinking, has not, in my opinion made himself quite clear. If, as I imagine, he means that those who read and do not think are making a big mistake, I am quite in agreement with him.

But if he means that book-reading pure and simple is harmful and checks the tendency to think for ourselves, he is altogether wrong.

The correct way in which to study a book is, first of all to read it carefully. This in itself means thinking. To thoroughly understand every idea expressed in a book means that we must give it the whole of our attention, for the time being—a process that can only be most beneficial to the mental faculties by improving the reader's powers of concentration.

In the second place we must write out a summary of the book's contents—a far from easy matter and here again we must think, and think carefully. Such a task also tests our memory and not until one comes to do it can he understand how difficult it is.

If necessary the book should be re-read until all its most important facts or contentions are impressed on the mind. Even now, thinking is still to play an important part.

"What do I think of the book?" the reader should ask himself. "Does it agree with my own views? If so has any argument in its favour been missed?" or "why don't I agree with it?" and so on. It is only the reader who reads without thinking who does not gain, and gain enormously from reading.

And as, when we leave school, the printed book is practically our only fount of knowledge, to cry down book-reading is to cry down our greatest teachers.

BOOKWORM.

RHINELAND DRAMA.

Sir,—During the past six months I have considered it a privilege to be able to visit the Deutsches Theatre regularly. Every production (with the exception of the unfortunately cast and obviously under-rehearsed "Hindle Wakes") would have been received with approbation in those homes of the repertory drama—Glasgow, Birmingham, and Manchester.

In future years, many, I am sure, will acnowledge a debt of gratitude to the R.A.D.C. that, during their stay in the occupied area, they found that the Theatre had something to offer them other than the exaggerations of transpontine melodrama, the inanities of musical comedy, the "rag" of revue, or the flippancies of farce.

But from your columns it appears the programmes offered are not appreciated by a large section. Might I suggest that the dramatic menu offered at the Deutsches be lightened occasionally so that the digestions of these "weaker brethren" be not impaired by a too exclusive diet of "strong meat," by the provision of such plays as "Lady Huntworth's Experiment," "Liberty Hall," "One Summer's Day," "The Liars," "David Garrick," "A Pair of Spectacles" "Mrs. Dane's Defence" or "Hobson's Choice."

BRUM.

Sir,—I sincerely hope that Lieutenant Percy and his clever company will not debase their art by attempting to supply the requirements of Jock II and his chums.

As Lieut. Percy is the Amusements' Officer I would suggest that he engages a blood-and-thunder company to stage "The Murder in the Red Barn" one week for the mentally undeveloped, and then follow on with, say Ibsen's "The Wild Duck" or "Rosmersholm." Then perhaps he could secure the services of a red-nosed comedian and ballet-skirted-damsels' company for the inane gigglers, to be followed by Granville Barker's "The Voysey Inheritance." And so on alternately. I should dearly love to see the B.R.A.D.C. play "The Voysey Inheritance." A well-known London dramatic critic considers it to be in many respects the most remarkable play of modern times. A young Russian-Jew who sat next to me at the Deutsches Theatre last night, greatly enjoyed Miss Bensusan's acting as the Frau Guixano. He said that her Hebrew and Yiddish were perfect, and expressed his admiration of Lieut. Percy's broad-mindedness in presenting Zangwill's play. I admit that the piece made a special appeal to him, but he was only a boy, and why should not other boys in the British Rhine Army appreciate a good thing when they see it? POLLY.

SOLDIERS AS FATALISTS.

Sir,—The point in Lieut. W. Romaine Paterson's review of "The Army and Religion" with reference to the growth of fatalism in the Army will I am sure be endorsed by all—the great majority of soldiers in the days of war were inclined to fatalistic beliefs.

They were convinced that it was an unkind fate which dealt out death wholesale and a kind fate which preserved.

While, however, such a doctrine held sway in those days I am of the opinion that it is rapidly losing favour to-day. Superstition and fatalism are essentially associated with war, but in the less hysterical days of peace they lose their magnetism and power.

Something that will stand the test of cold reasoning and examination is now demanded. NON FATALIST.

Space unfortunately will not permit us to deal more fully with this interesting book which is a most valuable addition to War Literature, and which reflects the greatest possible credit on the Battalion responsible for its conception. W.K.

THE GARDEN AFTER RAIN.

When even falls on azure skies,
And sets the twilight free,
A happy little thought shall rise,
A tender thought of thee,
And I will sing a carol gay,
As joys come back again,
Of love, a girl, a summer's day,
In the garden after rain.

I can't forget that garden sweet,
The violet scented eve,
Where pansies bright with glad thoughts greet,
And softest zephyrs breathe,
But I will sing a happy lilt,
As hours live o'er again,
Of hopes, and dreams, and castles built,
In the garden after rain.

For many fondest memories,
Are in that garden laid,
Of flowers and love and kisses
Of twilight and a maid,
And though we parted as we met,
To never love again,
Those hours, dear heart, I'll ne'er forget,
In the garden after rain. J.M.S.

GODDARD WINS.

Knocks Out McLaglen in Third Round.

WINNER OUT-BOXED.

There was a big and enthusiastic crowd to witness Frank Goddard and Victor McLaglen fight at the National Sporting Club on Monday evening in a fifteen round contest. Goddard was out-boxed nearly the whole time, but in the third round landed a swinging right and caught McLaglen under the heart sending him down for the full count.

ATTWOOD'S VICTORY.

At the Ring, Blackfriars on Monday evening, in a twenty round contest, Joe Attwood, Halesowen, beat Sid Stagg, Deptford, the latter retiring in the thirteenth round.

REFEREE AND SPECTATORS.

Walsall and District F.A. has ordered the ground of the Heath Hayes (Cannock) Club to be closed for a month, on a complaint by Mr. Monk, a Lichfield referee, that the club officials failed to afford him adequate protection on the occasion of a Lichfield League match in which he officiated at Heath Hayes. His statement was that at the termination of the game he was surrounded by a number of spectators, one of whom caught him violently by the collar and pulled him backwards. The club was ordered in addition to pay the expenses of the inquiry.

FOOTBALL GOSSIP.

By W. Le C.

In my last notes I commented on the presence of Middlesboro' officials in Scotland and said that readers should not be surprised if startling transfers were noised about. Following this comes the transfer of Marshall from St. Mirren for £2,000, a transfer which has set all Scotland talking.

* * *

Airdrie have now Turner of Vale of Leithan on their books. A scoring centre, yet I cannot see him displacing "Jimmy" Reid.

* * *

How often does a club make the mistake of taking but one of a famous wing. Blackburn did it whem they left McTavish after signing Simpson and Sunderland took Hall and left his partner Husband with St. Mirren. Wings of great understanding should never be separated.

* * *

Charlie Shaw, one of Celtic's famous defence looks as if he has been "dropped" at last. Lawrie who takes his place is a clever custodian.

* * *

Colin Veitch is the finest football captain I have ever had the privilege of meeting. His was the master mind behind the sterling play of the "real Newcastle."

* * *

Newport County's uphill fight deserves sympathy. They are struggling gamely in a hotbed of the Rugger code.

Kent's Programme.

Kent will play home and home matches next season with thirteen of the first-class counties. Three of the Kent Cricket Weeks have been already fixed up, and it is hoped to arrange two more.

SPORT IN BRIEF.

Coventry's New Players.

Coventry City have secured three new players, Walker, inside right or centre, from Birmingham, and Hanney, centre half, and Wynn, inside forward, from Manchester City. It is said £2,000 was paid for Hanney's transfer.

Footballer's Sudden Death.

At an inquest on Monday touching the death of William Jones (30), who died soon after the start of the Monmouthshire v. Monmouthshire League game at Ebbw Vale, the coroner returned a verdict of "Death from apoplexy while playing football."

Football Appointment.

Mr. H. Pollitt, of Manchester, has been appointed secretary-manager of Coventry City F.C. He is well known as a Football League referee, and is resigning a post he holds under the Ministry of Labour to reorganise the Coventry side, which has not yet won a League match this season.

PORTSMOUTH'S RISE.

Army's Part in Progress of Famous Team.

BY "TYNESIDER."

Portsmouth F. C. are to-day a power in the land. They are a well balanced team with a clever management and are all out to top the Southern League. This they managed to do by Saturday's victory over Cardiff, but can they stay there? is another question.

The rise of Pourtsmouth reads almost like a romance, and to the Army must be given the credit for this. Almost thirty years ago, Portsmouth Town was a team which played many elevens representing military units stationed in the town. The Club fell on hard times, however, and the Royal Artillery came forward with a team. One of the principal officials of the new club was Sergt. Major Windrum, who ultimately reached commissioned rank and later played a big part in founding another famous Southern League club, viz Plymouth Argyle.

The Army team prospered and, eventually, in 1898, after sundry minor successes, they topped the second division of the Southern League. These successes roused the southern football public, and all hailed Portsmouth as a great team.

But, alas, they erred and the suspension of the club by the Football Association was a bitter blow to those who had the interests of the club at heart.

IN PROFESSIONAL RANKS.

The formation of a professional club was suggested to replace the suspended Army club, and this quickly found favour. The suggestion was acted upon, there being no lack of supporters, and in their first year of professionalism the new club finished second to Tottenham Hotspur in the Southern League.

In the following season, they finished third in the Southern League and won the Western League; no mean performance. In 1901—2, they were well in the limelight. They topped both the Southern and Western Leagues, in each case Tottenham Hotspur being the runners-up. This was a splendid achievement.

To-day, they are making another bold bid for a championship. They have seen hard times in the last few years, and the football public would welcome the advent of this Southern Club at the head of the table. It is early yet to prophesy but, given a little luck, they can accomplish it.

Many football "stars" of older days have been associated with Portsmouth. To mention a few at random: Wilkie, the Hearts and Liverpool player; Reilly, the Irish International keeper; Frank Brettel, half-back and manager; Arthur Chadwick, one of the eleverest centre-halves England ever called upon, and "Sandy" Brown, whose goal scoring abilities are yet discussed in the Naval town.

If only they had a forward of Brown's type to-day, points galore would be theirs. Their defence is one of the soundest in the Southern League and this has greatly assisted their bid for the leadership. Let us hope they will continue their winning way. Good luck to the "Pompey" stalwarts.

SCOTTISH SWIMMING RECORD.

Two new Scottish swimming records were set up at the annual gala in connection with the Warrender Club, Edinburgh. R. Lauchlan, who broke the record for 50 yards recently by returning 25⅖ sec., reduced this time by three-fifths of a second, doing 24⅘ sec. The other record was in a team race, the Warrender quintette returning the fine time of 2 min. 17 sec., which is 2⅖ sec. better than the previous best performance. The team comprised R. Lauchlan, E. L. Sanders, G. S. Campbell, D. S. Lemmon, and F. Lemmon.

FOOTBALL RESULTS.

JUMPING SEASON OPENS.

Repetition of Flat Racing Boom Expected.

BIRMINGHAM DETAILS.

The jumping season that opened at Birmingham on Tuesday is full of promise and there is likely to be as big a boom in 'chasing as there has been in flat racing throughout the year. The entries were good and if only a fair proportion come under the starters orders there will be no complaints as to the smallness of fields. The weather was all that could be desired, the attendance was large and the going fairly good.

DETAILS.

Smethwick Steeplechase:—1, Roman (2 to 1 on); 2, Warbine (7 to 1); 3, Suzanne the Third (3—1). Three ran.

Aston Steeplechase:—1, Bell Toll (2 to 1); 2, Jefferies (10 to 1); 3, Michelino (7—1). Seven ran.

Stetchford Hurdle:—1, A Double Escape (11 to 10 on); 2, Gamelyn (6 to 5); 3, Willing (10 to 1). Three ran.

Sutton Hurdle:—1, Hollins Lane (11 to 8); 2, Saxham Prince (7 to 1); 3, Topsy's Baby (7 to 1). Twelve ran.

Three-year-old hurdle: 1, Ulliskelf (5 to 1); 2, Montdidier (5 to 4 on); 3, Eothen (7 to 1). Twelve ran.

Coleshill Chase:—1, The Bore (11 to 4 on); 2, Tom Faggus (10 to 1); 3, Prince Clifton (4 to 1). Four ran.

RACING RULES.

Running Horses Under Assumed Names now Illegal.

A largely attended meeting of the Jockey Club on Monday approved the alteration of rule four of the Rules of Racing, the effect of which is abolished. Welter flat races — rule ninety three was also amended and henceforth no owner will be able to use an assumed name for entering or running horses. Any horse entered under an assumed name will be disqualified. Proposed alteration of other rules was postponed for re-drafting.

"POWERFUL" DECISION.

Tattersall's Committee have decided that the backers of Powerful, who was disqualified after winning the Rothschild plate at Manchester, will pay, and the backers of Enniskeen, who was awarded the race, receive.

CALAIS SWEEPSTAKE.

Prizes won by Ticket Sellers over November Handicap.

A unique feature of the Calais sweepstakes (which provided £9,775 in all in prize money) was the giving of prizes to sellers of tickets, the first being £400, the second £200, the third £100, with 21 accepted horses at £25 each, and 20 special prizes of £25 each.

Northern District.—12th R.G.A. v. 1st Norfolks; 1st Dorset Regt. v. 52nd Sherwood Foresters.

RUGBY 'NATIONAL.

The following represent England against the North in the first International Rugby trial at Liverpool on December:—

Evan Thomas, United Services; C. N. Lowe, Blackheath; L. Corbett, Bristol; H. Locke, Birkenhead; W. N. Lowrie, Birkenhead, H. Kershaw, United Services; W. J. Davies United Services; Major H. C. Harrison, United Services; L. B. Merriman, Blackheath; T. Voyce, Gloucester; Captain W. Wakefield, Harlequins; S. Smart, Gloucester; W. H. Wright, Plymouth; L. Holford, Gloucester and C. Edwards, Naval Depot, Devonport.

DRUMS BEAT DRUMS.

51st R.W.R. Drums v. 52nd R.W.R. Drums.

An excellent game between these two teams was played on the 51st's ground at Mulheim. Immediately after the start the 51st pressed hard and scored through Cornally. The game was fiercely contested for a while until the 52nd broke away and scored. Following this the 52nd forced four corners in quick succession. They then made a run through and a misunderstanding by the 51st defence enabled them to notch a second goal. The 51st pulled together after this and scored a second goal just on half time which arrived with the score at 2—2. The second half was fought in ding-dong fashion the 52nd just managing to secure a further goal. The end came with the score — 52nd. 3. 51st. 2.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

"D" Company Concert.

Judging by the reception of each item and the comments heard afterwards, the first "D" Company Concert 52nd Battalion The Durham Light Infantry held at Y.M.C.A. last Friday night, was a huge success. Assisted by the Regimental Band and four civilians, the programme was full of delight from beginning to end.

The Band, under Bandmaster Etherington, commenced with two selections, one of which—"Shamrock"—was received with much applause and cheers. Though only composed of young soldiers the Band is to be much congratulated upon the high state of efficiency they have attained. "The Singer Was Irish" sung by Pte. Moon, brought forth considerable applause.

The "star" of the evening however, was Mr. Chilcott, who, with his bright and breezy songs kept them in a continuous state of laughter and merriment. Mr. Marshall Howlett, in his reproduction of "The man who downed tools seven years ago" was encored and replied with a succession of short stories calculated to make even the most morose of men burst into tears of laughter. Two songs were also sung by Boy Etherington, "Indiana" and "Cosy Corner," and these, too, were well received.

* * *

One could have heard a pin drop when "Where my caravan has rested" was sung by Mr. Jas. Compton, who gave as an encore "Sometimes."

The tasteful manner in which he rendered these two songs evidently impressed his audience and proved once again the fallacy of the saying that "anything is good enough for Tommy."

After another selection by the Band "To-night's the night," Capt. Kirton, O.C. "D" Company, proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the hosts, and to the artistes, and made an appeal for the display of more local talent. We feel sure his appeal was not made in vain for after the Concert it was the earnest hope of all present that the time would not be long forthcoming when we should again be favoured with another enjoyable evening. The "Regimental March" and "The King" concluded the programme.

Audrey Esmond at the Piano.

The Palace theatre, Cologne, contained a large and very enthusiastic audience last evening, when the Audrey Esmond party of entertainers reappeared in the city to commence a week's engagement. Each member of the party was encored time after time, and the concerted numbers "fetched" the house invariably. Our sketch shows Miss Eva Evelda, the lady violinist with the locks, whose merry performances always create a furore. Her imitation of the bagpipes, yesterday, was truly wonderful. All who enjoy a good, well-assorted variety programme should wend their way to the Herzogstrasse house one evening during the week.

Miss Decima Moore with B.R.A.D.C.

Next week the B.R.A.D.C. will produce "Lady Frederick," a comedy in three acts, by Somerset Maugham. The caste will include Miss Decima Moore, C.B.E., as Lady Frederick in which part she scored such a brilliant success when the play was produced in London. JACQUES.

13th HUSSARS' TOURNAMENT.

"C" Squadron Win Competition at Aldershot.

The 13th Hussars brought a two-days' tournament to a successful finish at the Riding School, Warburg Barracks, Aldershot, when the inter-squadron competition, consisting of three-round bouts in six weights, was won by "C" Squadron with 31 points. "B" Squadron had 28 points, and "A" Squadron 23. The star bout of the evening was a six-round contest between C-S-M Evans, A.G.S., and ex-Seaman Hayes, of which Evans was given the verdict on points. Details:—

9st NOVICES' COMPETITION (Open to Aldershot Command).

Semi-final: C-Q-M-S Marra (1st R.F.) beat Pte. Jenkins (1st R.F.) on points after a good bout; Pte. Nolan (2nd R. Dub. F.) beat Pte. Allen (1st Lancs F.) on points. Final: Marra beat Nolan on points in a keenly-contested bout.

INTER-SQUADRON COMPETITIONS.

8st:—Boy Ward (C) beat Pte. Hartley (B) on points in an excellent bout.

8st 7lb:—Pte. Brown (A) beat Pte. Pitts (C) halfway through the second round.

9st—Pte. King (A) knocked out Pte. Pte. Gamble (C) with a right swing in the first round.

9st 7lb:—Pte. Argyle (A) beat Pte. Kennedy (B) on points.

10st:—Lce.-Cpl. Pearson (B) beat Pte. Ashton (C) on points.

10st 7lb:—Pte. Berry (B) beat Pte. Bowman (C). the referee stopping the fight half way through the second round awarding the loser full points for his squadron for his plucky fight.

SIX ROUND CONTESTS.

Bantam-weights.—Lce.-Cpl. Wells (13th Hussars) drew with Pte. Yarwood (1st Manchester Regt).

Feather weights.—C-S-M Evans (A.G.S.) beat ex-Seaman Hayes on points.

Light-weights.—Sgt. Burke (2nd R. Dub.) beat Lce.-Cpl. Stocker (M.G.C.) on points.

S. A. CRICKET.

Australians' Easy Victory Over Transvaal.

A Johannesburg message states that the Australian Imperial Forces Cricket Team defeated the Transvaal eleven by an innings and fourteen runs. The home eleven batted first and were dismissed for 165, Stirling taking five wickets for twenty-nine runs. The Australians compiled 352, Gregory 73, Pellow 61.

In the second innings Transvaal hit up 173, Zulch reaching 95. Docker took five for twenty.

TRY YOUR SKILL.

An Opportunity For Football Prophets To Win Prizes.

Last Saturday's football surprises have proved to be effective stumbling blocks to competitors in No. 9 Contest. As far as the adjudication goes up to the time of going to press, but few competitors have succeeded in forecasting correctly even four results.

The last six matches indicated on the coupon appear to have presented the greatest difficulties, and only very occasionally has our competition staff brought to light even one of the half-dozen rightly predicted.

It is impossible at the present stage to say to what degree of success one of our entrants may have attained in his prophesies, however, but the highest achievements will be revealed by this evening, and the result will be published in "The Cologne Post" of to-morrow.

In the coupon printed below, strike out the team you think will lose, or, if you predict a draw, leave both teams standing, add your name and address clearly, place the coupon in an envelope with one mark and send it along to this office. Any number of coupons may be sent at the rate of one mark each.

Coupons must be addressed:—

FOOTBALL CONTEST No. 10,
"Cologne Post",
A.P.O. S./40 Rhine Army.

List of Rules.

1. All forecasts must be made on coupons from this journal.
2. Any alteration or mutilation of the coupon will disqualify the effort.
3. If any match or matches on the coupon should be abandoned or full time is not played for any reason, such match or matches will not be taken into consideration in the adjudication.
4. In the event of ties, the prize will be divided.
5. No correspondence may be enclosed with the coupons, and none will be entered into. Neither will interviews be granted.
6. The Editor reserves the right to disqualify any coupon for what, in his opinion, is good and sufficient reason, and it is a distinct condition of entry that the Editor's decision shall be accepted as finally and legally binding in all matters concerning this competition.
7. Any entries received after Friday will be disqualified. No responsibility can be undertaken for any effort, or efforts, lost, mislaid or delayed. Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery.
8. Competitors may send in any number of coupons but one mark must be sent with each coupon.
9. Members of the staff of the "Cologne Post" are debarred from entering this competition.

FOOTBALL COMPETITION No. 10.

Date of matches, Saturday, Nov. 29th.
Closing date, Friday, Nov. 28th.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Victory Ribbon.
Yesterday I came across a French civilian wearing a small rolled piece of the Victory ribbon in his buttonhole. It looked very neat.

Take Heed.
I learn that many civilian barbers are following the fashion of shaving the neck after cutting one's hair. This is a thing to be avoided as it removes the fine hair which protects the neck and in many cases boils are the result.

A Postman's Hat.
A postman I met the other day was wearing attached to his hat at the back, a broad strip of leather, this forming a splendid protection for his neck from rain or cold.

Notepaper.
Many civilians I know are complaining about the high prices ruling for notepaper. I wonder how sweethearts manage their correspondence these days in Rhineland.

Some Forecasts.
Out of the first two hundred coupons marked by our competition staff in the competition now being adjudicated, no less than seventeen entrants failed to forecast one result correctly.

Pre-Occupation.
A party of officers in the N.A.C.B. Club the other night introduced a new game. They commenced playing about 8 o'clock and, thereafter, peals of merriment emanated from their table. So engrossed, indeed, did the players become that dinner was completely forgotten, and it had turned eleven when they first thought of calling for liquid refreshment!

An Odd Sight.
Rather a novel sight was to be seen in Neumarkt late last evening. Two Tommies seated on the box of a carriage and pair were driving along at a smart pace. Many onlookers wondered what they were doing on a civilian equipage.

British Once.
Quite a number of ex-British horses are now being employed by Cologne cabmen. The price of a good animal now is 10,000 marks as compared with 700 in pre-war days, one of the silk-hatted gentlemen informed me.

Finis.
What a pity the smart little magazine of the 3rd Battalion Machine Gun Corps has had to cease through the disappearance of that unit. I have just seen the last number, which I think surpasses all its five predecessors.

THE NEW SERGEANT-MAJOR.

"Opportunity makes the Man."

VI Corps Club.
It is not usually known that the VI Corps Club have a small quiet room for reading and writing, where the fair sex are not admitted. At the Club this afternoon, there is the weekly orchestral concert.

Why is it?
Why is it that Germans as a general rule prefer Britishers to be billeted on them rather than German civilians?

A Mystery.
I know an officer whose wife was to have arrived from England a week ago. He got permission to go to Ostend to meet her, waited two days; but as no wifey appeared he returned dejectedly to Cologne. He has been up in the small hours in the morning since to meet the train, but still she doesn't materialise. He has had no explanatory letters or wires, and is almost distracted.

Abandoned.
Quite a number of English ladies are to be seen at the Opera these days without their armlets. This leads to confusion sometimes.

Dressy.
I didn't know that "other ranks" were allowed to sport leather leggings and yellow doeskin gloves; yet I see such adornments occasionally.

To Mothers and Others.
A series of morning lectures and discussions on "Methods with Children" will be given during the winter months, in the Loreley Hall of the Cologne Central Y. M. C. A. under the auspices of the Cologne Day School for British children.

New "Army of Oc."
A number of officers, not anxious to be demobilized, were overheard the other day discussing the possibilities of starting an "Army of Oc" on their own account. They allowed fancy to run quite free. Army headquarters, it was suggested should be in a popular cabaret, with office hours from 10.45 a.m. to 11 a.m.

Tea and Toast.
A French lady, who has for many years lived in England, is arranging shortly to open a cosy little tea room in Cologne where she will make a speciality of strong tea and hot buttered toast. This ought to be extremely popular.

The New "Gunner."
The other day a letter was published about the "Gunner" — the RA's own magazine and the price was given as 2d. But that figure applies no more. In its enlarged form it will cost 9d. a month or 9s a year, and subscriptions should be sent to The Manager, 1, Middle Temple Lane. E.C.

RHINELANDER.

OPINIONS OF THE MOMENT.

OUR LACK OF IMAGINATION.

Mr. Stanley Jast, deputy chief librarian of Manchester, says that a nation is what it thinks. The most pronounced optimist cannot be satisfied with the present state of the national imagination. This impoverishment of the imagination is to be ascribed to the pressure of material things, which tend to submerge us in a struggle to satisfy mere bodily needs. A man whose outlook has not been widened by the study of the literature of any subject, but has been formed on the leading article of his favourite newspaper and the more or less inaccurate or one-sided statements which it contained, is never likely to be the best citizen or the best practiser of the art of living, that most difficult of all the arts.

PEACE WITH RUSSIA?

Col. John Ward M.P., in a speech at the Savoy Hotel dealt with the Russian question and said:—I wonder whether it is possible to make peace in Russia? I think a trial should be made. I am not against that by any means. Russia is so important to the rest of the world, and especially to the British Empire, that we should save her if we possibly can. Believe me, whether we like it or not, we can sign as many Parisian Treaties as we like, but there will be no peace in the world until we have secured internal order within the late Czar's dominions. You cannot allow 180,000,000 of people to be the prey of our recent enemies.

SPIRITUALISM.

Bishop Welldon, Dean of Durham speaking on spiritualism, says it is in itself not irreligious or unchristian. The enemy of religion and Christianity is not Spiritualism. It was materialism. If to live after death is but a dream, then indeed is religion a folly; but if the spirit of man survives the experience which is called death, if it does not die but enters upon a new life, then at least it is possible, that the spirit may in certain circumstances manifest itself to human eyes and the spirit may communicate by some means or other to living spirits upon the earth.

THE HABIT OF SONG.

Dr. Walter Carroll, the well-known musical authority insists on the absence of a singing tradition in England. It is a disagreeable fact, but it is a fact. That we have no substantial people's tradition of song was never proved more conclusively than during the war, when our soldiers were reduced to singing such songs as "Are we downhearted?" to hymn-tunes. We have a certain tradition of hymn-singing and a certain tradition of military bands. We have, too, the increasing popularity of the domestic piano. Yet there is a passionate love of music and an extraordinarily intelligent appreciation of it when given properly. I have heard a difficult Bach Sonata movement applauded to the echo in camps by an audience of soldiers, whom some people might deem ignorant.

VANITY FAIR.

A Feature for the British Woman in Rhineland.

Freakish.
Silk stockings, so thin that on the leg they look like the skin itself, are worn with dainty little strapped shoes in bronze kid, grey kid, or black shiny kid with heels very high and toes very short. No fantasy is denied the feminine mind in dress to-day, but all that is sensible, moderate, and what our grandmothers would have called graceful is out of date. With her short skirts tightened in just below the knees, her fur coat spreading into volume round the hips and her high, tight fur collar and small toque or enormous hat waving with the wildest of feathers or fur, the woman of to-day is certainly freakish to look at. and, if one may attach a moral to Fashion's tale, ready rather for pleasure than for work.

In Deerskin and Patent.
Gloves are an important item of the wardrobe. Among those for wear with tailor-mades are gauntlets in two colours of soft leather or of a combination of kid and patent leathers. Grey kid with a design applied in black patent, black kid with the gusset and hem of the gauntlet in white, grey doeskin with rose suede, brown deerskin with appliques of leather in the fashionable rust colour—these are some of the costly additions to the already expensive tailor-made.

Few Millinery Novelties.
Few real novelties have been launched lately. There are, of course, the new dyed kid hats. These are dyed in various fashionable colours, jade and rose pink and a deep regal purple being the most popular where the brighter colours are concerned. Browns, greens, buffs, and greys are also used, and show the pretty plaque designs in tinsel thread, which covers the crowns of these models, to advantage.

Still Popular.
Bead chains are so decorative that it is no wonder they are still as popular as ever. Worn on a simple gown they give just the right ornamental touch and permit vivid notes of colour to be introduced. They are of all lengths, some even reaching to the knees, and all sorts of quaint old-fashioned ornaments are used as pendants.

Many Straps.
The new footwear for dress occasions has a strap fastening, often indeed there are straps on the instep and also round the ankle. The newest idea is to have a large cameo instead of the fancy buckle that has had such a vogue.

Coal Scuttle Hats.
Coal scuttle hats, after the modes of the days of our great grandmothers, have been revived this winter, and very becoming they are, espicially to the insouciant prettiness of youth. Made in black millinery panne, one of these hats, with a high crown and much-curved brim, was very simply trimmed with a short drooping powder blue ostrich feather, and the effect was entirely successful.

AGNES.

ECONOMIC NOTES ON FINANCE AND TRADE.

IV. THE BANK ACT.

The Bank was, as previously stated, the only Joint Stock bank allowed to issue notes in England and even private banks which could issue notes in the country could not do so in London. This Bank issue was limited in its Charter as follows. Notes to the value of £14,000,000 could be issued with the backing of only Government securities. When a country bank issue lapsed the Bank could take over an amount equal to 2/3 of the lapsed bank's issue and add it to the Government Security issue. By this means the original £14,000,000 became raised to £18,500,000 at which figure it is now. This issue resting on the good faith of the Government is known as the Fiduciary Issue. Over and above this for every note issued an equal sum of metal coin had to be deposited in the Bank and reserved specially as a backing for these notes. That was all contained in the original Charter.

* * *

The Act of 1844 on which the Bank's business is now based was brought about by a series of events which are very interesting to note. In 1797 the effect of the Wars of Napoleon caused the Bank to suspend cash payments and issue £1 notes for the first time in English History. This issue however was only very small and by 1810 it was only some £19,000,000. In 1824 Spanish South America had been opened up to British Trade and some £150,000,000 was invested there by English traders. In 1825 prices had risen to such a height that when the inevitable reaction took place something like 50 country banks went smash. All these banks had note issues and the losses were tremendous. To restore confidence the Government passed an Act in 1826 forbidding the issue of notes of less than the value of £5 except in Scotland. In 1833 the Bank's Charter was renewed and it was definitely stated for the first time that Joint Stock banks could open in London for ordinary banking business providing they didn't issue notes.

* * *

These were briefly the immediate causes of the introduction of the Bank Act. Its main provisions were:—

(a) The Bank was to have two separate departments, each of which should have a distinct and separate existence — one for Banking and one for Issue.

(b) The Issue Dept. should only deal with the public through the Banking Dept. but the Issue Dept. was responsible that after the Fiduciary Issue had all gone the correct amount of coin was handed over by the Banking Dept.

(c) There were to be no more banks allowed to issue notes and the ones already existing were to be very limited. Bankers having the right who ceased to use it — lost it for ever. A licence was also made compulsory.

(d) Any person could take gold to the Bank and demand notes for it at £3.17.9d per oz.

(e) A weekly return — with which I shall deal later — had to be published.

There has been endless controversy over this Act. It is rather peculiar that the usual way of averting a crisis in the City is to suspend the Act and allow the Bank to issue notes without a backing.

FROM EVERYWHERE.

Tailor's Toll.—In Vienna £166 has been given for a suit of clothes.

Wedding Freak.—Dolls were carried by child trainbearers at a Croydon wedding.

Stops Building.—Some building materials cost ten times their pre-war prices to-day.

Spain's Babies.—Queen Ena is to start centres for infant welfare in Spain.

Jumping Silver.—Silver is now worth 6s. 2d. an ounce.

Strike Talk.—Panel doctors, dissatisfied with the present capitation fee, may strike.

Fatal Dance.—After a fire at a dance in Lousiana twenty bodies were recovered.

No Strength.—President Wilson still continues in a weak condition.

Belgian Crisis.—A new Cabinet is to be formed in Belgium by M. de la Croix.

New Force.—San Francisco now possesses an Air Police.

Rabies?—Another case of dog madness is being investigated in Bucks.

Cotton Fortunes.—Industrial Lancashire is changing hands. Many huge fortunes are being made in the process.

Useless Dole.—Dr. Addison's policy of £150 a house to builders, is generally felt to be a confession of failure.

Mining Again.—After being flooded for twelve years, Park Slip colliery has reopened.

Strike Goes On.—Many works in the Black Country are at a standstill owing to the continuance of the moulders' strike.

To Help Comrades.—The Scots Guards Association is taking up the question of training ex-service men.

Huge Deficit.—The Y.M.C.A. is faced with a deficit of over £600,000 in consequence of war work.

For Christmas Puddings. — There are 50,000 tons of dried fruits in England just now.

Dear to Live.—Paris house agents say no flats are to be had in the gay capital under £240 a year.

Doesn't Worry.—Mr. "Pussyfoot" Johnson is quite cheery and philosophic over the loss of his eye.

Still Plays.—Mr. G. F. Dent, organist of St. Georges, Bloomsbury, lost his right arm in the war.

Land Girls Sup.—Princess Mary is to have supper with the Land girls on Thursday at Drapers Hall in the City.

"I Shall Win!"—Sir Thomas Lipton says—"I think I shall win the America Cup this time!"

No Talking.—A silent banquet was held in London the other day. All those present were stone deaf.

Scarce Boxes.—There is a great difficulty in getting boxes for the Christmas present trade.

Ocean Giants.—Southampton is to be the base for the five largest steamers in the world, totalling 290,000 tons.

No Nonsense!—Unless recognised by Dec. 21st, members of the Irish Bank Clerks' Association threaten to cease work.

To Escape Liabilities.—Germany is said to be urged by the big capitalists to go bankrupt.

Fewer Hats.—Men's headwear is growing scarce in England through lack of skilled trimmers.

Mystery Man.—A nocturnal prowler in the Hampstead district is causing alarm to women folk.

Is He Right?—Lord Haldane declares that Bolshevism cannot be put down by force.

Where?—In one week half the lifebuoys on the Thames Embankment disappeared.

Sea-Dog's Title.—Sir Rosslyn Wemyss has taken the title of Baron Wester Wemyss of Wemyss in the County of Fife.

Try This.—Trying to tell the Willesden magistrate yesterday that he was "bitten by a wicked, wild, white, wire-haired terrier" a witness got into a tangle.

In Pursuit.—The police are searching for William Turner who absconded from bail. He is charged with attempted murder by shooting.

Another Mystery.—The dead body of an ex-captain in the 9th Tank Corps has been found in a King's Cross Tunnel. The cause of death is a mystery.

Winter Sport.—Society is gathering in Switzerland for the famous winter sports which promise to eclipse their pre-war popularity.

Resurrection.—Lost to sight for 25 years at the mouth of the Tyne, the wreck of the Russian barque, Runik, has suddenly re-appeared.

Royal Preference.—The Prince of Wales danced six times with Miss Millicent Rogers, daughter of an oil King, at Mr. Whitelaw Reid's ball.

On Pilgrimage.—General Sir C.E. Pereira and General Sir W. Hickie accompanied the recent pilgrimage of Allied soldiers and civilians to Lourdes.

Early Death.—Sir Guy Laking, the King's Armourer, and one of the greatest authorities on antiquities has died at the early age of forty-four.

Pigs Pay.—A co-operative pig-breeding company started during the war has not only returned all its capital, but 47½ per cent interest as well.

'Phoned Goodbye.—A Shepherd's Bush woman told her husband by 'phone that she was about to commit suicide, and then did so.

Useless Now.—H.M. Cruiser "Calliope" has been so badly damaged by fire in the English Channel that she will he paid off.

COURT MARTIAL PROCEDURE.

IMPORTANT CHANGES RECOMMENDED BY GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE.

CURZON ON BRITISH POLICY IN EGYPT.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

PROPOSED ALTERATIONS IN PRESENT SYSTEM.

In April last the Army Council constituted a Committee, with Mr. Justice Darling as Chairman, to inquire into the law, rules and procedure regulating military courts-martial both in peace and war. The Committee has just issued its report. It recommends that Regimental Courts-martial be abolished. The results of its investigations led the Committee to the conclusion that though the work of Courts-martial during the war had been well done and the rank and file have confidence in their fairness, nevertheless the existing Courts-martial system in certain points is capable of improvement. The Code of Military Law could be embodied in a Charter in a shorter and clearer form which officers and soldiers would more readily understand.

The re-drafting of the whole code is accordingly recommended, also that the manual of military law should be re-arranged and condensed. The Army, Royal Air Force and similar large formations should have qualified legal advisers available for general legal work as well as for Courts-martial. Legal advisers should be barristers or solicitors with some experience of military discipline and administration and should hold the King's Commission so as to render them amenable to military law. Courts-martial should be manned by officers thoroughly in touch with regimental discipline and life, but it is recognised that different considerations may perhaps apply in Case Law. A higher standard of legal training is desirable on the part of officers acting as presidents of Courts-martial, and inducements should be held out to officers to acquire an adequate knowledge of law by the holding of special courses with a passing out examination.

A separate report, signed by Mr. Horatio Bottomley, Major Lowther and Mr. Stephen Walsh differed in some respects from the majority report. They expressed the opinion that District, as well as Regimental Courts-martial, should be abolished, and urged that no man, by joining the Army, should forfeit the right to appeal for his life to a competent judicial tribunal.

OUR COLLEAGUE.

JOURNALISTIC VENTURE IN THE CAUCASUS.

Mr. Scotland Liddell who represented the British Press in Mesopotamia writes from Tiflis: "Local journalism in the Caucasus has its thrills. Some day I hope to write of my adventures in the columns of the Press here. During the summer months I published daily a sheet in English in this town in an endeavour to keep our men in touch with the outer world. Of course I was well watched. If I wrote of a success of Denikin's Army, the workmen's newspapers called me Denikin's spy. If I wrote favourably of Georgia or Azarbayan, Armenian papers called me Armenophobe. If I mentioned that Trotzky and his fellow murderers were Jews I was accused of being anti-Semitic and on one occasion I had a Bolshevist paper (long since defunct) calling me a 'Dashnak in a skirt'. 'Skirt' was apparently the outcome of my nationality and the presence of the Cameron Highlanders in the town, while 'Dashnak' implied that I was a member of the Dashnakzutun, an Armenian political society."

SOVIET NEGOTIATIONS.

The negotiations between Mr. J. O'Grady, M. P. and Litvinoff concerning exchange of British and Russian prisoners, began at Copenhagen on Tuesday afternoon. Mr. O'Grady expected the discussion would occupy about eight days. The first sitting lasted for several hours and it was then announced that the sittings would not be resumed for a few days, both sides finding it necessary to refer to their Governments.

PROGRESS OF REPATRIATION.

The War Office states that 77,279 German prisoners of war have now been repatriated from the United Kingdom. Of this number 35,693 were sent home in German ships. The total number of prisoners repatriated by Great Britain up to November 19th is as follows: Germans, 266,710; Austrians, 298; Turks, 27,369; Bulgarians 1,281.

SERBIAN TROOPS FOR RUSSIA.

Two Serbian regiments, says Reuter, will shortly be embarked at Salonika and despatched to South Russia to fight the Bolshevists.

The Siberian Government has resigned and M. Pepelauff, Minister of the Interior has been charged to form a Cabinet.

POLICY IN EGYPT.

OBJECTS OF THE MILNER MISSION.

A comprehensive statement on the situation in Egypt was made yesterday in the House of Lords by Lord Curzon. He said the present unrest was fundamentally due to economic causes, especially the high cost of living, but this unrest has been exploited for political purposes, foreign Socialists taking no small part in fomenting the existing discontent.

The Government had done its utmost to remove the legitimate grievances of the workers by securing substantial ameliorations in the conditions of labour. The Nationalists, however, were constantly expecting to receive and manoeuvring to gain the sympathy of one or other of the great powers. Of these both France and the United States had already recognised the British protectorate, and Italy had promised to acknowledge it. Recognition of the Protectorate is part of the Peace Treaty with Germany, and is confirmed by all the signatories to that Treaty.

Referring to the Milner Mission, Lord Curzon emphasised the fact that one of its objects related to the progressive development of self-governing institutions. That object had been deliberately ignored by agitators, although it formed the keynote of the policy the mission was to hold in view. At the time when the British Protectorate was declared, annexation was strongly advocated, but was wisely rejected, because only a Protectorate would afford free scope for the political aspiration, and self-governing capacities of the Egyptian people. The object of the Milner Commission is to devise a Constitution which will provide for an increasing co-operation of Egyptians in the management of Egyptian affairs, though British assistance and guidance will still be required. In the forming of this Constitution all parties will be consulted. The Mission should therefore be welcomed by all friends of Egyptian nationality and progress.

Whatever form the Peace with Turkey may take, it can make no difference to a solution of the Egyptian problem. Political connection with Turkey is at an end. It is not to Turkey that Egypt must look for fulfilment of her aspirations Recognition of the British Protectorate in Egypt will be an inseparable feature of the Turkish Treaty. The recent disorders, whatever their origin, impose on the Egyptian and British authorities the primary duty of enforcing law and order, and of punishing outrage and crime, but they will not deter us from pursuing the path mapped out by our duty, both to the Egyptians, and to ourselves. Moderate opinion in Egypt should therefore support us in our task.

U.S. LOANS TO ALLIES.

PAYMENT OF INTEREST DEFERRED.

United States Treasury officials confirm Mr. Austen Chamberlain's announcement that a plan is being negotiated by which the payment of interest on loans made by the United States to the Allies will be deferred for some years.

America's loans to her war associates aggregate 9,647 million dollars.

TAXING ITALIAN FORTUNES.

The impending issue is announced from Rome of a National Five per cent. Loan issue at a price equivalent to 87,50.

Legislation will shortly be introduced into the Italian chamber enacting a progessive tax starting at ten and rising to sixty per cent. on war fortunes, also a progressive tax of twenty-five per cent. on inherited fortunes.

HONOURS FOR BRITISH GENERALS.

At an Anglo-French military tournament held at Boulogne on Tuesday the Military Governor of Boulogne, General Dieboulo, handed ribbons of the Commandership of the Legion of Honour to Lieutenant-General Sir John Asser G.O.C. France and Flanders and to General Wilberforce, commanding the military district of Boulogne.

LENIN ADVOCATES SURRENDER.

Private telegrams from Helsingfors have been received at Stockholm stating that Lenin openly declares that the Soviet's best course of action would be to surrender and then prepare a vigorous propaganda campaign by sending out agitators everywhere. Trotzky is reported as approving Lenin's views.

The threatened strike of Scottish Ironmoulders which was to have begun yesterday, has been cancelled.

A STRAIGHT TIP.

MENACE OF THE SITUATION IN EUROPE.

"Trust in God and keep your powder dry" was Cromwell's advice on a certain occasion. Mr. Winston Churchill gave somewhat the same counsel at a dinner given by Sir Howard France on behalf of the Directorate of Land to Government officials, prominent business and professional men.

In the course of some pertinent remarks on the present outlook, the War Secretary said: "People talk about the world-war as if somehow we had all been transported into a higher form. We have however, been transformed into a sphere which is definitely lower from almost every point of view than that which we attained in the days before Armageddon. Never was there a time when people were more disposed to turn to courses of violence, to show scant respect for law and order, to tradition and procedure, than at present. On the expanse of Europe an insidious and seething scene of misery has formed.

"Our most formidable antagonist has been overthrown. Government services had something to do with that, but instead of a higher organisation of European nations we established almost Balkanisation. These small nations may achieve the success which everyone wishes, but I do not see in the present state of Europe, in the great patchwork system which has sprung up all over Europe, any reason which may lead me to advise any young man to neglect, as if it were a wholly obsolete thing, study of the profession of arms."

MEN AND MISSIONS.

QUESTIONS IN PARLIAMENT.

Replying to a question in the House of Commons Mr. Winston Churchill gave the monthly cost of various British Military Missions as follows: Military Mission in South Russia, £44,000; Siberia, £13,000; Poland, £1,000; Baltic States (including Finland), £3,800.

Asked whether a statement was made on behalf of the War Office that no man under twenty years of age should be sent further than to the Army of the Rhine and whether nevertheless the War Office has been sending boys of eighteen and nineteen to Memel and Dantzig, Mr. Churchill said that no such undertaking had ever been given. "As I have already stated," he added, "no movements of troops have actually taken place."

JUTLAND DISPATCHES.

BEATTY REFUSES PUBLICATION.

Earl Beatty has refused, says the "Daily Telegraph," to allow publication of the official account of the Battle of Jutland, although Sir Eric Geddes, after the publication of Lord Jellicoe's book promised to publish the official report.

ROBEY'S EXTRA TURN.

During the performance of "Joy Bells" at the Hippodrome on Tuesday night George Robey addressed remarks to the audience on behalf of the 12,000 unemployed demobilized officers in London. In apologising for interrupting the performance, he said, he made the appeal at the request of the Ministry of Labour.

EX-SERVICE MUSICIANS.

By command of the King the British Symphony Orchestra gave a performance at Buckingham Palace on Tuesday afternoon. Invitations were issued to several hundred guests, who were afterwards entertained to tea by their Majesties. The hundred performers comprising the orchestra represent the Navy, Army and Air Force.

MAD POET'S PLANS.

According to information received in London from Rome, D'Annunzio may try another spectacular raid at Spalato, which would certainly provoke a conflict with the South Slavs. D'Annunzio's activities are being regarded with increasing disfavour in Italy.

A NEGLECTFUL JUDGE.

Judge Rentoul, who died recently, left £6,082, and like many other judges and great lawyers, says the "Star," he failed to draw up correctly his own will. He named no executor and he had made an alteration in the body of the will which was not attested.

THE "VATERLAND'S" FUTURE.

It is officially announced that the leviathan ex-German liner, "Vaterland," has been apportioned to the American line. It is proposed, as soon as she is reconditioned, to put her on the Southampton-New York service of the company.

AUSSIES TO BENEFIT.

Australians in the British Army are to receive fifty pounds for each year of war service in respect of the difference between Imperial and Australian rates of pay.

PRICE OF COAL.

SUSPICIOUS GENEROSITY OF DEALERS.

A letter signed "Perplexed" appeared in yesterday's "Times" on the subject of the reduction in the price of coal. The writer says:

"In common with many householders I am sorely mystified by the announcement of Sir Auckland Geddes that the price of coal is to be reduced by 10s per ton. The announcement is certainly a surprise, not unwelcome, to the public, but it is also a surprise to coal merchants (?).

"Last week my meagre supply of household coal was running low and I applied timidly to my coal merchant for one ton if he could not let me have more. Next morning I received one and a half tons and on Sunday the merchant sent me spontaneously a similar quantity—naturally at the present high price. The same day one of my friends suddenly received three tons from another merchant. Is there any connection between this singular open-handedness and Geddes' announcement? Or rather, has the Government secret, reserved for the House of Commons to-day, been allowed to leak out in advance for the benefit of the coal merchants?"

ATHENS PLOT.

CONSPIRACY TO MURDER GREEK PREMIER.

A widespread plot engineered by some of ex-King Constantine's retired officers has been discovered at Athens. The plans of the conspirators projected the murder of Venizelos and the overthrow of the existing regime. A number of arrests have been made and minute enquiries are proceeding. Full avowals have been obtained and the culprits will be court-martialled with the least possible delay. Public opinion is calm.

EX-KAISER'S TRIAL.

EVIDENCE ACCUMULATING.

The Allied and Associated Governments have collected a large amount of valuable evidence in support of the indictment for the trial of the ex-Kaiser. This evidence will be found, when the time comes, to be of a very far-reaching character.

It is expected that immediately the Peace Treaty is ratified Holland, will grant the application for the extradition of the ex-Kaiser, whose trial will begin early in the new year.

UNITED R.A.S.C. CLUB.

At a conference convened by Major-General Sir Evan Carter yesterday it was decided to call the new R.A.S.C. Club, "The United R.A.S.C. Club," membership to be open to officers of all branches of the Corps. The club will be located in the West End and one of its objects will be to obtain suitable posts for demobilized R.A.S.C. officers.

AMERICAN WHISKY FORBIDDEN FOR BLENDING.

The National Federation of Off-Licence Holders' Associations, in a circular issued to members, state that the Government has decided that the use of American whisky for blending purposes will not be permitted, and that all sellers, wholesale or retail, distributing such whisky must sell it with a label bearing a clear description that it is American.

BISMARCK'S MEMOIRS.

Von Bismarck's family have decided to start legal proceedings against the publishers of Bismarck's book, "Thoughts and Memories," because of the fact that in the third volume some letters of the ex-Kaiser Wilhelm have been published without their consent.

CHAIR MAKERS STRIKE OVER.

Terms have been agreed upon between the furniture manufacturers of High Wycombe and their employees. The dispute started some seventeen weeks ago, and resulted in 3,000 operatives being locked out. Work was resumed on Monday morning.

UNEMPLOYMENT PAY.

Sir Robert Horne introduced into the House of Commons yesterday the Unemployment Benefit Bill. This provides for the raising of the weekly unemployment benefit in trades scheduled under the National Insurance Act, from seven to eleven shillings.

WAZIRIS FULLY PERSUADED.

The Waziris have unreservedly accepted the British terms, the recent aerial operations having produced excellent results. The Mahsuds, however, are still obstinate and the bombing attacks are accordingly being continued.

The King received Sir Henry Wilson on Tuesday and handed him a Field Marshal's baton.

SUMMARY COURT.

COSTLY ABUSE AND CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

In the course of a disturbance between British soldiers and German civilians. Theodor Hahnenberg, merchant, of 26 Widdersdorferstrasse, intervened and used the expression "English swine." He was drunk at the time.

In imposing a fine of 300 marks or fourteen days the presiding officer said that had Hahnenberg been the aggressor he would have been sent to gaol for a long period. In future it was to be hoped he would mind his own business and not lose his head through drink.

There is no society in Germany on the lines of the British R.S.P.C.A.

This fact transpired during the hearing of a charge against Joseph Floth, a labourer, of 100 Rolshoverstrasse, Kalk, who was flogging an exhausted horse harnessed to a heavily laden four-wheeled wagon.

When remonstrated with by an M.P., he took no notice and for failing to obey an order he was sent to prison for seven days.

ITALIAN CRISIS.

SOCIALIST MENACE TO THE MONARCHY.

As the result of the sweeping victory of the Socialists at the elections, a grave crisis is feared in Italy, involving not only the Cabinet but the ruling house. The new Socialist elements, animated by revolutionary sentiments, favour a Maximalist policy, which inevitably leads to Bolshevism. This section almost certainly commands the party. It numbers 150 out of a total of 550 Deputies. Its leaders talk openly of provoking disorder at the opening of Parliament and preventing the King being heard, and some advocate going to the length of insulting or even attacking him.

It is contended in some quarters that such a demonstration would clear the air by rousing the mass of voters from their apathy, to which the Socialists directly owe their triumph. On the other hand it is suggested that the King should abdicate in favour of the Duke of Aosta, who is most popular owing to his brilliant leadership of the Third Army.

SIBERIAN REVOLT.

A message dated the 18th, from Reuter's correspondent at Pekin states that an extensive revolutionary movement at Vladivostock, in which Guida, the former Czech leader was implicated, was subdued by Allied representatives. The movement was supported by social revolutionaries. Guida recommended coming to an agreement with the Bolshevists, and the immediate formation of a Siberian constituent assembly. A similar movement on a smaller scale was suppressed at Irkutsk.

MESPOT. HOTEL DESTROYED.

The River Front hotel at Basra, which was opened last January for officers passing through Basra, was burnt out on the 14th. When the fire broke out the hotel was full of guests, officers, ladies, and children, but all escaped without harm.

(Basra is the chief port for Mesopotamia. It lies on the West bank of the Euphrates, about sixty miles from its mouth in the Persian Gulf.)

"LIVINGS" OR "STARVELINGS."

The Bishop of Salisbury, addressing a meeting at Wimborne, Dorset, where up to the present the Governors of the Minster have been unable to obtain a successor to the living, which is only worth £500 a year (out of which a curate has to be provided), said he was the patron of about seventy so-called "livings." He was afraid a certain proportion of them deserved better the name of "starvelings," and their filling up when they became vacant gave him more torturing anxiety than anything else connected with his work.

AUSTRALIAN FLIGHT.

The Blackburn "Kangaroo" aeroplane which is attempting to fly from England to Australia, descended at Romilly, about 100 kilometres East of Paris, where it awaits fine weather before proceeding. Captain Ross Smith, another of the competitors, reached Cairo on the 18th and left on the following day.

AMERICAN TRADE INCREASE.

Figures show that the foreign trade of the United States continues to increase. Exports amounted to 632 million dollars, an increase of 130 millions over October 1918, while imports totalled 416 millions, an increase of 169 millions.

SALVING THE VINDICTIVE.

Work is proceeding actively at Ostend with a view to the refloating of the Vindictive. From her present position she will be transferred to Estran, where she will be run aground, so as to permit the repairing of her hull.

The Serbian Government has authorised its delegation in Paris to sign the Austrian Peace Treaty.

GLUT OF MEAT.

GOVERNMENT POLICY CONDEMNED.

The British Society of Meat Importers, in a vigorous protest against the Government policy with regard to meat, gives some astonishing figures. It declares that the cold stores of the United Kingdom are blocked with over 100,000 tons of meat and that in consequence ships are unable to discharge further cargoes.

Shipments afloat and due to arrive within the next three months aggregate 150,000 tons. The present monthly consumption of imported meat is only 30,000 tons though the probable consumption after Christmas will be about 40,000 tons monthly. Stocks in Australia awaiting shipment amount to 150,000 tons. The consumption of meat has fallen in Great Britain (owing largely to high prices) from about 1,800,000 tons per annum before the war to about 1,200,000 tons during the current year, a reduction of thirty three per cent.

The country, says the protest, seems face to face with such a glut of meat as is has never before witnessed. This is brought about entirely by the reduction of consumption, resulting from high prices, which are artificially maintained under State control and are not the outcome of any present shortage or the likelihood of any future shortage.

HERTZOG AT HOME.

HIS FRUITFUL RECEPTION.

The Nationalists reception at Johannesburg to General Hertzog on his return from Europe evoked noisy counter-demonstrations. Hertzog, who motored from Pretoria, was welcomed on the outskirts of the city by a picturesque cavalcade of burghers, who escorted him and other prominent Nationalists to the City Hall. Their arrival at the platform erected in front of the Town Hall was signalised with booing and cheering by opponents and friends, the singing of the Transvaal "Volkslied" and the counter-singing of "God Save the King."

Excitement reached fever heat when an address was presented, but the noise and commotion prevented Hertzog's speech being heard except by those in his immediate vicinity. A strong force of police effectively stemmed a hostile rush, but during his processional drive to an hotel for lunch, tomatoes were thrown with great effect, adding vivid splashes of colour to the scene.

HAIG VISITS CLUB FOR EX-OFFICERS.

The practical interest in the welfare of all ranks taken by Field Marshal Earl Haig was further demonstrated on Monday evening when, accompanied by Countess Haig, he paid an informal visit to the Kitchener House Social and Educational Club for officers and ex-officers at Grosvenor Place, London.

Costly furnished for purposes of recreation and friendly intercourse, the Club, which was founded by the generosity of Messrs. Vickers, also provides classes of instruction for ex-officers in such subjects as are likely to be of assistance to them on their return to civil life. Courses, for which no fees are charged, include French, Spanish, Italian, Japanese, Hindustani, German, Arabic, Greek, Latin, Carpentry, Surveying and Building Construction. Attendances at these classes from October 1918 to October 1919 totalled no fewer than 5,768.

BIG LOSS ON BANANAS.

When the cargo of the Salamanca, which vessel brought 10,000 crates of Canary bananas to London, was examined it was found to be in an absolutely worthless condition. The loss of the fruit and the cost of freight and expenses will entail a deficit of at least £15,000, a sum that is not quickly made good by bananas sold retail at 1½d and 2d each. This is the present retail price for Canary bananas which have lost much of their former popularity.

PARK ALLOTMENTS.

In the opinion of the London County Council Parks Committee the number of persons directly benefited by allotments is too small to stand in the way of the enormously greater number who would be benefited by the restoration of the land to its original use. Further, any extension would mean that the ground now occupied by plot-holders could not be available for the general public before the early summer of 1923.

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.

The market opened yesterday with renewed activity, a fresh upward movement being checked by profit taking but sales were well absorbed. Business slackened during the day and then closed quietly, the undertone remaining good. Gilt-edged Securities weakened under the belief that the bulk of the forthcoming fifty millions of War Loan dividends will be re-invested in new capital issues. Home rails strengthened owing to the reduction in the price of coal Industrials generally hardened on the talk that the Board of Trade returns for the current month will make the best showing since the war. Silver rose to 76 pence. German marks ranged from 153 to 163 and Austrians crowns for 550 to 570.

A YEAR OF PEACE.

For a year we have been experiencing what is commonly known as peace and this is an opportune moment for a retrospective view, in order to discover how we have fared under this regime.

A resumé of the past twelve months can scarcely be said to be conducive to gratification, while the outlook for the immediate future is little more reassuring.

It is true that the world war has ceased, guns no more hurl forth their messengers of death, and men no longer grapple with each other in a life and death conflict on the Western Front, but despite this the position of Europe and of each individual country on the continent is little less precarious than it was in the days of battle.

Troubles of war have given place to troubles of peace, and we are far from experiencing that period of unequalled prosperity so freely prophesied as an outcome of the struggle.

Good, we were told, must inevitably come out of the evil, and the world would be a better place, as a result of having passed through the refining fire of Armaggedon. We can only hope that the good is yet to come.

Plain facts, as they face us at present, point to only one conclusion and that is that recovery from the upheaval will be a slow and tedious process during which each country will require careful and judicious nursing and guidance by its administrators.

While the wound has healed to all outward appearances, there still remains traces of septic in the system, which time, coupled with correct treatment, can only remove.

The economic conditions of the continent provide thought for serious reflection and grave consideration; they are even worse than they were a year ago. While the war was on there was an incentive to overcome difficulty and now that has been followed by reaction bringing lassitude, which threatens the very vitals of international life.

There is a universal lack of fuel and transport which is rapidly resulting in a shortage of food. Railways are defective and inefficient, while the financial situation is acute in the extreme. In Great Britain, too, there is far too much unemployment, carrying with it a train of misery and suffering.

To what does all this point? Is it not that no country can prosper or suffer independently? Paralysis for one will eventually mean paralysis for all. The fact that the nations of Europe are interdependent, and the necessity for co-operation, have been lost sight of.

This leaning towards the doctrine of self-sufficiency can only lead to international financial deadlock and bankruptcy, with disastrous consequences for all.

SOME ASPECTS OF BRITISH CIVIL AVIATION.

By Major General Sir FREDERICK H. SYKES, G.B.E., K.C.B., C.M.G.
(Controller General of Civil Aviation.)

The situation of Great Britain, from the standpoint of civil aviation, is, geographically, unique. The sea is but one hour's flight from the heart of England, the variability of the weather is notorious, and the great commercial centres are already closely linked by excellent railway services. Instead of being a large continent like America where the scope for aerial travel and commerce is exceptional, the hand of nature has limited our horizon. As a nation, therefore, we are forced to look beyond the seas, and as the capabilities of aircraft develop, we hope to organise air communication on a world-wide scale by taking advantage of the existence of British possessions for establishing depots, refuelling bases and meteorological and wireless stations in every part of the world.

Those associated with aircraft development in Britain are obliged by circumstances to take a long view and to aim further ahead than those of other countries.

The national tendency is to allow individual enterprise to work out its own salvation in the main and no scheme of Government subsidies such as that in France has so far been adopted.

THE NEW SPIRIT.

The Civil Aviation Department, which is one of the three main branches of the Air Ministry, is under the direction of a Controller General, and forms an entirely new departure in Government departments. The whole conception and spirit of the Department is not merely regulative or restrictive, but is essentially to foster progress.

Briefly its purpose is to advise the Aircraft Industry and render it all assistance possible, to open international relations, to lay down internal and oversea air routes, to establish stations for landings and departures, to deal with all meteorological matters, and to provide information on that subject as well as on aerial navigation, communications and hosts of other matters.

The London—Paris route has already been placed on an organised basis. Wireless stations have been erected at Hounslow and Lympne and wireless communication effected with the French, in addition to which the route has been surveyed and a strip map prepared together with "Flying directions" containing information as to aerodromes, landing grounds, wireless and meteorological data. Preparations have been made for the lighting of aerodromes on this route to permit of night services. It is hoped that other main routes may be organised in a similar manner.

The Meteorological Branch now undertakes the entire official weather investigation and forecasting service of Great Britain. It supplies forecasts for all Government Services and for public information. As befits its importance to the imperial development of aviation, it has far reaching aims, and in conjunction with colonial and foreign meteorological services it is preparing plans for linking up the world with an ubiquitous system of weather research and reporting stations, the whole equipped with wireless intercommunication.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE.

Turning to actual flying achievements, British aviation has hince the signing of the armistice not less than during the war, established a creditable record, considering the many difficulties of the transition from war to peace.

The following approximate figures which have been supplied voluntarily by certain firms are interesting as showing the flying carried out. Compared with the corresponding mileage covered in the early days of motoring, the number of accidents must be regarded as very small.

Number of hours flown	4,000
Number of flights	21,000
Number of passengers	52,000
Approximate mileage	303,000
Total number of accidents	13
Number of fatal accidents	2

	Numbers Total	Per 1000 Flights.	Per 1000 hours flown
Pilots killed	2	.095	.5
Pilots injured	6	.286	1.5
Passengers killed	Nil	Nil	Nil
Passengers injured	10	.487	2.5

Percentage of passengers injured to those carried, .019; in other words for every 5,200 passengers carried only one has been injured.

It will be noted that the large majority of the flights were of short duration, and, indeed, much of the work during the period under review has been of an educative character. At the same time as the greater number of accidents occur in getting off and landing, the number of accidents per one thousand flights is a truer guide than that for one thousand hours flown. The figures would seem to establish the fact that firms are intent on securing the safety of the public and also that the Regulations in force are suitably designed to attain that object.

PLANS FOR THE FUTURE.

It is noteworthy that Great Britain has been the first country to establish regular air communication outside her borders.

The International Air Convention, first conceived in Britain and in the main based on the Air Navigation Regulation drawn up for the control of civil flying at home, has now been assented to by all the Allied and associated powers excepting U.S.A. and Japan, but in anticipation of formal assent, provisional agreements permitting flying between the countries, parties thereto had been entered into between Great Britain and various continental countries.

A daily service has been in operation between London and Paris for some weeks, and more recently a service has been inaugurated between London and Brussels. In addition, the conclusion of these provisional agreements enabled aircraft of private enterprise to visit Amsterdam, Brussels, Christiania, Copenhagen, Lausanne, Madrid, Paris and Stockholm and a demonstration flight for civil purposes by R.A.F. aircraft was pushed as far as Helsingfors.

Much pioneer work has been undertaken by the Air Ministry in opening up the route to Australia and also that to South Africa. The route to Egypt and India which is followed on the flight to Australia was explored and traversed by air a year ago. East of Calcutta the difficult stages over Burma, the Malay Peninsula and the Dutch East Indies were surveyed this year and a scheme prepared for the establishment of landing grounds at intervals of 400 miles. Concurrently, survey parties were at work between Cairo and the Cape and much useful work has been accomplished.

Britain in common with other belligerent countries had in hand at the end of the war a large number of heavier-than-air machines of all types, and in addition about 100 airships in commission and under construction both of non-rigid and rigid types.

In the case of heavier-than-air craft the Air Ministry has handed over to the Disposals' Board such machines as from time to time became surplus to Air Force requirements.

In the case of airships, where great sums of money must be expended in the early days of commercial development, all parties interested in the subject were brought together at an official conference, with a view to united action being taken. Several rigid airships of modern type which are under construction as well as other surplus airships, sheds and stores were offered at reasonable figures by the Government as the basis for a sound scheme of development.

A Committee of the leading members of the airship and allied industries was formed and it is hoped that a combine will shortly materialise to undertake this enterprise. Little can be said at the actual line of progress, but it is certain that as the rigid airship is essentially a long distance machine, and as development may show that it is a type of aircraft peculiarly suited to the requirements of the British Empire, the programme adopted may be a large one.

In this as in other questions of civil aviation, it may be expected that the aim will be to allow private enterprise the fullest freedom for development consonant with public safety and the general plan which has as its object to win for the British aircraft industry and the air transport services, their position in the commercial realm which the Royal Air Force achieved by gallantry in the war.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views.

THE ARMY AND RELIGION.

Sir,—The correspondence appearing in your columns under the heading of "The Army and Religion," opens out a every difficult but interesting question.

"C.K.P." in his letter to-day evinces almost a pessimistic attitude in his hopes of the successful progress of the Church.

I however, do not agree that the Church as a whole is moving in a retrograde manner. A careful study of the connection between the Church at home with the people reveals the fact that to-day, more than ever, the soul of the nation in closely allied with the work of the Church.

It cannot be denied that denominationalism is the curse to Christian unity and that the apathy of the Nation towards the Church is due to the ambiguity of the latter's programme.

At the recent Church Congress held at Leicester, the importance of Church unity was clearly realized and I am optimistic enough to believe that the amalgamation of the different churches is nearer than what we think.

It is also vitally important that the Church should regain its proper influence with the nation as it is only in this direction that the growing evil of spiritualism and the belief in the occult can be checked.

Hundreds of people in their war bereavements are turning to the beliefs of Sir Oliver Lodge for consolation and comfort and this can only end in disaster. It is clearly the duty of the Church to act quickly if this menace to our national life is to be checked.

A large percentage of the Army is disinterested in the Church, and to hear the views expressed, there is no doubt that denominationalism is the cause.

When this can be swept away the work of the Church will enter a new period. R.

A CHARGE OF "GAGGING."

Sir,—It has been reported to me that many of the audience at the Deutsches are under the impression that in order to get a laugh, I make a cheap joke at the expense of Staff Officers. My only reply to such an indictment is, read your "School for Scandal" (according to original version), Act IV, Scene i. — "I leave gagging to comedians of genius whose privilege it is —"

This is not the first time I have been accused of gagging in order to raise a laugh. Some years ago, when rehearsing a certain play of Bernard Shaw's, the author pulled me up very sharply with "please don't gag in my plays," whereupon I showed him his text. ". . . . Good gracious, to what depths I descend!!!" Perhaps Sheridan would say the same.

S. E. PERCY, Lt.
Officer i/c B.R.A.D.C.

EXCESSIVE CIGARETTE SMOKING.

Sir,—I am entirely in agreement with "Senior Officer" in his striking and forcible argument against the excessive use of tobacco by our young soldiers at present in Rhineland.

It was recently stated by Dr. E H. Dunn that "70 per cent of the sense of taste is lost by the habitual smoker under forty years of age. It makes no difference whether he smokes a pipe, cigarettes, or cigars. With the sense of taste atrophied by tobacco, men must have highly seasoned foods to tickle their palates. And the constant eating of such foods disables the individual from recognising delicate flavours." I scarcely think that any user of tobacco will deny Dr. Dunn's statement.

The spoiling of the sense of taste, however, is but a minor damage to the system as compared with the harm that is done to the average person who smokes tobacco in excess.

The stomach becomes poisoned, and this leads to a train of disorders. The tobacco user who imagines that the toxic elements of the weed do not reach his stomach shows his ignorance of facts, for nothing can prevent the saliva (which is swallowed) from being contaminated while passing through the mouth. In many cases the stomach itself indicates the mischief that is being done by symptoms of dyspepsia and other disagreeable feelings. In numerous cases the stomach does not reveal the trouble as soon as do other organs which are damaged by the passage of the tobacco poisons through the general digestive system.

The pneumogastric nerve, which extends from the stomach upwards through the respiratory and other organs is usually affected, and this also leads to a train of ailments. Tobacco has been the cause of millions of deaths through heart failure, kidney disease and even by suicide. There are, indeed, few who use tobacco excessively who are not afflicted at times with deep depression of spirits, and this melancholy has led to insanity or the killing by one's own hand when in that stage of acute mental distress which tobacco consumers realise so throughly. Cigarettes are facetiously known as "coffin nails," but this is no joke, for they are truly named. Those who smoke them excessively are usually the victims of severe nerve, brain and other disorders which create needless misery and shorten life. MEDICAL.

EXCESSIVE CIGARETTE SMOKING.

Sir,—May I, as an old smoker, be allowed a word or two in the wordy warfare which has resulted from "Senior Officer's" letter.

The young men know full well that they smoke too much and that it does them harm, but their amour propre is wounded, and so they rush into print.

The "Old Brigade" know equally well that they could no more give up smoking than they could fly. Why this inconsistency?

Well, so far as I can see, the truth is that smoking is a soothing habit just as the sucking of a piece of indiarubber is soothing to some infants. Moreover it is not a habit, if controlled, that does excessive harm. "If controlled"— that is the crux of the whole question.

At times I have given up smoking and have unfailingly noted two very distinct and indisputable effects. 1. I have needed more food; 2. I have needed less sleep.

Now if your rubber-sucking infant was satisfied with sucking its teat all the time instead of taking food it would die. If your smoker smokes so much that he wants to eat too little, his health will suffer.

The sleep argument needs no re-enforcing by example. It is obvious that if smoking produces sleepiness in young fellows, where sleep should be perfectly natural, it is benumbing the brain, it is reducing the efficiency of the individual. And these are not the days for individuals of reduced efficiency.

Cigarette smoking is undoubtedly bad. The dust of "fags" is bad for the throat, the smoke of "fags," being much nearer to the face than that of a pipe, plays havoc with the tender membranes of the eyes and nose.

Chuck the fag and learn to smoke a pipe with good clean tobacco—no fancy opiated mixtures—and you'll thank the day, you did it. PIPES.

[This discussion is now closed. Ed.]

DO WE READ TOO MUCH?

Sir,—Impossible! The one regret of my life is that I have not read enough. To really appreciate one's backwardness in this respect, it is only necessary to get into the company of really well-read men.

Their thoughts on every subject are almost invariably moulded by what they have read, while poor unfortunates, like myself, can have no definite opinions on the matters at all. Read, read, read, is my advice to the young men in Rhineland Devour everything. Even the so called trashy stuff is not entirely worthless.

CONVINCED.

Sir,—Two contributions stand out in my Autograph Book which I think form a suitable rejoinder to the correspondence opened out by "Rural" on "Do we read too much?"

They are;

"The past but lives in words, a thousand ages were blank, if books had not evoked their ghosts." Lytton.

and

"Books are part of man's prerogative, In formal ink they thought and voices hold." Averburg.

H.N.R.

SOLDIERS AS FATALISTS.

Sir,—I cannot agree with your correspondent, "Non fatalist," that the doctrine of fatalism is losing its hold on the British soldier in these days.

My experience is that it is still the most universal belief, of the Tommy at any rate, and that it has such a firm hold that more than a year of peace is required to undermine and supplant it.

And after all, is it not the most sound and satisfying belief in these modern times? I am inclined to the belief that it is. ONE OF THEM.

SOLDIERS AND WINE.

Sir,—I am glad to see that my fear that expensive wines were usurping the place of the good old pint of beer in the estimation of the British soldier is in many cases groundless.

But in reply to the letters which have appeared in your columns, I would add that I was by no means only referring to the Tommy.

What about the Officers and N.C.O's. Do they still prefer the popular British beverage when they can get it? I hope so.

PERTURBED.

OPERA MANNERS.

Sir,—One notices of late in the O.R's balcony a marked increase of loud talking during the opera performances, in which not our troops, but civilians of various nationalities are the offenders. In two instances recently, polite requests for silence have been met with jeering laughter and still louder conversation.

The musical requirements of such people are amply catered for in cafes and beer-houses, but, if they must visit the opera, there is surely some way of dealing with what is becoming a serious nuisance. Can any of your readers inform me whether there are official regulations framed to meet such cases, especially where the annoyance does not yield to remonstrance, and is clearly provocative? C.H.S.

YEAR'S BIG RACES.

How Favourites Fared: The Successful Jockeys.

PRICES OF WINNERS.

Dealing with the principal races of the year, "Magpie" in "The Globe" writes as follows:—

I have selected 29 of the principal events, and find that eight favourites were successful. They were Poethlyn in the Grand National, Roseway in the One Thousand Guineas, Irish Elegance in the Royal Hunt Cup, Buchan in the Eclipse Stakes, Arion in the Liverpool Summer Cup, Irish Elegance in the Portland Plate at Doncaster, My Dear in the Liverpool Autumn Cup, and Alasnam in the Derby Cup.

Successful Outsiders.

The biggest outsider successful was Grand Parade at 33 to 1 in the Derby. Brigand was a 25 to 1 chance for the Cambridgeshire, and Langdon Hills started at 20's for the Great Metropolitan Stakes. Ivanhoe, who carried off the Cesarewitch, started at 100 to 6.

Winners at 100 to 7 against, were Royal Bucks in the Lincolnshire, Bayuda in the Oaks, King Sol in the Stewards' Cup, and Race Rock in the Ebor Handicap. We had a couple of winners at 100 to 8. They were Tom Pepper in the Chester Cup, and Keysoe in the St. Leger.

The prices of the other winners were 10 to 1 (three), 7 to 1, 100 to 15, 6 to 1 (three), 4 to 1, 7 to 2 (two), 11 to 4, 5 to 2, 9 to 4 (two), 2 to 1, 6 to 4, and 6 to 5 against, and 7 to 2 on.

The investment of £1 on each of the favourites in the races dealt with would have resulted in a loss of £5 15s. 4d.

The Lucky Jockey.

Templeman was the most successful jockey in the big races of the year. He won the Derby, Royal Hunt Cup, Newbury Summer Cup, and Liverpool Summer Cup.

Carslake, Hulme, and Whalley were also well to the fore. Carslake finished first in the Newbury Spring Cup, the St. Leger, and Portland Plate; Hulme steered the winner of the Lincolnshire Handicap, Manchester Cup, and Newbury Autumn Cup; and Whalley's wins were in the One Thousand Guineas, Duke of York Stakes, and Cesarewitch.

G. Colling, Childs, Donoghue, and Weston all caught the judge's eye twice. Donoghue's victories were on Royal Bucks in the City and Suburban, and on My Dear in the Liverpool Autumn Cup.

The other successful jockeys in the leading races of the year were W. Balding, Cooper, Crickmere, Fox, Lane, Piggot (Grand National), Robertson, and Shatwell.

I append a table of the winners of the big races, with the starting price, the jockey, and the favourite.

Lincolnshire Handicap.
Royal Bucks (G. Hulme), 100 to 7.
Rivershore favourite.

Liverpool Spring Cup.
Santa Cruz (G. Colling), 10 to 1.
Trespasser favourite.

Grand National.
Poethlyn (Piggott), 11 to 4.
Poethlyn favourite.

Newbury Spring Cup.
Callander (Carslake), 4 to 1.
Rivershore favourite.

Great Metropolitan Stakes.
Langdon Hills (K. Robertson), 20 to 1.
St. Tudwal favourite.

City and Suburban.
Royal Bucks (Donoghue), 8 to 1.
Dansellon favourite.

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS.
The Panther (R. Cooper), 10 to 1.
Stephan the Great and Lord Basil joint favourites.

ONE THOUSAND GUINEAS.
Roseway (A. Whalley), 2 to 1.
Roseway favourite.

Chester Cup.
Tom Pepper (Shatwell), 100 to 8.
Air Raid favourite.

Jubilee Handicap.
Arion (Weston), 10 to 1.
Royal Bucks favourite.

THE DERBY.
Grand Parade (F. Templeman), 33 to 1.
The Panther favourite.

THE OAKS.
Bayuda (J. Childs), 100 to 7.
Roseway favourite.

Manchester Cup.
By Jingo (G. Hulme), 7 to 2.
All Alone favourite.

Royal Hunt Cup.
Irish Elegance (F. Templeman), 7 to 1.
Irish Elegance and Jutland joint favourites.

Northumberland Plate.
Trestle (G. Colling), 6 to 1.
Tom Pepper and Ramda joint favourites.

Newbury Summer Cup.
Arion (F. Templeman), 5 to 2.
Jutland favourite.

Eclipse Stakes.
Buchan (J. Childs), 7 to 2 on.
Buchan favourite.

Liverpool Summer Cup.
Arion (F. Templeman), 6 to 4.
Arion favourite.

Stewards' Cup.
King Sol (W. Balding), 100 to 7.
Irish Elegance favourite.

Ebor Handicap.
Race Rock (F. Lane), 100 to 7.
Queen's Square favourite.

Gimcrack Stakes.
Southern (Fox), 7 to 2.
Lilloise favourite.

ST. LEGER STAKES.
Keysoe (Carslake), 100 to 8.
Buchan favourite.

Portland Plate.
Irish Elegance (Carslake), 9 to 4.
Irish Elegance favourite.

Newbury Autumn Cup.
Silver Bridge (G. Hulme), 6 to 1.
Langdon Hills favourite.

Duke of York Stakes.
Grand Fleet (Whalley), 100 to 15.
My Dear favourite.

Cesarewitch Stakes.
Ivanhoe (A. Whalley), 100 to 6.
Golden Melody favourite.

Cambridgeshire Stakes.
Brigand (Crickmere), 25 to 1.
Alasnam favourite.

Liverpool Autumn Cup.
My Dear (Donoghue), 9 to 4.
My Dear favourite.

Derby Cup.
Alasnam (T. Weston), 6 to 5.
Alasnam favourite.

GODDARD IMPROVED.

Used Right and Left like a Champion.

In his match with McLaglen, Goddard, who, as reported in our last issue was successful in the third round, showed himself to be a greatly improved boxer.

During the whole of the contest Goddard kept his left elbow close to his body. His left fist was always ready to strike, and as a consequence, McLaglen could not see his way through his defence.

He led with the left and then followed on with the right, just after the manner of men who have been regarded as real champions.

Benefited by Tuition.

Here we had two men who had been looked upon as wonderfully good, but who required some instruction in boxing. They have both had tuition, and Goddard has learned more than McLaglen learned.

At the third meeting Goddard just feinted with his left and McLaglen fell into the trap. The loser guarded for another left, but Goddard hit him with his right, the blow landing well and flush on the chin.

The moral of this contest is that Goddard has improved, and the improvement is due to the instruction he has received from Dick Smith.

BILLIARDS.

Reece and Newman still lead in London Matches.

The match was continued on Tuesday in London between Reece and Stevenson. The former who has a lead of over 2,500, made breaks of 283, 113, 193, 112, 323, 146 and 103. Stevenson's largest break was a well played 797. Closing scores:

Reece	11,163
Stevenson	8,624

At Thurston's on the same day, Newman made a capital series of breaks in his match against Inman. They were: 432, 100, 202 and 285. Inman, who is losing ground, made breaks of 196, 219, 195. Closing scores:

Newman	3,666
Inman	1,877

EPSOM STABLE LADS.

The strike of stable lads at Epsom has ended at last. A number of them have resumed work, regarding it inadvisable for the others to carry on the dispute. A few have decided to secure employment elsewhere.

TENNIS.

An Oxford University tennis match at the Prince's Club on Tuesday, resulted in a victory for the Dark Blues by three matches to one.

WINNING HORSES.

Tetratema heads list with over £11,000.

The principal prize-winner of the year was the two-year-old Tetratema, whose five races were worth over £11,000. The St. Leger winner, Keysoe, comes next, followed by Buchan. The leading twelve were:—

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

"SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL."

Last Saturday an acquaintance of mine who, by the way, professes to be an enthusiastic patron of the Drama, asked me what was on at the Deutsches in the coming week. I told him, "The School for Scandal." He replied: "Oh! I'm so glad; I must go to it. I love Browning so!" (Many asterisks here please Mr. Editor.)

In spite of this I do not think that even those lively critics who have advocated the production of the Woolwich Hippodrome type of production in preference to what they are pleased to call "nigh brow stuff" are ignorant of the fact that the play produced by the B.R.A.D.C. on Monday night is one of the best comedies that Sheridan ever wrote. For the sake of clearness I will add that I have it on the best authority that Browning had no hand in it.

"The School for Scandal" is a fine comedy and a very accurate exposition of the fashionable society of the period, but it is what I should call an ambitious production. The last time I saw it, it was produced by an amateur theatrical society who spent five hectic weeks preparing and played for one night only. The performance was lauded to the skies by the local press but it was streets removed from the rendering given by the B.R.A.D.C. after only one week's preparation.

This is the first costume play given by the Company and is an unqualified success. The caste is a big one and, although I should like to say something about everyone concerned, the eagle eye of Mr. Editor is upon me and I must make the old, old plea of "exigencies of space."

A Capable Caste.

With so many parts of equal importance, equally capably rendered it is no easy task to make outstanding selections, but I do not think I shall be far wrong if I pick Sergt. Shilsky as Joseph Surface, Lieut. Humphrey Hope as Sir Peter Teazle, Miss Shirley King as Lady Teazle, Major C. F. Ball as Sir Oliver Surface, Lieut. S. E. Percy as Charles Surface, and Capt. Cecil Spiegelhalter as Moses, as those members of the caste who thoroughly earned their laurels. As regards Miss King I sometimes wish she were not so talented an actress, because I'm always saying nice things about her and "The School for Scandal" is by no means confined to the year 1777. In any case I will risk the insinuations of the twentieth century Mrs Candour, and repeat what I have said before about Miss King, to wit, her departure will be an irreparable loss, and, in addition, that her Lady Teazle was a first-rate performance. There now! The respective performances of the gentlemen whose names I have already mentioned would receive a well-merited applause from any audience in a West-end theatre. I cannot say more.

Miss Inez Bensusan was a perfectly splendid Mrs Candour, but—a rare thing with her—was rather uncertain of her lines. Miss Frances Chisholm as Lady Sneerwell pleased me immensely. Capt. Dennis as Snake, Miss Gabrielle Paul as Maria, Lieut. Leigh Farnell as Sir Benjamin Backbite (with muff complete) and Mr. Herbert Mather as Trip all added to the excellency of the production. Pte. Terry gave a remarkably clever rendering of Rowley (although he is still rather liable to underspeak his lines), and Lieut. N. C. Ingall, a new-comer, is to be congratulated on his conception of that dreadful old scandalmonger, Mr. Crabtree.

A vocal item.

Miss Hilda Potts' singing was much appreciated. She is the possessor of a very sweet voice. The remainder of the company played their parts most creditably, special mention being due to the acting of the gay spirit who drank too much port, and, once having relinquished his chair, was physically incapable of regaining it.

The Minuet which had only been twice rehearsed under the tuition of the Ballet Master of the Cologne Opera House, was delightful and, considering the difficulty of rendering it correctly and the short time devoted to rehearsing, it was a credit to all who took part.

Lieut. Percy's idea of the setting once more proved him an artist and the entire production, his worth as a producer. The costumes, supplied from the Opera House, were correct and caused each scene to be a veritable feast of colour.

THINGS WE WANT TO KNOW
(with apologies to "London Mail"):

What Lieut. Percy said to the conductor of the orchestra when he played "The King" in the middle of the performance, and whether the said conductor has stopped running yet? E.H.S.

Leave Club Debate.

The subject for the debate at the British Empire Leave Club on Friday at 6.30 is: "That in War, all methods are justifiable." Sgt. Sherman, D.L.I., will move, and Pte. Doughty, Labour Company, will oppose the motion.

Novel Concert.

An excellent concert at the Empire Leave Club on Tuesday opened with a symphony by the Club orchestra, conducted by Miss West, who later played some splendid violin solos. Then followed a playlet in which Miss Marjorie Moore was a convincing bazaar proprietor. Other characters well represented were Mrs. Carter (Tailer's Eve), Miss Ackland (a Staff Officer), Miss Dalrymple (cat), Miss Tilner and Mrs. Bamford (dolls), Miss Thomas (a boy), and Miss Tyrer (a governess). Another interesting item was a dance by Mrs. Bamford and Captain Preston, and a clever play, "Postal Orders" by Roland Pertwee, in which Miss Marjorie Moore, Miss Tilney, Miss Ackland, Miss Douglas and Lieut. Higgins took part.

As Others See Us.

A lengthy article in the "Manchester Guardian" has some very nice things to say of the work of the Rhine Army Dramatic Company. "Here are a few extracts from the Article:—"'The Cologne Post,' which is the newspaper of the British Army of Occupation on the Rhine, reveals the fact that in the Deutsches Theatre, in Cologne, a repertory company composed of soldiers is constantly and successfully giving a much more amusing series of British plays than can be seen at home and, according to 'The Cologne Post' the troops appreciate them quite as much as the benighted homelander does the "girl and music" plays which are his daily fare in these lean times. We can quite believe that if the present rot in the home stage is not soon stemmed, the custom will set in among playgoers, before the armistice terms are half fulfilled, of running over to Cologne in order to be sure of seeing a really diverting play."

Sunday Concerts.

That the establishment of regular Sunday concerts in Cologne fills a gap in the amenities of military as well as civil life, is beyond question in view of the experience of the past few weeks. The Deutsches Theatre last Sunday evening was well patronised when the band of the Inniskilling Dragoons submitted a well varied programme. The concert opened with the "Light Cavalry" Overture, which was treated with plenty of spirit, and such diversified works as those of Gounod, Brahams, Schubert, Strauss, Massanet, Logan, Finch and Sousa were all represented in the subsequent items rendered. In all of these, the band was excellent. By way of relief, Mr. Gerald Williams sang with considerable sympathy, "I Hear You Calling Me" and "My Dreams," for each of which he was encored.

ONE ERROR.

Sapper Wins No. 9 Football Competition Outright.

ANOTHER CONTEST THIS WEEK.

The general failure of competitors in No. 9 Football Contest has already been commented upon in this column, no competitor—excluding the winner—having correctly forecasted more than nine out of twelve results. The winning coupon contained but one error and was submitted by:

269,020, Sapper W. H. Owen, R.E., c.o Traffic Office,
Cologne,

who is thus entitled to the prize, which this week amounts to the sum of 1,842 marks.

In this week's contest, but ten results are required. Test your knowledge of football form and enter now.

In the coupon printed below, strike out the team you think will lose, or, if you predict a draw, leave both teams standing, add your name and address clearly, place the coupon in an envelope with one mark and send it along to this office. Any number of coupons may be sent at the rate of one mark each.

Coupons must be addressed:—

A SOUND DEFENCE.

H.Q.s defeat C. Coy 51st Bn. Hants.

Saturday afternoon witnessed the first of a series of Company League matches, viz:—Headquarters versus "C" Coy.

In spite of recent heavy snow and rainfalls which had made the ground very slippery and dangerous, a good game resulted.

The game opened with a spirited attack by Headquarters, the forwards working well together, thus keeping the ball for some time well within their opponents' area. "C" Coy's defence harassed the attacking side until, following some time footwork by Noble, Knight secured from a pass and scored with a splendid low drive.

Forwards Checked.

During the rest of the first half there was some brilliant play. "C" Coy continually rushed the ball toward the goal, but each time were checked by Headquarter's defence. About five minutes before half time, Headquarters increased their lead through a shot from the wing by Roffey.

The second half opened with some determined play by "C" Coy, who, however, found Headquarter's defence too strong for them. Pinker and Dyer soon transferred the ball to their opponents half, where, after some splendid saves by Lieut. Gibb, Roffey notched the third point. From the kick-off "C" Coy's forwards made continued attempts to score but without avail.

Towards the close Lieut. Newman obtained possession of the ball, and, with a powerful shot, scored. This was speedily followed up by two more goals from Herwig and Knight, leaving Headquarters victors by 6 goals to nil.

Everton have eight first class forwards independent of reserves, yet they cannot find the winning blend.

OVER THE STICKS.

Three more Favourites Win at Birmingham.

In fine weather at Birmingham on Tuesday, going was good and attendance large.

DETAILS.

Three-year-old Hurdle:—1, Charioteer (7-1); 2, Jack Sheppard (9-4); 3, Rosy Picton (5-1). Eight ran.

Birmingham 'Chase:—Birvani walked over.

Burton Hurdle:—1, Landreel (5-2); 2, Temeside (7-2); 3, Jenny Jones (6-1). Seven ran.

Tamworth 'Chase:—1, Turkey Buzzard (11-4); 2, Neurotic (11-8); 3, Prince Francis (8-1). Eight ran.

Bromford Hurdle:—1, Ocean Wave (5-4 on); 2, Hagiology (9-2); 3, Silent Sands (100-8). Fourteen ran.

Kings Norton 'Chase:—1, Carrigue (6-1); 2, Jeffries (10-1); 3, Ally Sloper (7-1). Five ran.

LOCAL FOOTBALL.

Rhine Signal Bn., 5.
51st Northumberland Fusiliers, 0.

Played at Marsdorf on Tuesday. The game was more even than the score indicates, but the shooting of the Signals' forwards was excellent. Within ten minutes, Sapper Didman had scored twice with shots from about 25 yards range. Sappers Cunnell and Reid each added to the score before half time.

The play during the second half was very even, and the 51st forwards had many shots at goal without success. Reid added the fifth goal for the Signals before the final whistle.

TRAINER AND TRADER.

Conditional Offers For War Memorial Purchase.

The Jockey Club has intimated to Newmarket War Memorial Committee that they will support the scheme on foot for the acquiring of five acres of the "severals," providing the town will show its desire for the scheme by supporting it financially. A local trader has offered twenty-five pounds on condition that thirty-nine other traders do likewise and a trainer has offered a similar amount, a like condition applying to thirty-nine other trainers and jockeys.

ROUND ABOUT NOTES.

Whist at Siegburg.

A very successful Whist Drive, the third of its kind, was held at the Head Quarters, G.H.Q. Technical College, Siegburg, a very pleasant evening being spent. The presence of the wives of the officers and other ranks contributed largely to the evening's enjoyment. At the close of the Drive, the prizes were very gracefully presented by Mrs. Bream, who made suitable remarks to each of the lucky winners. The first prize was won by Sgt. Sykes; second prize: Staff Sgt. Dobson; first prize (Gent): Pte. Mason; second prize was a tie between Pte. Shields and Staff Sgt. Yarnold. A prize was given on this occasion to be competed for by the officers only, and Capt. Young, a student at the college was the lucky winner of a very nice gold watch. The "Booby" was won by Pte. Courtney, who found himself in possession of a handsome musical clock. An orchestra was engaged for the evening, and played very suitable music. A vote of thanks was accorded Mrs. Bream for having presented the prizes. Capt. Marsh who has acted M.C. on each occasion, has always proved himself very efficient, and it is generally regretted that he leaves for England during the week.

Hospital Acquisition.

Hospital life is always apt at times to become depressing, however cheery may be the staff and environment generally. The news that there is to be installed at No. 25 General Hospital an up-to-date cinema, will accordingly be hailed with satisfaction.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Lengthy.

On the walls of a corridor in the Riehler Strasse Law Courts is the word Zwangsvollstreckungssachen, containing 26 letters. It is the 'distraint' department.

In Face of Difficulties.

The German classes at the B.E.L.C. are well attended. Beginners find the Deutsch text rather confusing. Capital letters and 's' and 'k' are particularly puzzling. But the pupils are progressing.

Dainty Curtains.

A window curtain in the Blumenthal Strasse is made up of threaded, cylindrical, coloured beads, and represents two gorgeous peacocks. Germans seem to have a pretty gift for this sort of thing.

Unfortunate.

Perhaps the difficulties experienced by the Rhine Army Dramatic Co. have never been so clearly demonstrated and so fully appreciated as on Monday evening when for the first time, the "School for Scandal' was presented. Things simply would not go well, and when, with two more scenes to come, the orchestra struck up the "King", the climax of misfortune was reached.

Sympathetic Audience.

But the audience displayed a sympathetic spirit, and in spite of the long waits, etc., showed their appreciation of what was really a delightful play. I hope to visit the Deutsches again this week. Just a reminder, by the way, that this will be Miss Shirley King's last appearance with the company.

Inviting Trouble.

The leaving of a bedroom window open at night is an invitation to pneumonia and all such ills, is the firm opinion of my German landlady, and many others, from what I hear.

A Conductor's Hobby.

One of the Cologne tram conductors has made a hobby of collecting cap badges of English regiments. He started his hobby during the war and I am told by those who have seen his collection that very few units are unrepresented.

Sale of Spirits.

The sale or gift of alcoholic liquors other than wine or beer to civilians by British troops and by civilians to British troops in forbidden in the British occupied area.

Shutting Down.

No lunches or dinners can now be served, nor are beds available at the Army and Navy Leave Club, Paris, but teas and light refreshments will be served up to November 30th by which date the Club will be definitely closed.

High Grade.

A somewhat pleasant surprise, it was on Sunday evening last, on walking towards Lindenthal, to hear the strains of Suppe's "Poet and Peasant" coming from the mechanical organ attached to an "Aunt Sally" booth. Curiously enough, the piece was very well rendered, and was a most welcome variant of the so-called "music" usually ground out of such machines.

Another Experience.

One cannot help admiring the musical taste thus displayed: It reminded the writer forcibly of an incident which occurred once on a similar occasion in Lancashire several years ago, when almost the entire adult population of a certain village turned out to hear the "Hallelujah Chorus" played by a large organ attached to a steam roundabout which happened to be at the village fair.

Wanted Book.

I am asked if a book on cinema operating can be bought in Cologne. Well, I should say if my correspondent asked for one at the Cologne Post Bookroom, if they hadn't got a copy, they'd soon get it.

Met Again.

The wife of an officer who was during the war engaged as a V.A.D. and at a London Hospital was for some time nursing wounded German officer prisoners, visited Bonn last week and was very surprised to meet one of these German officers.

For The Kiddies.

All the large stores in Cologne are busily preparing for the Christmas season. One I visited yesterday has already opened a large and well stocked children's bazaar, to the great delight of youngsters.

Coal Delivery.

The German system of delivering coal by means of tip-up carts, is, I think, far behind the English way of delivering by sacks. The German method strikes one as clumsy and dirty, while it also blocks the traffic for some time.

Bad Business.

I am informed that recently there have been a number of Dutch, French and Belgian commercial travellers in Cologne representing British firms. Surely there are plenty of demobilized officers and men capable of filling these positions.

A Popular Visitor.

I met Lieut. Duffin in Cologne a day or two ago. He will be remembered as the genial officer-in-charge of the N.A.C.B. Clubs before going to Berlin a few weeks ago on important canteen work.

English Names.

Now and again in Cologne you come across tradesmen with distinctly British names. There is J. London, a butcher, and the firm Wilkinson Bros., and yesterday I noticed a motor wagon belonging to Englander & Co.

Fighting Still.

Letters received by the soldiers on the Rhine from friends in the Egyptian Expeditionary Force show that they aren't having such a cushy time there as in Cologne. They are being kept busy with many "scraps."

Cologne's Bread.

I understand that the bread obtainable in Cologne is of a better quality than that which obtains elsewhere in the Fatherland. It has recently undergone a great improvement, but the price has also risen.

Recommended.

Quite a good way to learn German is to visit the Lichtspielhaus and try to read the explanatory letter-press thrown on the screen. A learner feels quite pleased with himself if he can gather the gist of it, and it spurs him on to fresh endeavour.

Two "Birthdays."

It is not generally known that in this part of Cermany and other Continental Catholic countries they celebrate two "Birthdays". One is the actual date of birth, of course, and the other is the anniversary of the Christian name day.

Sporting Battalion.

The 16th Bn. West Yorkshire Regiment has been famous for its wonderful sporting record while in Rhineland. The officers' mess looked a picture on Guest night, for the table was covered with trophies, among others being the Kalk Football Shield, Rhine Army Basket Ball Cup, a huge silver cup given by the Corps and the Rhine Army Shooting Cup.

Solving the House Problem.

Magnificent workmen's cottages are being erected by the hundred at Weisdorf, I hear. They are an eye-opener as regards modern conveniences. Before the war the rent of this class of house was from two to five marks a week according to size. Even now it is only from about five to ten marks.

RHINELANDER.

AROUND AND ABOUT.

FRENCH PRIVILEGES.

The many new men who have gained election to the French Chamber will have a right to sundry little privileges which our own M.P.'s might envy them. Each Deputy, for instance, receives a salary of £600 per annum, as compared with the £400 his British compeer has to rub along on, and, in addition, has the use of a free buffet. Everyone who is about to speak can stimulate his eloquence by as many drinks as he likes, free of charge, and when his discourse has ended, can recuperate on gratuitous sandwiches.

WORD SHORTENING.

Earl Russell's objection to shortening words seems to be a family trait. The late Mr. G. W. E. Russell describes how his youthful training led him to regard the word "lunch" (for "luncheon") with peculiar horror. "It ranked with 'bus' in the lowest depth of vulgarity." But opposing this process is a somewhat Canute-like business. Earl Russell says—of course justly—that we do not talk of "draw room" but our ancestors did not talk of "drawing room"—which is, of course, nonsense. They said "withdrawing room." Probably quite a little list of words illustrating this process of "curtailing the alreading curtailed cur" might be drawn up if one had the leisure.

HER FIRST EFFORT.

The following is the first literary effort of Doris, aged eight, produced on the occasion of the School Party held in celebration of Peace. Her teacher hopes it will not be the last! "On Friday we was dreest up in red white and blue and paper hats. and sume were not dreest up. and sume were little red riding hood and it was the best party we have Hever had. and we had horinges and sweets and tea and to peaces of cak and a peace of bred and best butter and we sang God save the king and we saluted the flag and had our meddl and then we went home and the copper was looking at us while we were singing praese God from whom all blessings frow praese him all creoges here below."

A GROWING STYLE.

Lord Fisher's forceful style seems to be gaining a hold on other oil-burning admirals. One of them, Rear-Admiral Philip Dumas, C.B., has just read a paper before the Institution of Petroleum Technologists, in the course of which he expressed the view that "experts are d——d liars," invoked God and Heaven, and consigned the Germans in the frankest Fisher fashion to a place where presumably all fuel experts go.

ON LAST WORDS.

If it be true that Nelson's last words were not "Kiss me, Hardy," and that Wellington, at Waterloo did not say, "Up, Guards, and at 'em" (what he actually said was, "The line will advance"), it is equally true that Sir Henry Irving's last words were not, "Into Thy hands, O Lord." Mr. W. J. Sheppard, now on the business side of the Royalty Theatre, but then personal attendant to the great tragedian, says that Sir Henry's last words were spoken to him. As he staggered off the stage and more or less fell into Mr. Sheppard's arms, Sir Henry ejaculated, "That chair, Sheppard!" He never spoke again.

AUSTRALIA'S HERO.

General Birdwood's proudest title to fame, is that he will live in history as a British general supremely endowed with the great gift of command of men. His personality won from the first the confidence of troops strange to him and neophytes—at that beginning—in warfare, but men of unparalleled mettle, of a critical spirit, of that cold courage which the will creates in alliance with the brain. To have won the lasting devotion of these men—by his staunchness, his resolution, his cheerfulness, and his evident competence—this was Sir William Birdwood's triumph.

NOT FLATTERED.

Two women who had not met for years suddenly encountered each other in a tram.

"How do you do?" said one effusively.

"Now this is delightful," said the older of the two. "Just to think that you knew me after so many years. I can't have changed much—really I feel quite flattered."

"Oh," quickly replied the first speaker "I recognised your hat."

Then there was a horrid silence.

GERMAN RAILWAY TRAVEL.

Railway passengers in Germany enjoy few, if any, of the comforts of pre-war days. Unheated carriages in a country where even the trams used to be comfortably warmed must be anything but luxurious in winter, and the lack of window-glass does not make the prospect of a long journey more attractive. Most of the carriage doors, too, are jammed, and male passengers climb in or out by the window-frames, while women have to be lifted through the openings. Distinctions between classes have gone by the board, and the popular retort of a German if asked why he is travelling first-class with a fourth-class ticket is: "Have we had a Revolution, or have we not?"

ENERGY THEN AND NOW.

Jones, the typist, was hanging wearily over his machine, anxiously waiting for the half-hour to strike when he would be assured that his daily toil had ended when in walks Smith, the office corporal.

"Now then, Jones, have you typed those reports for me?'

"No," replied Jones dreamily.

"Why not?" demanded his superior.

"I had some letters to type for your pal, the Captain. One was to the Parish Clerk of his village asking for a copy of his last marriage certificate, and the other to the firm of boot manufacturers where he got his new field boots from, giving them a telling-off for not sending him a buckshee pair of laces."

"Oh that's a fine tale," rejoins the energetic two stripe.

"Well, it's a fact, 'cause I know what I did, don't I?" snaps Jones.

"I say, Jones, don't speak to me in that fashion; who, do you think you are?" reiterates the senior.

"Oh please, Corporal," Jones carries on, "don't be so regimental for the sake of the Greek Gods; if I didn't do what you told me, I might have lost another six days' pay, and again, if I refused old Higgs' orders I should have been before a Court Martial, so what was I to do? I was between the Devil and the deep sea, and rather than experience the torment of the fiery furnace so soon by giving you the chance of making out another A.F.B 252 in favour of No. 626262 Pte. Jones G. and all that piffle, I chose the deep sea and being a swimmer, I got out all right."

"Did you?" says the Corporal with a sarcastic grin.

"Yes I did, and you see old chum, this is where it comes in. You're a Corporal on the staff, and I'm one of the fortunate yet unfortunate 'attached.' You scrounged behind the line during the war, hung your shirt out at Etaples or Rouen, and I was stuck right in it, and in the thick too, round Cambrai, and what I say is, that them there fellows who had the 'posh' jobs when Jerry was throwing his mud about can have 'em now, but as for the likes of me putting a jerk in it now, why boy they've had it."

"Oh, shut up," says the fair energetic one, "you bore me."

"Do I, well that is better than having one of Jerry's shells boring you aint it? Good night, Corporal, my fair one, may you be blessed, made more conscientious, and promoted to Sergeant before morning. Cheerio, Guten abend."

Here the Corporal went. The half-hour had struck and Jones followed. Another lengthy dialogue took place that night and an analysis of that can be obtained from the Mess President, price 50 pfgs.

W.H.A.

THE EVOLUTION OF A "POSH" SOLDIER.

I have given many hours' cogitation to the question of a "posh" soldier's evolution, and at last I have been persuaded by entusiastic admirers to set down my views for the benefit and instruction of readers of "The Cologne Post."

Maybe, the Officers, W.O's and N.C.O's who crib at the conduct of the poor Private when he is promenading the town will remark, upon reading this, that doub less the author is a real soldier.

Allow me to contradict the above probable remark; — I am not a real soldier, I'm a Sergeant and am eagerly awaiting demob'.

When a soldier, in the making, first enters the Army, he is firstly issued with the various articles that provide material for future kit inspections and Quartermaster's sarcastic remarks.

He parades at the clothing store and is persuaded by the storeman that his first khaki suit fits him perfectly, and that after it is moulded to his manly form he will be issued with a shoehorn to enable him to don the afore-mentioned "tailor made."

Our recruit's self satisfaction is evident on his countenance as he ambles contentedly away, and then—horror of horrors — he sees himself in a mirror!

The revelation of the storekeeper's duplicity strikes him forcibly and he staggers away — a broken man. His dismal lamentations over and driven to desperation, he pays a visit to the regimental tailor.

This celebrity imbues our hero with anticipation, and he can see the trousers which are a little tight under the arms, the tunic which resembles his last frock coat and the cap which nearly severs his ears from his head, fast disappearing from his ken.

Two or three days elapse—he takes possession of the now well-fitting suit, while the tailor makes a new outfit from the "buckshee" material left over.

The soldier, helped on by the persuasive voice of the C.S.M. and the art of the sartorial one, is now well on the road to "poshness." Several things are still required, and as time goes on, he becomes cognisant of their lack and the necessary action is accordingly taken.

A tin of "Nutta" is purchased and the cap strap begins to hurt the eye of the onlooker.

Two dents appear in the cap above the badge.

Collar badges come into view.

The breast pocket lapels are cut into fantastical shapes.

A revolver lanyard encircles his shoulder, attached to nothing in particular. Regimental buttons are donned, (unless he is spotted).

Cuffs decorate his sleeves, and ribbons his manly breast.

Breeches are procured, together with Fox's puttees, and his feet are encased in "civvy" boots.

A pair of kid gloves finishes his outfit and the evolution of the "posh" soldier is thus complete, and he may be perceived any night strolling languidly along the Hohestrasse smoking a 90 pfg. cigar, and by his furrowed brow, one can see that he is seriously thinking of signing on for 21 years.

The reason for the latter act of rashness being the fact of his C.Q.M.S. having promised him a new pair of slacks in ten years' time.

I heard yesterday on good authority that he had volunteered for—, and now he sports a gigantic fur-collar on his tunic.

He will be "posh", whatever may happen.

A.D.

FROM EVERYWHERE.

Out of Beer.—Mr. J. M. Bernard, a Perthshire brewer has left over £100.000.

Side-Car Taxis.—The new taxi side-car has started plying for hire in Paris.

Fought in Crimea.—Major General G.A. Wilkinson, once of the Royal Artillery, has died in his 92nd year. He fought in the Crimean war.

Facing Starvation.—The Federation of Discharged Sailors and Soldiers says many are faced with starvation when the unemployment dole ceases.

Some Height.—M. Louis Gamblanc, an aerial engineer, sees no reason why aeroplanes should not reach 45,000 ft. or 6½ miles up.

Brewer's Bequest.—Burnley is to benefit by £6000 a year for scholarships under the will of the late E. S. Massey, a local brewer.

Revival "Cures."—Ability to heal by the power of God is claimed by and for Pastor Jeffreys, the Welsh revivalist, who is very active just now.

Over the Top.—The Archbishop of York urges the Welsh Church to "go over the top" on March 31st for a living wage for the disendowed clergy.

Linguist "Tec."—Detective Inspector Lawrence has just retired from Scotland Yard after 29 years' service. He speaks four languages.

Much Photo'd Beauty.—Lady Diana Cooper, who broke her thigh on Peace night, is now able to walk with the aid of a stick.

Look Out!—Professor Porta, an American astronomer, prophesies disastrous results to the earth from the appearance of a sunspot on December 17th.

Soon Slumped.—War souvenirs are now a drug in the market, and are selling for a few pence in the Paris rag markets.

Prussianism.—The appearance of Hindenburg in Berlin has led to a revival of the old Prussian spirit among the people.

Sudden End.—The Rev. Thomas Dowdeswell, a blind curate of Hull, dropped dead while talking to a friend in the street.

Soldier Shot.—Gunner W.H. Mason, R.F.A., has been found shot dead with a bullet wound in his head at Woolwich Barracks.

Deserved.—George Smellie, a Tottenham public man, has been sentenced to twelve months in prison for ill-treating his daughter.

Golf Gambling.—So much betting goes on at golf matches, that the Royal and Ancient Golf Club are considering how to deal with it.

Can't Work.—Two of the largest rolling mills on Teeside have closed down through truck shortage and several thousand men are idle.

Tricked.—A Spanish Count and Countess, while travelling to New York, found that kindling wood had been substituted for £8,000 worth of jewels in their trunks.

Bare Backs.—An ex-gunner has started business as a tattoo artist in Leith. As a result of bare-back fashions, many girls come to him to have designs tattooed on their shoulders.

Wooden Houses.—About 1000 timber frame houses with asbestos covers are promised within a year by the Aircraft Manufactory Company, now undertaking the work.

Secret of old Age.—Miss Ann Sissons has just reached her hundredth year. Asked for a receipt to prolong life, she says: "Hard work, proverty, good pluck and a contented mind. Don't worry about things, but keep on."

FRESH OUTBREAK IN EGYPT.

BRITISH OFFICER MURDERED BY RIOTERS AT CAIRO.

SECRET MUNITION DUMPS IN GERMANY.

EGYPTIAN RIOTS.

MURDER OF BRITISH OFFICER AT CAIRO.

A telegram from Cairo dated Sunday states that further disturbances occurred on Saturday evening, when a British officer was murdered in the streets. He was shot from behind by one of the mob and died some little time later in hospital. Shots were also fired at British soldiers, one of whom was slightly wounded. No arrests have yet been made.

A lawyer named Abous Hadi and a former judge named Alibey Maher were arrested at Cairo on the 21st and it is stated that Atif Barakat, President of the Cadi school and Zaglul Pasha have also been arrested.

CHURCH DANCING CLASS.

A NECESSITY IN THE PARISH.

At Norwich Licensing Sessions the Rev. John Green, vicar of St. Luke's, New Catton, applied for a music and dancing licence for the Church Hall, Aylsham-road.

The applicant said that in view of the great demand that prevailed for dancing, it had almost of a necessity become a part of the social work in his parish. He had at the present time a parish dancing-class which was open to the parish. The class consisted of 100 members. They met once a week, and his wife and he were present, each night to exercise supervision. As usually happened at a class, the members occasionally wanted a dance in which others might join at Christmas time and on other occasions. He understood that for that purpose there must be a licence. The demand made by the working classes—and his parishioners were of the artisan class—for dancing was astonishing. He thought the Church should supervise it and should take part in providing parish social weekly recreation for the people. The vicar mentioned that there was a professional dancing teacher for his class.

The Bench granted a licence for three months on the understanding that the applicant or his wife would be present.

POLICE WOUNDED.

ATTACKED BY IRISH FARM HANDS.

A serious affair occurred at Waterford on Tuesday, wen a body af farm labourers came into conflict with the police.

On Saturday some of the farmers in the county discharged 100 of their labourers and determined to do their own threshing. While a threshing machine was being taken to the farm of Mr. Joseph Widger, Master of the East Waterford Hounds, it was stopped by a crowd of 300 men. When the police arrived the crowd refused to disperse and pelted the police with stones. A charge was ordered, and the crowd was driven back towards the village of Sennor. Revolver shots were fired, and one of the policemen was shot in the wrist and three others were injured by missiles. Afterwards a quantity of hay and barley belonging to Mr. Widger was set on fire and destroyed, and the six coverts of Mr. Widger's land were also burned. The value of the hay and barley is put down at £4,000.

PROSPEROUS EAST COAST FISHERMEN.

Over one million pounds' worth of herrings has been landed during the present fishing season at Great Yarmouth, a notable record of prosperity.

The total catch has exceeded 430,000 crans, and prices have been, on the average, much higher than the minimum of 45s. per cran.

Fifty-five thousand barrels of cured fish have already been exported, including two cargoes to Danzig. Before the war Germans bought large quantities of herrings at Yarmouth.

BY-ELECTION RESULT.

The by-election at Chester-le-Street, Durham, resulted as follows:

Mr. J. Lawson, Labourite	17,838
Mr. D. Gilmour, National Democratic Party	5,313

In the previous election the Labourite, Mr. J. W. Taylor, was returned unopposed.

SUGGESTED GIFT TO HAIG.

A proposal has been made that steps should be taken to purchase the estate of Bemerside, Berwickshire, for the purpose of presenting it as a national gift to Field Marshal Earl Haig.

Field Marshal Sir Henry Wilson lectured to about a thousand undergraduates at Oxford last night on the future of O.T.C.'s.

SECRET DUMPS.

RUMOURED STORE IN BLACK FOREST.

In the House of Commons Brigadier General Page Croft asked whether the attention of the Lord Privy Seal had been called to the report that large stores of guns, munitions and other supplies, sufficient for a great army, are hidden in the Black Forest in Germany and if so whether he will take steps to see that this matter is cleared up by the Allies.

Mr. Winston Churchill replied: "I have not seen the report referred to, but the information at the disposal of the War Office affords no ground for attaching credence to the statement. As regards the second part of the question, as soon as the Peace Treaty comes into force steps will be taken by the Inter-Allied Commission to secure the execution of its terms.

FATAL DOCK ACCIDENT.

GANG OF MEN FALL FIFTY FEET.

Twenty-six men were involved in an accident which took place on Tuesday at Queen's Dock, Liverpool, and in three instances the injuries received proved fatal. The men were on a gangway connecting two Holt Line steamers, the Ulysses and the Antilochus, when it collapsed and the men and gangway fell a distance of nearly 50ft. into the dock. Some of them struck a barge which was lying between the two vessels and received serious injuries. Others fell into the water and escaped more lightly. They were rescued by means of ropes lowered from the ships and quays. The names of the men killed are Edward Sinnott, a master joiner; Lawrence Macdonald, labourer; and Spillett, a labourer. Five men are lying in a serious condition in the Southern Hospital. Eighteen other men were also treated at the hospital, but were able to proceed to their homes.

SOVIET AND AFGHANS.

COMMERCIAL TREATY UNDER WAY.

It is now known beyond doubt that Surin, the principal Bolshevist emissary at Tashkent, is on his way from that city to Kabul, via Kushk, on a mission to the Amir at Kabul, where he will join Beavin, who is already in Afghanistan. The object of his mission is not clear, but according to reports from Kabul it will relate, among other things, to a commercial treaty which the Bolshevists are negotiating with Afghanistan.

BISHOPRIC FOR BRADFORD.

The foundation of the Bishopric of Bradford was notified by Order in Council in Tuesday's "London Gazette." The parish church of Bradford is to be the cathedral church of the bishopric.

AMERICAN'S SEARCH FOR ENGLISH BRIDE.

Sir Nevil Macready has received a large number of replies from ladies anxious to get into communication with the American gentleman who wrote asking him to try to find an English bride for him. The majority of the replies have been acknowledged, and the letters forwarded to the young man in America, but no further letters will be acknowledged or forwarded.

JUDGE NEVER IN A TUBE.

At the Old Bailey, Judge Atherley Jones remarked: "I have never been in a Tube railway and I never intend to do so."

Mr. Curtis Bennett, K.C.: "I have, my lord. Unfortunately, I cannot afford to take taxis."

The Judge (quickly): "Oh, I never said that!" (Laughter).

WOMAN'S WAR LOSSES.

In a case at the Old Bailey in which Lily Maud Mulock, aged 42 years, was bound over for publishing a libel concerning Mary Flanagan, it was stated that she had lost two sons and nine brothers in the war.

NEW PAYMASTER-GENERAL.

At Wednesday's Privy Council, Sir Tudor Walters was sworn as Paymaster-General, and Sir Charles Elliott, as a member of the Council.

£10,000 A YEAR MEN.

HOW TO OBTAIN A LARGE INCOME.

"How to earn £10,000 a year" was the subject of an address given by Mr. C. F. Higham, M.P., at the Central Hall, Westminster, to the members of the Efficiency Club.

"You cannot earn £10,000 a year by writing letters to Sir Albert Stanley," he said. "Ten thousand-a-year men never write asking for a position. The secret of how to obtain large incomes is to get others to work out your ideas—to have the courage of your convictions—to be able to say "yes" or "no" on the instant, and to stick to your decision.

"Men who can make up their own minds and make up other people's minds are so few that only these few get £10 000 a year or more in business."

Among the pithy words of advice in his breezy address were the following:—

Most healthy men and women were potential earners of £10,000 a year. But they waited for opportunity to knock at the door. Show your employers an intimate capacity for taking pains, and be ready for any question or emergency.

Be careful of your personal appearance. Dress simply and well. Many a man has missed his chance by having a dirty collar.

Look prosperous—act "prosperous," be an optimist. Pessimists never get far.

Be kind—that is a great virtue. Be courteous—it is the cheapest thing in the world, and, being to easy to do, most people don't do it.

Never break your word. The business world is ever on the look out for reliable men.

Sack yourself from the job that does not make you happy to perform it.

Have faith in yourself, or no one else will.

There are three types of business men and women—one, the largest, work for wages; the second for salaries; and the third make income.

"The greatest business task in the world," he concluded, "is the organization and development of the British Empire. Its managing director, David Lloyd George, considering his great capacity, energy, vision and decision, is the poorest paid managing director in the world. He needs a dozen £10,000 a year men to help him.

"But the State, alas, limits his authority for paying for brains to a few thousand a year. His Minister of Labour, one of the most competent men in the kingdom, gets a paltry £2,000 a year—a first-class man on a third-class income. The State must learn to pay its public servants better.

PARCELS FOR TROOPS.

FORWARDING OFFICES TO BE CLOSED.

The Secretary of the War Office announces that, in view of the increased postal facilities now available for the dispatch of gifts and comforts to troops stationed abroad, and the relatively few opportunities which now obtain of dispatching these parcels by troopships, it has been decided to close all military forwarding offices as from December 31 next.

Instructions are therefore being issued to the railway companies that parcels consigned to the military forwarding officer will not be accepted after December 20.

All packages which are now in the hands of the military forwarding officer, or are received on or before December 31, will be dispatched as opportunities occur, but no fixed date of shipment can be guaranteed.

THE WAR NOT YET OVER.

In the Prize Court on Wednesday a case depending on the assumption that the war is over was dismissed on the ground that peace has not been concluded. The President, Sir Henry Duke, said he had not heard of the conclusion of peace. He knew of no Treaty, and the King had not yet made any proclamation. True, there was an Act of Parliament, but his Majesty in Council had yet to declare the date. The Attorney-General said the formalities to satisfy the definition "the conclusion of the present war" had not all been complied with.

AUSTRALIAN SHOT DEAD.

An Australian soldier named Moffatt demanded spirits from a farmer named Piedecq, living at Frucourt, near Amiens, and refused to pay. Piedecq shot the soldier dead. He has just been sentenced to three years' imprisonment by the Somme Assize Court.

MATERIAL UNACCOUNTED FOR.

Special inquiries are being made into a matter raised in a Parliamentary question by Mr. Hogge: "Whether the value of material supplied to Ministry of Munitions contractors on free issue, which has not been accounted for, exceeds £9,000,000?"

HUGHES' ULTIMATUM.

The Australian Premier, Mr. G. Hughes, speaking at Brisbane, declared that the "Nationalist party must carry out my Policy, otherwise I am going out."

An Episcopalian church is to be erected in Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, Montreal, on the wall of which will be inscribed the name of every Canadian soldier who died in the war.

PADRE CHARGED.

LANGUAGE DISLOYAL TO THE KING.

The Reverend Thomas O'Donnell, Chaplain to the Australian Expeditionary Forces, appeared at the Westminster Guildhall on Wednesday morning before a General Court-martial to answer to the charge of using language disloyal to the King. General McGlinn presided. Considerable interest was taken in the proceedings, the court being filled.

Sir Archibald Bodkin and Mr. Vernon Gattie appeared for the prosecution, accused being represented by Mr. Tim Healey, Mr. John Costello and Mr. Patrick Linch. Accused pleaded not guilty.

The finding of the Court will be promulgated in due course.

NO DANGER.

SERBIA NOT ANXIOUS ABOUT D'ANNUNZIO.

The following semi-official note has been issued at Belgrade:—

Our national interests in the Adriatic and on the western frontier have necessitated during the last few days special precautions and protective measures on the part of our Government against the new activities of D'Annunzio and his followers.

In the interval, however, the Government has acquired the strong conviction that there exists no real motive for such anxiety. It has received information that the danger to our interests which is feared by the public generally does not exist and that, on the contrary, the whole question will be shortly dealt with by the Peace Conference and a solution found, which, it is said, will satisfy our legitimate aspirations.

The Government is, however, maintaining its precautionary measures in view of the provocative character of D'Annunzio's actions.

SUMMARY COURT.

WHOLESALE ROBBERY FROM THE N.A.C.B.

Peter Kehren and Peter Schumacher were employed as labourers by the N.A.C.B. at Bonn Tor railhead.

Wholesale robberies took place there and when a watch was kept one morning, Kehren was seen to place a box of 10,000 cigarettes, value 3,925 marks, on a private cart which Schumacher had in waiting.

The lawyer who appeared before the Summary Court for Schumacher said his client had a good character, but the German police record showed that he had served thirteen years in gaol.

Schumacher was sentenced to six months imprisonment and Kehren to four.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

WILL GERMANY BE INVITED TO JOIN FORTHWITH?

The Paris correspondent of "The New York Sun" has cabled a sensational story to the effect that—

A movement appears to be under way in British circles to invite Germany to enter the League of Nations immediately as an offset to the failure of the United States to give its adhesion to the Covenant.

Lord Robert Cecil is said to be in favour of such a course (adds the correspondent), and with him are some of the foremost British advocates of the League.

WHEN RENTS WILL BE RAISED

With a view to dispelling the doubt which exists as to the date when an increase of 10 per cent. on standard rents will become permissible under the increase of Rent Act, Major Lane Fox (C.L., Barkston Ash) has asked a question in the House of Commons; and the Attorney-General, replying in writing, states that the period will commence on the expiration of six months from the official date of the "termination of the war," but the landlord will have to give to the tenant four clear weeks' notice in writing of his intention to increase the rent.

MEAT PROFITEER'S HEAVY FINE.

A Salisbury butcher was fined £440 yesterday for overcharging for meat. His shop manager was fined £44 and sentenced in addition to one month's hard labour.

MOTOR PIONEER DEAD.

The death is announced from Paris of Henri Deutsch de la Meurthe, one of the founders of the Automobile Club, President of the Aero Club of France, and a strong supporter of French aviation.

CHILI BUYS MINELAYERS.

The Government of Chili has purchased for the Chilian Navy six minelayers. Four 700-ton vessels were acquired from Germany and two 300-ton boats, from Great Britain.

The Prince of Wales reached Halifax, Nova Scotia, on Monday. In the evening he attended a banquet and afterwards was present at a State ball at the Government House.

SCHOOL CHILDREN.

COST OF MEDICAL CARE AND TREATMENT.

The Central Care Sub-Committee has submitted to the L.C.C. Education Committee a report providing for the medical, dental, and nursing treatment of 209,000 children during the year beginning April 1 next at a cost of £71,815.

The cases which it is estimated will have to be dealt with are classified as follows:—Eyes, 31,645; ears, nose, and throat, 15 845; ringworm, 2,430 (the cost of these together is given as £18,734); minor ailments, 45,700, costing £16,159; dental cases, 113,500, costing £34,431. The cost of remedial exercise centres is put down at £355, and special allowance for maintenance at £2,095.

The sub-committee say that the proposals submitted may be regarded as practically covering the ground so far as eye, ear, nose, and throat defects and ringworm are concerned, but further facilities will be required for dental treatment and minor ailments.

TRAM HOLD-UP.

TWO CONSCIENCES AND A REVOLVER.

Two men—James Trower (30) and John P. Trower (22)—were charged, at Tottenham with using insulting words, and the former also with carrying a revolver without a licence.

They were riding on a tram on Monday evening, it was said in evidence, when an inspector asked to see their tickets. They said they had a conscientious objection to getting their hands cold in that way.

After some words with them the inspector left the car, but prisoners determined to start in pursuit.

With the elder brother brandishing a huge revolver they started on their quest, it is alleged, holding all the trams up to find their quarry.

At last they came upon him, but hostilities did not commence, the police putting an end to their exploits.

Each was fined 40s., and James Trower was ordered to pay an extra £3 3s. for having a revolver without a licence.

PRISONERS ON STRIKE.

FRIENDS THREATENED WITH A BATH.

"Red" prisoners awaiting deportation at Ellis Island Immigration Station, New York Harbour, have gone on strike. They particularly insist that restrictions relating to visiting friends be removed. These friends aided the "Reds" and refused to leave the island; but when informed that if they remained the night they would have to take an antiseptic bath they hurriedly flocked to the last boat for New York.

EXPLOSIVE COAL.

WIDOW KILLED IN HER OWN KITCHEN.

A scuttleful of coals thrown on the kitchen fire by Elizabeth Siddle, a widow, of Murton, Co. Durham, immediately exploded. The room was wrecked, and Mrs. Siddle died within a few minutes.

Asleep in an adjoining room, a lodger had a fortunate escape.

This is the third case of explosive coal which has occurred during the last few weeks, and in this instance it is thought possible that powder remaining unexploded after blasting had become mixed with the coal.

BOOM IN COTTON.

SYNDICATE BUYS SIX BIG MILLS.

It is reported from Manchester that six cotton spinning mills at Ashton—namely, the Atlas, Rock, Cedar, Tudor, Texas, and Minerva, containing half a million spindles, have been purchased by a syndicate composed of cotton men.

SEAPLANE CREW'S PRIZE MONEY.

Officers and crew of H.M.S. Leven and the crew of H.M. Seaplane 8695 have been awarded bounty in the Prize Court for sinking two German submarines in the North Sea. The seaplane sank U C 72 with a single bomb on September 22, 1917, and the Leven accounded for U B 35 on January 26, 1918.

The following communiqué was issued over the signature of Mr. O'Grady and Litvinoff. "The Joint Commission met to-day (25th) to discuss the exchange of prisoners and repatriation of civilians. The whole conference was occupied with a preliminary general discussion of the points at issue."

No formalities occurred in connection with the meeting. Mr. Grant Watson, British Charge d'Affaires, is not taking part in the conference.

Litvinoff was met by Mr. O'Grady on the landing stage and after the customary greetings they drove together in a motor-car to the hotel in which the British authorities had taken rooms for Litvinoff.

BLUNT LANGUAGE.

MAYOR WHO WAS MORE FORCIBLE THAN POLITE.

Complaints about the conduct and language of the Mayor of Ealing on the local War Pensions Committee were made at the adjourned inquiry by the Ministry of Pensions into complaints made by the Ealing Town Council. Unsympathetic treatment to discharged sailors and soldiers by the Ealing local War Pensions Committee was alleged, while the War Pensions Committee complained of Councillor A. W. Bradford, the Mayor, in his capacity as a member of the Committee.

Mr. A. H. Proctor, chairman of the War Pensions Committee, giving evidence, said that Mr. Bradford did good work on the Committee as an almoner making payments to dependents, but his conduct in committee was frequently very objectionable and offensive and in his remarks not only to the chairman but to the secretary and sometimes to the women members of the Committee. At a meeting on March 27, when he was ruled out of order, he told the witness that he was a "damned rotten chairman, that he did not like the truth, that the damned Committee was not worth a nut, or its damned women members."

It was stated that on another occasion Mr. Bradford expressed his surprise that so much sense should come from such an elephantine mass of humanity—referring to another member of the Committee.

Continuing his evidence, Mr. Proctor said that last June three women clerks made a complaint in writing to the witness, protesting against the behaviour and language used by Mr. Bradford and against the insinuation that members of the Committee were feathering their nests with money that should be paid to applicants.

At a meeting held to consider Mr. Bradford's conduct one of the clerks, Miss Tucker, said she refused to repeat the words she had heard, but he called the secretary a damned liar, a skunk, and a shirker from the Army. She said his language was worse than she had stated. She had been in a military hospital for four years and had never heard such language there. (Laugater.)

Mr. Walter Tyson, secretary of the Ealing War Pensions Committee, said Mr. Bradford used generally to come into the pensions office on Saturday morning. He abused the members of the staff and his manner was most offensive, especially to the women members of the staff. Practically every other word was the word "damn."

The inquiry was adjourned until Thursday.

EX-CROWN PRINCE.

IMPENDING LIBEL ACTION.

The ex-Crown Prince's manner of life is to be the subject of an impending libel case, according to a Frankfort telegram to the "Vossische Zeitung." The Socialist Deputy, Herr Sinzheimer, is taking proceedings as a lawyer for the Socialist paper, "Die Volksstimme," against the German National Deputy, Herr Lattmann. Herr Marquardt, the editor of the "Volksstimme," speaking at a German national meeting at Fulda on Sept. 30, said that Herr Lattmann's Monarchist schemes aimed at setting up the Crown Prince as ruler. In comparison with him, the speaker continued, his father was a veritable hero and an intellectual giant. Dog training was not the most innocent employment of the Crown Prince in the Etappe region. Herr Lattmann termed this a base lie, and demands that Herr Marquardt should take proceedings against him in order to bring out the truth.

SUBSTITUTE FOR BLOOD.

The French Academy of Science yesterday heard a report read by Professor Quenu on behalf of Dr. Bartnelemy on a new method of reviving persons on the point of death through loss of blood.

A solution of gum arabic and sea-salt is claimed to be as efficacious as infusion with new blood. Dr. Bartnelemy experimented on six dogs which had lost more than two-thirds of their blood and five of these were revived. The same process carried out on a man badly wounded in the war, whose life was despaired of, was a complete success.

FRENCH FAVOUR GERMAN MUSIC.

At a referendum of habitués of classical concerts at Marseilles on the question of the performance of Wagner's works there was a majority of 610 votes in favour of Wagner. Wagner selections will only be played at the end of the programme, to give the anti-Wagner people an opportunity of leaving.

FAMOUS SINGER'S FORTUNE.

Madame Adelina Patti who died on September 27th, left estate valued at £116,337. By her will, dated March, 17, 1917, she made several bequests to relatives and to her servants, and left the rest of her property to her husband, Baron Olaf Cederström.

TWICE ROUND THE CLOCK.

The committee appointed under the chairmanship of Major J. L. Baird, C.M.G., D.S.O., M.P., Parliamentary Under-Secretary at the Home Office, to consider and report on the 24-hour system of expressing time, held its preliminary meeting yesterday.

COMRADESHIP.

When the Armistice was considerably younger than at present, the word demobilization had a magic sound. Weary with five years of fighting the old Army looked upon the opportunity of severing their acquaintance with their temporary profession as a thing to be sought above all others.

They had been ready enough to answer the call and take up the rifle in place of the hammer or the pen, but now the danger had passed and they were eager to "turn their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks." The bitter day of battle having ended, their one consuming desire was to return to peaceful pursuits and endeavour to forget the cruel memories associated with the years spent in khaki.

Thousands as we know, realised their ambition and returned to civilian life. But with what result?

For the first time they discovered that they had left something of great value behind; that there was a pleasing feature of Army life of which they failed to find a counter part in the life to which they had gone. In short they missed the comradeship and fellowship which exists in every unit in the British Army. Their hearts craved for old chums, for the influence of the firm friendships established and cemented when shells and bombs were falling and bullets whistling. In the everyday round of business they discovered that friendship had a different meaning and lacked the sincerity and depth of army attachments.

When death was always a real possibility, men had no compunction in baring their souls to each other and in exchanging the most intimate confidences. It required no great instinct to fathom a man's character; the good points and the bad came to the surface for all to read.

And now all that is past and a return has been made to the world of make-believe and camouflage, where a man's real self is concealed beneath an impenetrable shell.

Will it not be thus for us? Shall we not find when our turn for demobilization comes that we shall sacrifice as well as gain.

THE EVER OPEN DOOR.

One does not commonly associate the Orderly Room with the wooing of the Muse, nor would one expect to find the staff breaking forth into verse, but from observations made in the Orderly Room of a certain Institution not a hundred miles from the Dom, one is compelled to face the fact that the clerks therein have undoubtedly been guilty of such a weakness.

Apparently the sole burden of their lay is the fact that, owing to some slackness on the part of certain German workmen in the past, the doors of all the offices need some considerable effort before they can be persuaded to remain closed, and the various callers who inflict themselves upon the jaded staff in the course of a long working day, find it easier to leave the doors open until they are prepared to make use of them on their outward journeys, and even then they do not exert themselves particularly in the direction of preserving the grateful warmth which has persuaded them to linger over their visits.

This, then, is the cause. Now for the result:—

The Orderly Room bears the following effort, doubtless compiled by its Poet-laureate:—

"O, Caller, may we crave your kind indulgence,
In assisting us to keep this office warm?
'Twill only cost the very slightest effort,
And will keep our working hours from threat of storm.
We do not know the district that you hail from,
Nor the brogue that comes most quickly to your lip,
But we think you'll render us this little service,
If in the vulgar tongue we couch our tip.
Of course, we might set forth our exhortation,
In the separate idioms of every Corps,
But, instead of doing that, we will give the whole thing pat,
In requesting you to "SHUT THIS BLINKING DOOR."

The R.S.M's door is adorned with the following:—

"You may come in fear and trembling,
Or with front as bold as brass,
According as your mission serves
But well — I'll let that pass,
There's just one thing I ask you,
Before you outward roll,
That piece of wood we call the door,
JUST FIX IT IN ITS HOLE".

On the Demob. office door is this:—

"This is the Demob. office,
Come in, if you desire,
And while we fix your papers up,
Sit down beside the fire.
But when we've done our level best,
Just let us make this clear,
You'll find you've got a door at home,
JUST LEARN TO CLOSE ONE HERE."

Now for the Registrar's office door:—

"Here lives the wily Registrar,
Who keeps your records clear,
He knows everything about you—
How you came to be here,
'Tis all described on documents,
Which hadn't better stray.
SO, WILL YOU KINDLY CLOSE THIS DOOR.
In case they BLOW AWAY?"

It would appear that nobody has yet been bold enough to deface the C.O's door with an effusion of this kind, but a careful search reveals a tiny scrap of paper still adhering to the woodwork. Nobody, of course, really knows what was on it, but the Senior Poet has made a guess, perhaps a pretty shrewd one, for he, in his devotions before the shrine of the Muse, knows no law. At any rate this is his suggestion:—

"Here sits the Grand Panjandrum,
Whose dread command is law;
Approach on bended knee and seek
What Justice holds in store.
Perchance you'll come off scathless,
If his pity you implore,
But may gracious heaven help you
If you FAIL TO CLOSE THIS DOOR".

THE AHR VALLEY.

Much has been written of the glory of the Rhine, but in the Ahr Valley one seems to get the true spirit of the Rhineland. The tiny villages thrown down among the hills, the wonderful vineyards and the people who regard us through sleepy eyes as something apart, yet human.

Village upon village unfolds itself before our eyes — Ahrweiler, Mariental, and others each with its own separate charm, distinctive, yet one of a great whole, like specimen pearls strung on a single string — the Ahr.

Mysterious mountains come to life reflected in the ripple of the stream, tiny fish flash among the stones; white houses and stone bridges fraternise at the edge of the water. The dark ruins of an old schloss command the district for miles. Great crags carved by the Master Hand, assume strange shapes, and threaten our path, while on either hand row upon row of purple grapes ripen under the sunny sky. Far ahead a mountain blocks our way, but ever the lure of the road leads us on.

Two oxen drawing a creaking wooden cart filled with wine barrels attract our attention. Down in the stream a woman with skirts tucked up above her knees is washing other of these wine barrels. A small white kitten chasing an invisible foe runs out into the sunshine, sees us, and retreats, comes out to investigate, bites us, and becomes friendly, thus finding the English are not so bad as they were painted, and finally adopts us as property sent by Providence to provide some small excitement on a sleepy afternoon.

We tear ourselves away to have a meal in a small beer garden; black bread, eggs, potatoes and a bottle of wine give us courage to tackle a stiff climb up a hill side. The stone crags suffer our presence as something too puerile to notice. The ruins of a grand old schloss frown down upon us; we read how it was captured by the French, retaken by the Germans, and so on through the middle ages, until finally the French dismantled it.

We sit and picture the fierce fighting up the seemingly inaccessible slope, the heavy stones hurtling down, the loss of life.

To-day the vineyards have entered the very courtyard of the schloss, and so we turn, leaving it to sleep on in its solitary splendour.

Sunset flames its way through the hills turning the Ahr to many colours. Night, mysterious and shrouding, is upon us, dim hills and tiny lights reflected in the black waters of the Ahr.

Here a tiny village seems to rival the stars against the purple night, there an old schloss carved in ebony against its background of stars sinks behind us, and Cologne with its myriad lights beckons us home. NORA ESSEX.

ACTIVE SERVICE.

No passengers in the boat, but every man pulling his weight. That is what we want, in khaki or out of it. The active service of our country and our kind does not end with demobilization; nor while we wear the uniform does it consist merely in Army Routine.

Our boat is either on the stream of the habits, the influences, the tendencies of the day and we are either drifting with the current, circling idly in some eddy of a backwater, or manfully putting our weight into progress in some definite direction. Which, and if the latter, whither?

Where do we wish the boat to go? And are we content with wishing, or are we half hearted passengers, content to be directed and impelled by sturdier comrades? The "cox" allotted to us must steer—discipline, business, government, experience, all teach us that a boatful of coxswains each intent on steering will have no way on and will promptly drift to disaster.

But most of us must pull, pull with a will, — and pull together if we want to get the best out of our individual efforts and to forge ahead. And we must put our hearts into it as well as our backs.

Agreed? Right! Then my point is — away with indifference — indifference about everything at all. Everything matters. Everything is interesting. Everything affects our interests and the interests of the community which serves us and which we serve if we have any right to exist. A man must take his side; and he must play for it too. Therefore he must know all he can and find out all he can about the game. And if he is worth anything he will not be content to be a spectator, but will put himself into the game, and be doing something for it.

Are the smartness, discipline and tone of our own little crowd up to what we would like to boast of, we could have our standard by merely wishing? If not who more at fault than those who by inaction assent to the lower grade. Is our own physical and mental state as we would like to have it described by those whose opinion we most value? If not what are we actually doing about it?

Is our knowledge of things generally the knowledge we would prefer to have as equipment? If not, are we strenuously acquiring that knowledge?—Are the affairs of the world, and especially of our own country being managed to all appearance perfectly? If not, are we preparing ourselves to judge soberly that we may lack art personally for their betterment? After all, we who live in the world, make the conditions, just as we in the main make ourselves. And everything matters. Also to-day does not come again.

Are we still agreed? Very well.

Now the secret of life you will agree is to be keenly interested in everything. How interesting one only learns, after one has got a little way into it. Isn't that your experience? One must of course give one's main energies to one thing or set of things. But everything else that is happening in the world is directly or indirectly of importance to us and matters to those who matter to us.

Besides who wants to look out of only one of the many windows of life? There is so much to see through the others and life is measured by its contents, not its length. It is a scientific truth that the condition of the maintenance of life is its expansion. The moment that ceases, decay and death are approaching. Cessation of development is the beginning of old age, so seek for improvement, learn, develop and you will live long, but die "young." Those whom the gods love die young—that is, not in their early years, but, at whatever age, in the constant youth which is the greatest gift of the gods and which is maintained by being interested.

The man who is bored with life ought to be electrocuted (he would have at least one thrilling moment!) There is so much to know, so much to do that there is no time to be bored.

Let us, while dealing with the things we know so that they shall become the things we want, search also for the truth about things we ought to know. And let us search impartially and disdain labels, which are generally a cowardly substitute for judgment.

It is surprising how common is the habit of substituting a label for an argument or for an examination of another man's views. "Yah! pessimist!" or "Oh! you are a—this, that or the other" is the refuge of the feeble minded who feel that they have neither the knowledge nor the wit to refute truths that may disturb them. Epithets are cheap, but they are worthless and advertise the weak mentality and the ignorance of those who resort to them and who dare not venture out upon the sea of reason, being neither swimmers nor sailors.

None of us of course would ever condemn ourselves by such self-revelation. We will rather examine for ourselves everything, for everything is interesting. And in everything that touches humanity we are concerned and must take our part as a result of intelligent decision. For we are always on Active Service for ourselves and for humanity. O.W.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX.

Our Readers' Varied Views.

THE ARMY AND RELIGION.

Sir,—"C.K.P." re the "Army and Religion" is very much to the point. Does he however tarnish all the different denominations with the same brush when he speaks of, "The half-hearted watered-down religion preached by the divided sects our country is plagued with?"

Is he aware of the fact that there is now and always has been in existence "one fold with one shepherd preaching one faith."? That phrase uttered by our Divine Master still holds good. — "Seek and ye shall find." K.B.S.

Sir,— I quite agree with "C.P.K." when he says that owing to the various dogmas taught, doubt, and not faith, is bred.

The average soldier is a good fellow in many respects and makes one of the best of pals. He has in so many cases made the supreme sacrifice without ever showing that he really understood the reason why; yet I maintain that he is religious in so far as he—like all men—contains a spirit which is not insensible to the claims of Christianity.

Now I'm not a padre, but I do believe this—and it is emphasized all the more by experience—that when Christianity is put plainly and simply to a man as it is contained in the Gospel narrative, he will not fail to be influenced and ultimately convinced that Christianity is the only remedy for all the troubles and trials he has to bear.

He is like a ship tossed about, unable to find an anchorage.

Let the Gospel message be faithfully proclaimed, and questions as to the nature of God and His attributes will fit into their proper places. I, for one, have proved the value of religion and can speak from personal experience. E. B. B.

DO WE READ TOO MUCH?

Sie,—Does "Bookman" never read fiction that he should condemn that form of mental recreation?

Can you imagine any one after a stiff route march sitting down to a dinner of "food for thought and washing it down with other peoples thoughts?" No. I hold that a certain amount of time should be given up to fiction, else by the time demobilization comes our way our young soldiers would think like men of seventy. FICTION.

Sir,—Your correspondents all seem to possess the reading craze and to go to the extreme. Some say it is "impossible to read too much." That was the whole point of my first letter. It is just because of this over-reading that I wrote.

People merely absorb the printed word and don't use their brains to think things out for themselves. Much reading acts like a sedative. You take in the ideas and thoughts of others—some remain but most are forgotten.

People thought, and thought deeply, long before this flood of books appeared, but to-day I am conviced they don't think. It is so much easier to read what someone else has said.

This is not only so with the greatest problems but it is the same with ordinary politics. A man reads what some newspaper says and accepts that view. He doesn't bring his own reasoning to bear on it.

I didn't condemn reading, as some of your correspondents seem to think. It was merely the excess of it; and that there is far too much reading done, and for too little thinking, I still maintain is the case, in spite of all the platitudes and quotations your correspondents may bring forward. RURAL.

"WASH AND BRUSH UP."

Sir,—I am always surprised when I go into either of the N.A.C.B. Officers' Clubs in Cologne to observe the scanty ablution facilities provided. The Annexe is the more deficient in this respect, the provision comprising cold water, soap occasionally, and soiled towels.

The "Earwig" is rather better, a very polite attendant making the best of the materials at his disposal. There, one certainly has hot water, soap always and clean towels, but hair bushes and nail brushes are rare luxuries.

Surely a little money might be expended on the purchase of decent toilet requisites? ABLUTION.

WIVES IN CLUBS.

Sir,—I am afraid many of the charming ladies now with us in Rhineland do not realise their privileges. For instance two ladies were sitting alone at a table in the tearoom at an officers' club during the course of an afternoon dance. They watched the proceedings disconsolately and a gallant officer of Field rank had the temerity to approach and take a seat at the same table.

He was received with freezing glances, and later, when he attempted to introduce himself, the tongues of both women lashed him unmercifully.

Women visitors should not lose sight of the fact that every uniformed officer is a member and, as such, feels it his duty to be courteous to any fellow member's fair relative who may be invited. BACHELOR.

MEHLEM ON THE RHINE

At Mehlem on the Rhine.
'Tis there the river beauty starts.
'Tis there the level lowland parts
From "castled crags" and Nature's arts.

At Mehlem on the Rhine
I sit upon the riverside,
And watch the waters' endless glide
To join the sea's eternal tide.

At Mehlem on the Rhine
The Drachenfels in beauty rise,
And smiling back at sunny skies,
The white-walled Königswinter lies.

At Mehlem on the Rhine
The happy, happy hours go by;
In heavenly peace the hours go by
And I could live, and I could die
At Mehlem on the Rhine.

PUZZLE AND PEBBLES.

Famous Forward's effort to solve vexed Problem.

By "Tynesider."

It was a breezy winter's morning and the wind sweeping in from the sea cut one like a knife. It was at Whitley Bay the famous Northern health resort, a splendid spot in summer, but in winter, ugh! Strolling along a sheltered part of the promenade I came across him, and let me whisper it, he bore a name, which dare I mention it, would cause thoughts to fly at once to Internationals and great games on the "soccer" field. But to proceed, his face wore a worried look and as he engaged in his task of moving about (as if, at a game of chess) a number of pebbles laid out at his feet, exclamations, such as "No! won't do," "That's wrong" and others, containing words not to be found in dictionaries, burst from his lips.

Seductive Smile.

A sweet young thing, with a dazzling display of hose, and a smile an angel might envy, bade him a delightfully seductive "Good morning." But without lifting his eyes from his task, he only grunted a non-committal "Is it?" in reply. Next came a terrier which evidently thought he was about to throw a stone for its benefit. It darted up with a shrill bark and managed to upset the carefully arranged pebbles. Then followed a tirade such as I have never heard the like of. The terrier and all its ancestors were consigned to a warmer climate than that obtaining at the moment and it scampered off, its tail between its legs, a sadder, if not wiser, quadruped.

The pebbles were again carefully arranged and the worker proceeded with his task.

The Problem Solved.

After a few more minutes study he suddenly kicked the pebbles in all directions and with a final "Got it" raised his eyes from off the ground.

Thereupon I ventured a remark. "Seems a bit of a puzzle," I began. "It is," was the grim reply, "but I've solved it. This bit of study will help me to outwit a master mind" and with a polite "Good morning" he moved away.

* * *

The following afternoon I saw a well-known team oppose Newcastle United at St. James' Park. I was particularly interested in the movements of a famous forward—the man of the beach. Despite obvious efforts to neutralise, the tactics which have made McCracken famous, he was time and again pulled up for "Offside" and as I left the ground after the match I could not help but think that "the master mind had outwitted the student" and that the solution arrived at had been far off the mark.

AN IMPROVED SIDE.

18th G.H.Q Reserve M.T. Coy. 1; 36th C.C.S. 3.

These teams met at Rhenania Sports Platz on Wednesday, the 36th C.C.S. winning an interesting and well contested game by three goals to one. The C.C.S. opened the attack, Nicholson putting in an excellent shot which was finely saved by Dearsley. Play then waged from end to end, Turner eventually giving the visitors the lead with a capital shot; the same player added a second goal shortly afterwards.

Although two goals behind, the M.T. played up in commendable fashion, Phillips, especially, showing good form. There was no further score before the interval.

Their only Point.

During the second half, play continued to be of an exciting nature. Coleman was always a source of danger and eventually notched the visitors third point. Following this, the M.T. forwards succeeded in eluding their opponents defenders and registered their only goal.

The 36th C.C.S. deserved their success, their forward play being a great improvement upon that shown in their previous matches. There was no better defender than Lewis, who, throughout, played sound and convincing football. Hilton also did well.

For the losers, Dearsley, in spite of the three goals against him, played a good game, while Hill was a clever half-back. The forwards lacked cohesion, Phillips being the outstanding player in the line.

THE ARMY TEAM.

Against Northampton at the Queen's Club, West Kensington, to-morrow, the Army will be represented by:—

Lieut. R. M. Welchman; Major E. G. W. Harrison, Lieut. G. C. Scholfield S.C.M, MacKintosh, and Lieut. H. L. V. Day; Drummer Gumbley and Lieut. P. E. R. Baker-Jones; and (selected from) Capt. A. H. Maciwaine, Capt. Hedderwick, C.S.M. I. Jones, Major P. H. Lawless, Major W. A. Roderick, Capt. J. F. Stone, Capt. W. R. C. Penny, Lieut. G. Young, Capt. L. H. Kippon, and Capt. G. H. C. Pennycook.

SPURS' PROFIT AND LOSS.

The 21st annual report of the directors of the Tottenham Hotspur F.C. states that the club assisted in realising over £1,500 for charities through the matches in the London Combination and other games.

The profit and loss account for 1918-19 shows a credit balance of £3,721, an eminently satisfactory state of affairs. The total assets of the club are shown to be £37,689, and, excluding £1,950 reserved for reinstatements, there is a credit balance of £16,669.

STANDING ROOM—£5/5s.

There will be no seats on sale on the night of the great boxing match (Carpentier v. Beckett) at the Holborn Stadium, December 4.

To-day Mr. Cochran will commence at the Holborn Stadium the sale of standing room at five guineas per ticket. Only a limited number of these tickets will be sold, and each purchaser will be guaranteed a good view.

OLYMPIC GAMES.

Stadium Events Limited to Three Weeks.

ADDITIONAL ATHLETICS.

It was decided at a meeting of the British Olympic Council after consultation with the various governing bodies of sport in the United Kingdom, to ask the Belgian Olympic Committee for the following modifications in their draft programme:—

(a) The limitation of the Stadium events to a period of three weeks, from August 20 to September 10.

(b) A considerable reduction (varying with different sports) in the number of entries allowed.

(c) The addition to the athletic programme of:—

1. A steeplechase of 3,000 metres.
2. A ten miles cross-country run.
3. A twenty miles road walk, and the omission of bomb-throwing.

(d) The addition to the swimming programme of the following events for women:—

1. 300 metres.
2. Fancy diving.

(e) The addition to the wrestling programme of catch-as-catch-can wrestling (Lutte Libre).

(f) The addition to the shooting programme of:—

1. Miniature rifle shooting.
2. Revolver shooting.
3. Running deer shooting.

(g) In the cycling programme the fixing of the distance for the road race at 200 kilometres, and the addition of the following track events:—

1,000 metres.
2,000 metres tandems.
4,000 metres pursuit race (teams).
100 kilometres with motor-pacing.

(n) The addition to the lawn tennis programme of ladies' doubles.

Various technical arrangements and regulations for the conduct of different sports were also suggested on the initiative of the Amateur Boxing Association, the National Rifle Association, and the Lawn Tennis Association.

WELL MATCHED.

Beckett and Carpentier Physically Contrasted.

In view of the tremendous interest attaching to the Beckett-Carpentier fight on Dec. 4th, the following comparison will be of interest.

Beckett, tremendously strong and energetic, works hard and long and sleeps correspondingly hard and long when in training, as he is now; Carpentier, just as physically and mentally alert, is differently constituted, and therefore requires a different regimen. He is comparatively light-framed, and being as fit now as it is good for him to be at this date, it is neither wise nor necessary that he should give himself up to arduous work in the gymnasium.

He is quite unlike the traditional Frenchman of highly excitable temperament. Carpentier, indeed, might well pose as a Britisher of the most phlegmatic type, unemotional of mood and Sphinx-like of face.

Ideal Temperament.

It is an admirable—the ideal—temperament for a boxer to possess, and to carry into the ring with him, as Carpentier does, when he enters it to box. It is the one thing which Bombardier Wells has not or which, if he does possess any measure of it, he leaves outside the ring. Wilde has the right temperament; so have Beckett and Goddard.

In other respects, besides temperament, Beckett and Carpentier are greatly akin. Physically indeed, one would say they are ideally matched—in age, in height, and development—and after noting all the details of the table of physical comparison set out below one will have to see the two men together stripped to understand how it is that Beckett has so great an advantage as a stone in weight.

100 TO 1 WINNER.

Weyhill Trainer Carries off Three Events at Newbury.

AUNT ANNA FINISHES ALONE.

Jumping opened at Newbury in beautiful weather on Wednesday. There was a large attendance. The outstanding feature of the day was the remarkable success of the Weyhill stable, F. Hartigan, who carried off three events, the Juvenile Hurdle, the Novices 'Chase and the Berks Hurdle. Details:—

Findon 'Chase:—1, Aunt Anna (6 to 4 on) was the only horse to finish the course.

Juvenile Hurdle:—1, Young Lover (13 to 8 on); 2, Krooner (8 to 1); 3, Silver Doctor (5 to 2). Four ran.

Novices 'Chase:—1, Salt Spray (7 to 1); 2, Toad Stone (5 to 4); 3, Tally Ho (4 to 1). Twelve ran.

Berks Hurdle:—1, Minstrel (9 to 4); 2, Garryvoe (7 to 1); 3, Blanco (8 to 1). Seven ran.

Hants Hurdle:—1, Somerville (5 to 4): 2, Ingoe (100 to 6); 3, Toy Boat (100 to 6). Seventeen ran Open 'Chase:—1, Tempus Fugit (100 to 1); 2, Taffy Fuss (10 to 1); 3, Everyman (4 to 1). Five ran.

BIG TEAM OF JUMPERS.

W. Payne, the steeplechase jockey, is getting a big team of jumpers together at Farthinstone, Northants, and besides the fifteen horses he has already under his care, Lieut-Colonel C. M. Jickling is sending him Simon's Glory, Whizz-Bang, and Simon's Luck to be trained for their engagements. W. Payne's brother, R. Payne, has also a big string at Weedon, which is about six or seven miles from Farthinstone.

SAPPER'S SUCCESS.

No. 9 Football Competition Prize-winner.

SURPRISES ALLOWED FOR.

"As on previous occasions," writes our football representative, "I found the winner of our Football Competition No. 9 in possession of the knowledge that he had submitted the successful coupon, before I made his acquaintance and delivered the cheque

"Sapper Owen informed me that he was expecting my arrival, indeed had been counting on winning the competition since he had noticed the results of the matches in Tuesday's edition. I gathered that he has been a competitor since the commencement of the popular feature and had sent in efforts each week. Last week he submitted three coupons, on one of which he gave only three correct forecasts, another, two, and on the winning effort eleven.

Odd Coupon Wins.

When I inquired how he accounted for giving correctly so many surprise results, he explained that he filled in two coupons on current form and on the other allowed for what he termed "form-upsetting surprises." That this system, if one can call it that, paid, is plainly evident.

Owen hails from Manchester, and, while a follower of the principal "soccer" teams, he is more particularly interested in the fortunes of the Northern Union code fifteens. He has once previously succeeded in securing a football competition prize and on that occasion shared the prize-money offered by a Sunday journal.

Asked what he intended to do with the award, he replied that he was expecting to be demobilized next week and in civilian life he would find plenty of uses for it."

"RUGBY IS NOW IN FULL SWING."

THE PANTHER.

Greatest Disappointment of the Season.

The flat racing season just ended was, as so often happens, a disastrous one to the reputation of certain horses. The greatest sufferer in this respect was The Panther.

It will never be forgotten, that The Panther was offered for sale in the autumn of his juvenile career, not because his owner desired to part with him, but because of the insistent demand for a price to be named. Sir Alec Black became so tired of all this that he determined to give everybody a chance to buy his colt in open market. Naturally he stipulated for a stiff reserve, and if most people were, so to speak, rendered breathless when the amount was announced as 40,000gs., this at least served the purpose of putting a period to the unsolicited demand for a horse whose owner had no desire to sell.

Fame and Disgrace.

How The Panther, at a time when he was supposed to be nothing like at his best, won the Two Thousand Guineas, and how later on he utterly disgraced himself in the Derby as well as in the Irish Derby and Champion Stakes, is a story too well known to need relating at this juncture.

That he is a wonderfully good-looking colt is beyond question, while his breeding is unimpeachable, but for the fact that his dam was, to put it mildly, an exceedingly "flighty" mare. Possibly, nay probably, The Panther inherits very largely the idiosyncrasies of his female parent; but even if this must be conceded, his rapid descent from first-class rank to something approaching mediocrity is not entirely accounted for.

LADY SWIMMER'S RECORD.

At Liverpool on Tuesday evening, Miss Hilda Dand, of the Westminster Ladies' Swimming Club, established a new amateur ladies' long plunge record, covering sixty-six feet, 6½ inches. She beat the previous record, held by herself, by 1½ inches.

LADIES' GOLF.

Rhine Army Officers' Club Competitions.

Considerable interest is being displayed in connection with the ladies' golf meeting which is announced to take place on the Club links, Rodenkirchen, on Thursday, December 4th.

Two prizes are to be presented by the Club for the best scratch and handicap scores respectively, in the first round of a medal competition over 18 holes, while in the second round there will be a sweepstake of ten marks (18 holes) against bogey. In this, handicaps will be limited to 20. Details may be seen in our advertising columns.

CRICKET IN AFRICA.

Gregory Bowls Well Against S.A. Eleven.

A delayed Johannesburg message states that on the Wanderers' Ground on the 21st inst., the Australian Imperial Forces cricket team commenced a match against the South African eleven.

The home team batted first and had scored 50 for two wickets when play had to be suspended for some hours owing to rain.

On resuming, the South Africans carried their total to 117 for eight at which point, stumps were drawn. The principal scores were:

Zulch c and b Gregory	22
Hearne, c Oldfield b Collins	18
Rands b Gregory	10
Nourse not out	39
Cooler b Collins	2
Ward b Collins	5
J. Blanckenberg c Gregory b Collins	0
Davie c Murray b Gregory	1
A. N. Other b Gregory	16
Elsworthy not out	1

SPORT IN A NUTSHELL.

Yorkshire C.C.

Yorkshire County Cricket Club will have a full programme next season, and all the players who helped to win the championship this year will be available.

Cambridge Rugby Captain.

J. M. C. Lewis has been elected captain of Cambridge University Rugby XV. for next Term. and A. R. Trubshaw hon. secretary.

A New Name.

At the annual general meeting of the Old Felstedians F.C. the items on the agenda will include a proposal to alter the name and constitution of the club.

Military Tournament.

The Royal Naval and Military Tournament was a record in all respects, and the committee express their thanks to the Press generally for the publicity given to the tournament.

Yale v. Oxford and Cambridge.

A movement is on foot to establish lawn tennis matches between Oxford and Cambridge Universities and Yale, the champion' Varsity of America, next summer.

Jockeys Without Retainers.

Shatwell and Crickmere are at present without riding retainers for next flat race season.

Ringstead Off to India.

Having fixed up a retainer for the winter, Ringstead sails for India in a week or two, as does H. Jelliss.

Riding Engagements Renewed.

Fox will again ride for R. Day's stable next season, and Ledson will continue to ride for Hugh Powney, who is private trainer to Sir Ernest Cassel.

Manchester's New Player.

Godfrey, the centre forward recently secured by Coventry City from the Birmingham Club, has been transferred to Manchester City.

Gimcrack Club Dinner.

The York Grimcrack Club, who have maintained the continuity of their annual dinner during the war in a private way, will resume their old custom of celebrating the Gimcrack Stakes by a dinner, at which Sir Abe Bailey, the winner of this year's Gimcrack Stakes, will be the principal guest.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

Costumes Wanted.

The National Federation of Discharged and Demobilized Sailors and Soldiers are looking for concert party costumes and have sent to the Amusements Office for assistance in this direction.

Busman's Holiday.

One finds at the Opera on Sundays quite a number of people who spend their week day evenings entertaining others. One was not surprised to see Miss Audrey Esmond there, as she was with the Beecham Opera Coy, in England.

Jazz Band Conductor.

This is an impression of the well-known conductor of the G. H. Q. Jazz band, Lew Hallmark, who, with his merry little combination of instrumentalists recently played for the hundredth time for dances in Cologne. Before joining the Army Lew Hallmark won considerable distinction as a zither banjoist in England and, as may be imagined, his services are in great demand now that social activities demand more of our attention than they did in the years previous to November, 1918. At the N. A. C. B. Officers' Club, the G. H. Q. Jazz band enlivens the proceedings on two afternoons a week during the progress of dancing.

Like Father, Like Son.

An interesting evening is announced for to-night's performance at the Gurzenich, Cologne, when Herr Siegfried Wagner, son of the great composer, will conduct the orchestra. The programme, which commences at 7.30 p.m., will include pieces by father and son.

Borrowed Plumes.

I have been asked to state that costumes borrowed from the Opera House for the Black and White Ball should be returned immediately to the Property Master or the Amusements Office, Cologne. One officer who was lent a costume for a recent dance has not yet returned it and is asked to do so without delay.

R.R.A.D.C. Christmas Production.

On Saturday, December 20th, the British Rhine Army Dramatic Company will produce Beaumont and Fletcher's Comedy, "The Knight of the Burning Pestle," which I might describe as an Elizabethan pantomine or even an Elizabethan Revue. In the "Knight of the Burning Pestle" will be found certain "novelties" which came upon London as fresh discoveries from America when a few years before the War "Miss Ragtime" conquered London. It includes many old English Songs, and old English Dances will be a feature. In fact the whole production will be typical of "Merry England" at its merriest! I do not think a better or more suitable play could be presented for Christmas. It has all the best qualities of a pantomine and at the same time is one of the jewels of British drama—drama which the Greeks alone have equalled.

A Return.

I understand that the Cologne Central Y.M.C.A. has arranged for a return visit of the Leslie Ross London Vaudeville Company on Saturday of this week.

Knock-out Chess Tournament

A knock out Chess Tournament open to all other ranks, (one prize to be offered) will be held at the British Empire Leave Club next Tuesday and Thursday at 6.30. The Hon. Secretary is C.S.M. Graham.

Return of the "Jesters."

Admirers of the "Jesters" will be glad to know that this talented party has returned to Rhineland from France. Arrangements are now being made for further performances in the occupied area and if past achievements count for anything, their reception wherever they go should be thoroughly cordial.

Wanted.

It is proposed to present part of Bach's Christmas Oratorio and Christmas Carols at the British Empire Leave Club for the play "Eager Heart" under the direction of Miss E. West. For the choir the following are required at once:—four sopranos, three altos, three tenors and four good basses. The following instruments are needed for the orchestra:—two violins, one viola, one cello, one flute, two oboes, two cors, two cors Anglais and one good ball.

"The best of its Kind . . ."

Every day, an ever increasing number of applications to visit Cologne arrives at the Amusements Office from professional concert parties in England and France. And, strange to say, each one claims: "Mine, of course, is the best party that has ever been on tour," or words to that effect. Many of us have seen the performances of some of these self-professed "top-notchers" and have become rather sceptical of their claims in consequence. Then came Mr. Alfred Hurley with his "Jesters" and later with the "Eccentrics" who has followed by a variety show introduced by Mr. Philip Williams and Mr. Leslie Ross. All who saw these parties will agree that they are really first class and much above the majority witnessed for a long time. The box-office was sufficient proof of this and was evidence that the gentlemen mentioned knew what was wanted. Their success has gone broadcast with the result that other purveyors of entertainment, good, bad and indifferent, are anxious to come along to entertain us. This anxiety to look after our interests coincides with the closing down of many camps in England! It is to be hoped that great care will be exercised in engaging parties and that the standard we have become accustomed to will be maintained.

FOOTBALL GOSSIP.

By W. Le C.

Tottenham made history when they lifted the English Cup, and they are again making history. Without a doubt they are London's best side.

It is not often one finds two brother internationals operating in the same position. Yet William and Elisha Scott have this distinction and both assist Liverpool.

* * *

Cradley St. Lukes Club which gave Boyman to Aston Villa now have at centre Andrews the British Army player. Already several clubs have unsuccessfully sought his transfer.

* * *

Jacky Rutherford, "Wor Jacky" as Tynesiders will ever call him, states that the finest inside forward he ever partnered was James Howie. It's a while ago now since this famous Newcastle United wing operated.

When Manager Maley of Glasgow Celtic says, "He's a good one," you can bet your boots he is. Bissing, Manchester United's new player, received this commendation from the Celtic official.

PLAYERS' WAGES.

A meeting of the Lancashire Section of the Players' and Trainers' Union was held at the Grosvenor Hotel, Manchester, Mr W. E. Peake presiding. Messrs Charles Roberts and James Lawrence addressed the meeting. It was felt that it would be to the general welfare of players if the wage system could revert to the old fifty-two weekly payments instead of the thirty-nine as at present. It was also thought, considering the enormous increase in the cost of living, that the players were entitled to a further increase in wages.

CONTRAST IN STYLES.

Visitors to Birmingham witnessed a contrast in style of finishing between W. Payne and Mr. F. B. Rees. The former adopted the old style of sitting up in the saddle, and the latter the American crouch. This was in the Tamworth Handicap Steeplechase, in which Turkey Buzzard and Neurotic fought out a great finish. Payne had some difficulty to keep Mr. Adam Scott's cast-off from jumping too big, while Neurotic brushed more than one obstacle.

RACING IN FRANCE.

Mild weather was experienced and a big crowd gathered at Auteuil. W. Head rode the winner of the big race. Tam Tam II., while R. Head piloted the winners in a couple of hurdle race, M. Eknayan's Flandre fell in the Prix Le Hon and broke her leg, having to be destroyed.

LEADING SHOW DATES.

Below is a list of the leading horse and agricultural show dates:—

November.

29, Dec. 1, 2, 3, 4.—Birmingham Fat Stock Show.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Opening the Day School.

All who have accepted invitations for the opening of the Day School to-day by Lady Robertson are requested to be seated in the Loreley Hall, Cologne Central Y.M.C.A. before the commencement of the proceedings at 2.30 p.m.

One Tree Less.

There is one tree missing from the avenue which flanks the main road from Mulheim to Leverkusen. Owing to the greasy state of the roads an Army motorcar skidded, turned a somersault, and knocked down a tree in the process.

A Pig Investment.

I hear of one unit in the Rhine Army who have purchased a fine litter of pigs for an unusually small sum. At present these pigs are fortunate, but on December 25th this good fortune will pass to the men who dine off them.

Not Serious.

How little sense of humour some people possess! In the "Letter Box" the other day, somebody wrote as a sequel to the correspondence on excessive cigarette smoking, a facetious suggestion to form an anti-chewing gum league. And it has been taken seriously by many.

The Indians Depart.

I understand that our Indian transport drivers have left Rhineland en route for Havre where they are being concentrated prior to being sent back to their own sunny land. A few hospital patients still remain.

Diligent.

One of the most regular occupants of the "Cologne Post" Reading Room in the Hohe Strasse Arcade is a middle aged German who reads all the London dailies. He appears to spend hours deciphering every word, spelling under his breath until he can grasp the meaning.

"School for Scandal."

I hear that the B.R.A.D.C. have experienced no repetition of the "School for Scandal" first night happenings and on every hand I now hear glowing accounts of the performance.

Hard to Part.

"I have worked hard for my demob," an officer told me yesterday, "and now that I have the papers in my pocket I don't want to go one bit".

Beware.

On two evenings last week I did an identical journey in a taxi. The first cost me ten marks which I considered reasonable, but the second driver demanded twenty-five. However, a few words of forcible English brought about a substantial reduction.

Misconstrued.

A friend of mine who is afflicted with an impediment in his speech appeared on parade with two days growth of beard. "Why have you not shaved this morning Private Brown?" asked the Orderly Officer. "G-g-got to h-h-hel-." "What?" bawled the officer. "G-g-got to h-h-help in the cookhouse, Sir" was the affrighted reply.

Absorbed.

At the Summary Court the other day, I noticed a German legal gentleman engrossed in "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes."

Stopping Cruelty.

I find I was correct in my surmise that there was no R.S.P.C.A. or kindred institution in Germany. Our military police, however, have their eye on brutes who ill-treat dumb animals, and I was glad to see that an offender got seven days, at the Summary Court for ignoring an M.P.'s order to desist beating an exhausted horse.

To-day.

To-day the last coupon for our tenth football contest appears. Only ten results are required and no scores. Fill in your efforts now and post them off to this office.

Posh.

A certain N.C.O. on G.H.Q. was seen the other morning with an exceedingly dazzling pair of boots on. Asked how he accounted for such brightness and good polish he informed me that he had, by mistake, cleaned them that morning with cycle enamel.

Easily Said.

If you wish to telephone in case of need, for the civilian fire brigade in any town in Rhineland you just ring up and ask for the "Berufsfeuerwehrleuten." Make a note of it.

Street Cleaning.

I notice that the watercart and brush men start their work soon after eleven o' clock at night. Last night they were busily engaged in cleaning up the Hohe strasse at 11.15.

RHINELANDER.

A TRAGEDY AT THE ARMY ART SCHOOL.

HOW TO DO BUSINESS IN RHINELAND.

Registered companies and incorporate bodies desirous of opening up branches in Germany must obtain permission from the local Polizei-Präsidium.

Private concerns, agents, representatives etc. working either on commission or on their own account must, on their arrival, fill in a declaration form to be obtained at the Steuerabteilung, Portalsgasse 1, who will issue gratis a trading certificate.

In addition to the above certificates, companies, travellers or any persons carrying on wholesale trade in foodstuffs, fodder, articles of luxury, wines, seeds, tobacco and pharmaceutical products must obtain a special trade licence from the Handelserlaubnisstelle. Full particulars as to the exact way to obtain the licence are given in the attached memorandum.

The following are the principal taxes for which Allied Subjects are liable:—

a Gewerbesteuer, based on actual profits of business.
b Einkommensteuer, income tax due to the state.
c Gemeindeeinkommensteuer, an additional tax on income appropriated by the municipality.
d Umsatzsteuer tax calculated on actual yearly turnover. This tax is at present 5 M per 1,000 M but is liable to be increased in 1920.

On certain articles of luxury, gold and silver the Umsatzsteuer is 10 M per 1,000 M when goods are sold retail.

Persons making a temporary stay in Germany are not subjected to taxation.

APPLICATIONS FOR OBTAINING TRADE LICENCES.

1. TRADE LICENCES ARE NECESSARY FOR WHOLESALERS NOT RETAILERS OF THE FOLLOWING ARTICLES:—

Foodstuffs of all kinds.
Fodder.
Articles of luxury.
Wine.
Seeds.
Tobacco, such as cigars, cigarettes, tobacco for smoking and chewing and snuff.
Pharmaceutical products.
(It is not necessary to have a trade licence for trading in raw tobacco or for the manufacture or sale of tobacco goods, but the permission of the "Detag" in Mannheim must be obtained).

2. WHAT IS MEANT BY WHOLESALE.

The selling of goods to Retailers. The amount of the turnover is of no importance. As retailers are considered:—Communities, Companies, Industrial Works, Associations, Landlords, Hotels, Canteens.

3. WHAT IS MEANT BY RETAIL.

The selling of goods in large quantities for personal requirements but not exceeding the wants of private people. For retailers a trade licence is not required.

Landlords, canteens, hotels, as regards tobacco goods are considered as retailers so that no licence in necessary for the sale of these goods.

4. WHO MUST BE IN POSSESSION OF A LICENCE?

Everyone who is occupied in wholesale trading, no matter of what nature, in articles mentioned in para. 1 above, to wit:

Persons who do business on their own account.

Persons who, no matter in what manner, are employed by other firms, (including foreign firms) as representatives, middlemen, agents (whether on own account or commission) and brokers.

Managers of wholesale branches of independent firms must have a personal trading licence, even if the headquarters of the business is already in possession of a licence.

5. CONDITIONS RESPECTING THE ISSUE OF THE TRADE LICENCE.

In the case of foodstuffs, fodder, wine beer spirits and seeds the granting of a trade licence is conditional on the applicant having done a regular wholesale business in the above articles either on his own account or commission before August 1st 1914.

Trade licences are however issued in exceptional cases, if the applicant can prove that he has had sufficient commercial education and experience.

In the case of tobacco goods the conditions are the same, with the exception that the applicant must have been employed in the business prior to April 1st 1916.

In the case of pharmaceutical products, a statement must be produced showing that the applicant has been engaged in this kind of business before the war.

6. HOW TO APPLY FOR A TRADE LICENCE.

By filling in the forms which can be obtained at the Handelserlaubnisstelle at the Rathaus, from the Head Messenger at the entrance of the Rathaus, at the Kölner Handelskammer, Cologne, Rheingasse 8, and at the British Chamber of Commerce, Cologne, Hohestrasse, 100.

The form must be filled in and documentary evidence enclosed in support of the application.

Agents or commissioners must give the name of the firms with whom they have previously dealt, and the name of the firm they now represent.

APPLICATIONS ARE DEALT WITH AT THE HANDELS-ERLAUBNISSTELLE. AS FOLLOWS:—

Applications are brought before a meeting of the Committee of the Handelserlaubnisstelle, which sits weekly. In order to enable applicant to have an opportunity of giving a personal explanation he will receive a written invitation to attend the meeting. The decision will be published directly after the meeting. Should the application be granted or deferred, the applicant will receive a written summons in order to receive the licence certificate or to give an explanation of some still obscure points.

Should the application be refused, the applicant will be informed of the decision.

To deal with the applications it will take about four weeks, as some time elapses in getting the necessary papers. In cases where sufficient proofs are enclosed, one can reckon on a fortnight.

The question of Allied firms doing wholesale trade with Germany through the medium of travellers and correspondence will be dealt with in a future article.

AROUND AND ABOUT.

RE-ASSURED.

A fortune-teller was sending cold streams of horror down her victim's back as she predicted the bad things in store for him in the immediate future. "You will die in a year!" she said at last. "This line in your palm tells me so." "Help!" gasped the victim. "It surely cannot be as bad as that?" "As I said," continued the seer, "you will die in a year—but what year I cannot say."

AN IMPRESSIONISTIC STUDY.

The artist dipped his brush in a bucket of paint and wiped it across the canvas several times horizontally. When he had done this he took the result of his labour in his hand, and carefully placed it in an elaborate frame. "What's the idea?" his boon companion inquired. "Impressionistic study." "Do you mean to tell me that is a finished painting?" "Certainly." "What are you going to call it?" "A village street as seen from the carrier of a motor cycle."

MORE DAYLIGHT.

He was a happy-go-lucky Irish soldier whose free-and-easy attitude towards his superiors made onlookers hold their breath. In the spring of the year, a great one, the new divisional general, came to inspect our hero's command. As he entered the camp, the distinguished visitor was nearly bowled over by an orderly riding a bad mule very badly. The general remarked coldly to his guide that there was a lot of daylight to be seen between the rider and the saddle. "You'll be seeing more soon," was the unconcerned reply of the junior. Generals are not used to being talked to like that, but this one condescended to ask, "Why?" "Well, you see, General, the days are getting longer."

GROWING OLD.

It sounds paradoxical, but the way to stop growing old is to grow. Most of us stop growing wilfully, deliberately and unnecessarily. Then we begin to grow old. We let the mind follow the body, let our thought processes get fat, flabby, and grey haired. The mind was not meant to do anything of the kind. The mind can hop and jump just as well at 60 as at 16. The mind can dance, even though the legs get rheumaticky. Not enough of us realise this. We think we must stop reading when we have left school, and that there is no need of continuing to learn once we have acquired a trade or profession. Youth is a state of development. So long as we have something ahead to develop for, we will remain young. Bodily growth furnishes us inspiration for the first 20 years or so. After that we must produce it from our own intellects. If we fail to produce it, we come to a standstill and begin to grow old.

FROM EVERYWHERE.

Not Over Yet.—Legally the war still continues.

Cheap Enough.—The war only cost Japan, 3s. 2½d. per head of her population.

No Home Yet.—140,000 Austrian prisoners are still in Serbia.

Surplus.—Army greatcoats are being sold off at 18s. each.

A Midget.—A girl of fifteen, just died at Tooting, was only 2 ft. 3 ins. in height.

Not by Wire.—The public are urged not to telegraph Christmas greetings.

A New See.—A Bishopric for Bradford is to be founded.

Up-to-Date Army.—Brazil is spending £7,000,000 in re-equipping her Army.

Trackless.—Rail-less electric cars have been started at Middlesborough.

Anti-Sinn Fein.—The Royal Irish Constabulary has a special bombing corps.

Hello!—All the 'planes used in civil aviation are being fitted with wireless.

No Secret.—Queen Maud of Norway is fifty years of age.

For Quakers.—A new Quaker settlement—Jordan Village—is being built in Bucks.

Dilatory.—It is said that a number of armament companies have not yet paid excess profits tax on wartime earnings.

Another Old House.—Syleham Hall in Suffolk, an historic mansion, has been almost totally destroyed by fire.

Army Trials.—During the war there were 252,773 courts martial—a daily average of 160.

Adventure.—Two girl stowaways were discovered on an American naval vessel leaving Liverpool.

The New Hubby.—A man at Willesden said he did the washing, minded the baby, and went for the milk.

Why Not Wood?—A Norwich firm says it could erect 5,000 wooden houses in a year.

Big Blaze.—Fire has done damage to a Brussels warehouse to the extent of £80,000.

Keep Away!—Colonel Reinhardt, Prussian ex-War Minister has been given unlimited furlough.

New Show.—The new revue to be put on at the Palace Theatre, London is to be called "The Whirligig."

Labour Troubles.—About 20,000 workers are on strike in the North Western area of England.

To Get More Coal.—Extensive developments are proceeding in the South Wales coal industry.

Central Heating.—The 2,000 houses on the Manchester Corppration Estate are to be centrally heated.

Growing Crops.—Vast areas in India are being rendered productive by Government irrigation.

Step Forward.—The North Eastern Railway proposes to electrify between 200 and 300 miles of line.

Golden Cotton.—More huge deals in Lancashire cotton mills are reported. Fortunes are being made daily.

Plenty to Study.—The number of medical and dental students at hospitals beats all past records.

Wanted to Teach.—There are a thousand vacancies for teachers in the London schools.

Fireless Schools.—Owing to lack of heat in the Monmouthshire schools 7,000 children are kept at home.

Movies Everywhere.—In the near future portable cinemas may be working in restaurants and clubs.

Making Daylight.—An apparatus said to produce artifical daylight is being exhibited in London.

Lavishness.—£5,000,000 have been spent on Government shipyards which have been abandoned.

Doing Well.—The Food Ministry will have made a profit of over a million up to March next year.

Planting Fruit.—Fruit-tree planting on a large scale is going on in England. Stocks of trees and bushes are very short.

Costly Shunting.—According to Mr. A. W. Gattie the transport reformer, railway shunting wastes a hundred millions a year in Great Britain.

Compulsory School.—The Petrograd Soviet has ordered all illiterates between 17 and 50 to attend the Government schools to learn to read and write.

Ex-Service Men Step In.—More than half the 50,000 temporary women workers in British post offices have now left.

French View.—M. Jacques Bainville, a French Authority on Foreign affairs says: "The League of Nations has gone up in smoke."

Busy Letter Writer.—In a Southwark breach of promise case brought by a man it transpired that he had sent the girl 10,000 love letters.

Royal Scots Back.—The cadre of the Eleventh Royal Scots, just arrived home from the Rhine have been entertained by the Corporation of Edinburgh.

The Oil Age.—The Cunard liner "Aquitania" is to burn oil fuel in future. The engine room staff will be reduced from 350 to 50.

Dangerous Veteran.—Mahmoud Pasha Suliman, one of the two Egyptian extremist leaders detained by Lord Allenby's orders, is 98 years old.

Crash.—Through an overhead gangway between two liners collapsing at Liverpool, three men lost their lives, and five were seriously injured.

Given Offence.—The panel painted by Sargent for an American Library called "The Synagogue," has caused a sensation and may not be exhibited through Jewish opposition.

Becomes a Coalowner.—A coalminer who pegged a claim on common land in the Forest of Dean eighteen years ago has been given his rights by the Government and starts as a coalowner.

Ceratopogon Pulicaris!

You may not recognise his name—but you know him quite well. He's the little stinging fly which is biting everyone who tries to enjoy the evening outdoors. He will not bite you, however, if you always use. . . .

REPORT OF TANK COMMISSION.

WINSTON CHURCHILL GETS THE KUDOS AND OTHERS THE CASH.

PADRE COURT MARTIAL VERDICT.

TANK AWARDS.

CHIEF CREDIT DUE TO WINSTON CHURCHILL.

The report of the Royal Commission on awards to inventors for work in connection with the Tanks has just been issued. It declares that it was due to Mr. Churchill that the Tank was converted into a practicable instrument of warfare, but, properly considered, he was not entitled to make any claim. The Commission awards Major-General Swinton one thousand pounds for important contributions outside his general duties but recognises the still greater value of that part of his work for which a pecuniary reward was not appropriate.

Commodore Sueter's services were also of great value but came within the duties definitely assigned to him. The same applied to the valuable services of Lieutenant-Colonel Boothby and Major Hetherington. The Commission awards Mr. Macfie and Lieutenant Nesfield £500 each, and Sir Tennyson D'Eyncourt £100. Colonel Crompton and Mr. Legros supplied useful data and sound advice but did not invent any special feature.

The Commission attributes to Sir William Tritton and Major Wilson the credit of designing and producing the tank in its concrete official shape and accordingly awards them £15,000.

The report pays a high tribute to Mr. De Mole, the Australian Corporal and, the Commission exceedingly regrets being unable to make an award, as it was necessary for him to have shown causal connection between the making of his invention and the use of such by the Government.

SEELY WANTS TO KNOW.

FORMER AIR MINISTER AS CRITIC.

In the House of Commons Brigadier-General Seely, who is now in the position of a free critic, asked whether the air policy of the Government was the same as in November 1917, when Mr. Bonar Law stated that the Air force must be independent of the Admiralty or Army Council; if so, why the Secretary of State for War was now President of the Army Council and the Air Council and whether the Air Council was now independent of or dependent on the Army Council.

Mr. Lloyd George replied that as had already been stated there had been no change whatever in the Air policy of the Government, which remained the same as when General Seely accepted the position from which, to Mr. Lloyd George's regret, he had retired. (Laughter and cheers). The Army Council, added the Premier, had no control over the Air Force, which was perfectly independent of it.

OUR LATEST GUN.

AN UNSURPASSED WEAPON.

A great feat of gunnery was announced by Sir Robert Hadfield yesterday.

He said that the largest calibre of armour-piercing shell had been driven unbroken through the thickest of modern armour-plates.

That would render the British big gun, weighing something like 180 tons, unsurpassed in the naval engagements of the future.

PROBABLE WASTE OF MEAT.

Owing to the glut of meat in cold storage and the insufficient accomodation for foreign supplies it is feared that the surplus stocks in England may become unfit for food if control is not removed.

Food Ministry officials declare, however, that supplies must be controlled in view of coming Continental competition and the prospective world shortage of meat.

LORDS PASS ALIENS' BILL.

The House of Lords has passed the second reading of the Aliens' Restriction Bill. Lords Newton, Buckmaster and Parmoor criticised the measure as tending to keep alive the spirit of hate. In reply the Lord Chancellor quoted the present position in Germany as proof that dangers arising during the war were not yet over.

HALF-CROWN NOTES.

The first specimen half-crown notes have been printed by Messrs. Delarue and Co. Arrangements have been made for a large issue at short notice if required.

BULGARIAN TREATY SIGNED.

The Bulgarian Peace Treaty was signed at Paris yesterday by M. Stamboulinski who is the Bulgarian Premier.

PADRE ON TRIAL.

COURT MARTIAL EVIDENCE AND VERDICT.

The court-martial on Captain Thomas Joseph O'Donnell, Chaplain in the Australian Imperial Force, was resumed at the Middlesex Guildhall yesterday. Brigadier-General J. P. McGlinn (Australian Imperial Force) presided over the Court, which consisted of nine members. The charge against the accused, which was framed under Section 35 of the Army Act, was that at Killarney, on the 10th October last, when in uniform, in a public dining room he used seditious and disloyal language.

Second-Lieut. Stuart Chambers gave evidence that he heard O'Donnell use the words complained of. He asked him to speak in a quieter tone, but O'Donnell replied "What damned business is it of yours, my conversation?" Chambers again asked him to moderate his voice.

Mr. Tim Healy, cross-examining, commented on the mildness of such remonstrance if the circumstances were as alleged. Witness replied that he thought this the most politic way to stop O'Donnell. He pointed out that in Ireland one could not very well go up to a person and ask him to stop talking. He did not think O'Donnell was the worse for liquor.

A commercial traveller named Waddell corroborated.

Captain Clarke, R.N.R., of the Board of Trade, said he was talking to his wife and trying not to hear O'Donnell, but he heard him say that England professed to have gone to war for little nations and had filled her gaols with Irish patriots. His impression was that the man was speaking in his cups.

Mrs. Clarke who also said she only heard words here and there, said she heard him mention the King, Mr. Lloyd George and Saint Patrick.

Mr. Healy, in opening the defence, said that Mr. Marsh, to whom O'Donnell was speaking, was a Northerner and a Unionist and was also deaf. It was absurd to suppose that an Army Chaplain would entertain a Unionist with such balderdash.

Miss Bennett, manageress of the hotel said that next morning Lieut. Chambers asked "Where is O'Donnell" and when told that he had gone he said it was a good job as he was going to arrest him for sedition. She told Lieut. Chambers he was 'no class' and she would never again give him a room. A waiter said that all he heard O'Donnell say was that the King had gone from Balmoral to London to settle the railway strike.

Mr. Marsh, with whom O'Donnell conducted the conversation which formed the subject of the present charge said that on the 10th October when he went into the International Hotel, Killarney, he said "good evening" to Father O'Donnell, who was sitting at the next table. Being deaf he went over to O'Donnell's table O'Donnell, who had come from seeing Lord Clanricarde's estate, said that Clanricarde and his class were of no use to the country. Referring to the railway strike O Donnell said "Lloyd George, seems to have got a lot of credit for settling the strike but I know who settled it—King George, not Lloyd George." O'Donnell later said it would have been a bad day for Australia if Germany had won the war, and they would have won it but for Australia. That was the point where they were interrupted by Lieut. Chambers and O'Donnell said "mind your own damned business." Witness denied that O'Donnell said the words alleged about "Jew satellites of King George who are filling their own pockets." The King was only brought into the conversation when O'Donnell gave him credit for settling the strike. The Royal Family was never mentioned.

Giving evidence on his own behalf Captain O'Donnell said he was born in Australia. His father was an Irishman and he took part in patriotic movements in Australia, supported conscription, and always sang the National Anthem, even in church. He denied that he used the expressions alleged against him.

Cross-examined he said: "I believe Ireland, if treated with justice, should remain part of the great British Empire."

On the occasion of a visit of the Prince of Wales to Belgium, he drank the health of His Royal Highness and got his autograph on a menu card. With reference to the conversation complained of, he was speaking loudly owing to the deafness of the person he was addressing, when Lieut. Chambers came up and asked him not to speak so loud. He told him to go away and mind his own business. He admitted he was a Nationalist and he considered that Ireland had been ill treated, but he did not believe in her complete independence.

Evidence of O'Donnell's loyalty was given by the Agent-general for South Australia, Lady Mcvall, and a blind Australian officer, who said he believed O'Donnell had got more recruits than any other clergyman.

The Court Martial resulted in Captain O'Donnell's acquittal.

BRITISH CHILDREN.

LADY ROBERTSON OPENS DAY SCHOOL IN COLOGNE.

A remarkably interesting ceremony took place at the Y.M.C.A. Central yesterday afternoon, when Lady Robertson, accompanied by Miss Robertson, formally opened the Cologne School for British Children.

After prayers had been offered for the welfare of the school and its scholars, Dr. Francis briefly outlined the origin and short history of the institution. He said that among the many good works of the "Cologne Post" had been the publication of a letter in its correspondence column asking if it were possible to provide some instruction for the young people who were living out here with their parents. The Y.M.C.A. had seized upon the opportunity at once with the result that to-day a flourishing school existed in which twenty-two girls and twenty boys were receiving excellent instruction, rendered possible by the hearty co-operation of the Army, especially the Education staff, and the Y.M.C.A. He then called upon Lady Robertson formally to open and to inspect the school.

A move being made to the classroom, the children were found busily employed at sewing, drawing, and Plastic work, obviously enjoying it and evidently receiving excellent instruction.

On returning to the Lorely Hall, Lady Robertson in a happy little speech, declared the school formally open. She said that coming from a soldier family she realised how very much such a school was needed and all thanks were due to that bright little lady, "The Cologne Post," for publishing the suggestion; to the lady—she was sure it was a lady—who made the suggestion; to the organizer and to the instructors who were so greatly benefitting the children under their charge: and also to the Army authorities for mitigating that greatest drawback to a soldier's life, the separation of fathers and their families.

It was not possible to send our children to a German school, and it was a great pleasure to see these splendid children in our midst and to know that they were having such an excellent training.

Then the children under a P and R.T. sergeant instructor performed a series of P. T. evolutions which would have turned many a '16 P.T. instructor green with envy, the precision of the music-accompanied movements being wonderful.

This was followed by one of Dr. Adcock's entertaining demonstrations of how singing, especially part-singing, may be taught to children and grown-ups in a very short time although they may have had little or no previous experience.

The entertainment closed with an exhibition given by the dancing class. Here again the rhythm and gracefulness of the children's movements were surprisingly good.

The school is held at the Central Y.M.C.A. and there is no distinction of sex or class. Boys and girls work together and knight's son and squires's son receive the same instruction. This is exceptionally good, inasmuch as the instructors are chosen from a select class of graduates and specialists, of whom eleven are at present engaged on the work.

TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

MORE FORMIDABLE THAN EVER.

The Executives of the three bodies forming the Industrial Triple Alliance met at Unity House yesterday morning. According to an official statement issued after the meeting, the Chairman, Mr. Robert Smillie, referred to attempts in the Press to cause divisions in the ranks of the Alliance. He said the failure of these attempts was shown in the added unity which would be displayed as the result of that meeting. The Triple Alliance would become more formidable than ever.

A resolution was passed that in event of the failure of any of the three bodies composing the Alliance to secure their demands a sub-committee would be instructed to summon a full meeting of the three Executives to consider the whole question.

FRENCH GENERAL DEGRADED

A Court-martial at Namur has condemned Colonel Gamseau, who was in charge of Fort Malone in 1914, to five years imprisonment with military degradation. He was condemned for not taking the requisite measures to maintain moral among his subordinates on August 23rd and 24th 1914, for not making full use of his ammunition and for having surrendered the fort instead of blowing it up.

U.S. MINERS REFUSE OFFERED TERMS.

It has transpired from Washington that the Cabinet's basis of settlement of the coal strike was a wage advance of 14 per cent. to all mine workers, and Government control of prices without an immediate increase. The acting President of the Miners' Federation declares the miners are unable to accept the offer.

LARKIN'S BIG BAIL.

Jim Larkin, the Irish Labour Leader, who was arrested in New York recently, was yesterday charged with criminal anarchy. He is allowed bail in 15,000 dollars.

A CLEAN SWEEP.

ALL GOVERNMENT 'DUDS' TO GO AT ONCE.

The Finance Committee of the Cabinet, of which the Prime Minister is Chairman, is not satisfied with the rate of progress and character of the reductions made in the staffs of various Government departments. The dissatisfaction of the Committee has not only been conveyed to the Ministers in charge but urgent instructions have been issued to dispense with the services of all officials who are not absolutely essential to effective administration.

GERMANS IN AUSTRALIA.

PROPAGANDA IN THE CHURCHES.

Considerable attention is being directed to the truculence and open disloyalty of Germans in various parts of Australia. A special commission is inquiring into the facts in South Australia, where there are large German settlements. A schoolmaster in the Albury district of New South Wales was threatened, because of an anti-German speech, and because the Union Jack was flown, that the German children would be withdrawn. In parts of the Tanunda district of South Australia German is spoken more than English, and the Lutheran churches are still centres of German propaganda. A constable told a remarkable story to the commission, of threats and attempts at murder because he interrupted a goose step parade in the town of Loxton, and secured the internment of the local Germans. Soldiers are demanding the compulsory purchase of the prosperous German farming lands, and that these should be made available to men who have served in the war.

ITALIAN CRISIS.

ATTITUDE OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

The Rome correspondent of the "Times" says, "The Italian Government are strongly criticised in many quarters for not having dismissed Admiral Millo immediately. This appears to have given rise to an impression abroad that the Government are really in accord with D'Annunzio. I believe this impression is entirely erroneous. The Government would run very grave risks if they were to take steps, which the situation, according to superficial reading, might seem to demand. Part of the Army and a greater part of the Navy could not be trusted to march against D'Annunzio. If the Government were to proceed hurriedly to energetic measures their chief weapons might break in their hands."

MEN FRA' SHEFFIELD.

FORCIBLE ENTRY INTO COUNCIL MEETING.

Following a mass meeting of unemployed at Sheffield on Thursday, delegates of the men entered the City Council meeting at the Town Hall and protested against any further debate until their case had been heard. "This debate ought not to go on while men and women are starving," shouted one. The Council declined to suspend the Standing Orders, whereupon the delegation left the chamber.

A large number of unemployed then attempted to enter but the police were called in and the doors were locked against them. Representatives were admitted later and after a discussion the Lord Mayor sent a telegram to the Prime Minister and Minister of Labour calling attention to the demonstration.

CROYDON BY-ELECTION.

NARROW WIN FOR COALITION CANDIDATE.

The South Croydon by-election result was declared yesterday, no change being recorded. The figures were:—

Sir Allan Smith, Coalition Unionist 11,777.

Alderman Houlder, Independent Liberal 9,573.

Majority 2,204.

Sir Ian Malcolm's, (Coalition Unionist) majority at the last election was 10,810.

PUSSYFOOT'S EYE REMOVED.

Mr. "Pussyfoot" Johnson's right eye was removed yesterday at a nursing home. The eye became rapidly worse this week and an operation was necessary to prevent his becoming completely blind.

TRAMS IN HYDE PARK.

The Westminster City Council, following the lead of the Paddington Borough Council, yesterday adopted amid applause a resolution strongly opposing the London County Council's proposal to run trams from the Marble Arch to Victoria and Shepherd's Bush across Hyde Park.

A violent earthquake lasting seventeen seconds occurred at Smyrna on the 19th. It caused several casualties and considerable damage.

A meeting of the Liberal Federation has adopted a resolution advocating the taxation of war profits and an enquiry into the question of a general Capital Levy.

'VARSITY DEGREES.

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF'S NEW HONOUR.

The Senate House at Cambridge was crowded on Thursday when Mr. A. J. Balfour was installed as Chancellor. After he had given his inaugural address he conferred honorary degrees of laws on Admiral Jackson, Admiral Madden, Rear-Admiral Keyes, General Robertson, Lord Byng, Sir Hugh Trenchard, and Sir Maitland Salmon.

In his address Mr. Balfour said that to-day the relationship of the universities with the fighting forces is much closer than formerly owing to the fact that the science and learning of the one has been found indispensable to the successful operations of the other. The universities, and not least the university to which they belonged, had come forward when the war started and aided the Empire in the great struggle through which it had just passed.

Prince Albert and Prince Henry were present, and the undergraduates' galleries were packed as was the floor of the House.

General Robertson received a great ovation, and then more cheers for Lady Robertson were called for. Lord Byng was greeted with "Three for the Byng Boys." Great scenes of excitement prevailed outside the Senate House when the distinguished visitors drove away.

POTATOES.

REGULATIONS FOR IMPORT.

The application in Occupied Territory of the German Law of February 15th, 1916, modified September 29th, 1919, concerning the import of potatoes has been approved.

This Law provides that all imports of potatoes must be notified immediately to the Reichskartoffelstelle in Berlin. Contravention of this Law is punishable by fine and confiscation of the imported potatoes.

Further information on the subject may be obtained from the representative of the Reichskartoffelstelle, Gereonshaus 35, Cologne.

The Law affects Allied Nationals as well as Germans.

SINN FEIN.

ORDER OF SUPPRESSION ALL OVER IRELAND.

A new proclamation, applying to all Ireland, has been published in a supplement to the "Dublin Gazette."

The declaration of a previous proclamation is repeated to the effect that the following are "dangerous bodies":

Sinn Fein Organisation.
Sinn Fein Clubs.
Irish Volunteers.
Cumann na Mban.
Gaelic League.

The new proclamation "prohibits and suppresses these organisations throughout the whole country."

CARLTON'S MIXED GRILL.

Of the 433 servants employed at the Carlton Hotel 223 are British, 77 Italian, 63 French, 36 Swiss, 18 Belgian, 6 Scandinavian, 3 Spanish, 3 Chinese, 2 Russian, and 2 Czecho-Slovak.

Mr. Harris, the chairman, gave these particulars yesterday at the annual meeting, when it was stated that last year's profits (£76,389) were the largest made at the hotel since it was opened 20 years ago. Profits at the Ritz had also established a record.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE LEADS.

The Northern Peace Union at Stockholm has started an inquiry into the comparative prospects of various languages being accepted as a world language, by taking the opinion of university professors of languages in different countries. Of nineteen answers hitherto received, twelve are in favour of the English language.

PAY RECORDS DESTROYED.

As a result of the destruction by fire of five huts used by the Army Pay Corps at Longhill Camp, Dover, the pay records of some thousands of men were lost.

Most of these related to the R.G.A. and in consequence the issue of pay and gratuities to many men will be greatly delayed.

ITALIAN 'PLANES DEMOBBED.

A correspondent writes to "The Times" from Pisa:—The Italian machines here all have their magnetos and joy sticks out, and I was told it is because the Government are afraid of their being flown over to Fiume.

HUMAN PROFIT AND LOSS.

For the 96 great towns of England and Wales the births registered last week numbered 9,188; the deaths numbered only 4,693. In London there were 2,223 births and 1,132 deaths of civilians. The deaths from influenza numbered 22.

The famous airman, Major McCudden, V.C., left £266.

ARMY PROMOTION.

INEFFICIENT OFFICERS TO MAKE WAY.

Brigadier-General Croft in the House of Commons on Thursday, asked whether, as there were 4,500 Regular officers superfluous to the establishment of the Army, it was the intention of the War Office to remove forthwith from the service all senior Regular officers who were medically unfit and likely to remain so, or who were sent home from the Expeditionary Force on adverse reports, with a view to accelerating the promotion of the very large number of captains and junior majors of the Regular Army who during the war successfully filled the places of those senior officers and to allow the granting of Regular commissions to selected temporary officers. Mr. Churchill said:—All Regular officers who are permanently medically unfit are placed on the half-pay list. The Army Council have already under consideration the war records of all senior officers, and those who have shown themselves to be unfitted for the duties of their rank are being called upon to resign their commissions or to retire.

Brigadier-General Croft.—Is it not a fact that in many cases officers are now being reported upon by their peace time commanders, and in view of the reduction of the Army and the urgent necessity for absolute efficiency, will the right hon. gentleman give an undertaking that the war records will be considered in every case?

Mr. Churchill.—Yes, Sir.

Major Lord Winterton (Horsham and Worthing, C.U.).—Does the reply refer to officers of any rank, including generals and lieutenant-generals, as well as junior officers?

Mr. Churchill.—Certainly. The numbers of lieutenant-generals and major-generals surplus to any establishment that we can contemplate in future is great.

Lord Winterton.—Will the right hon. gentleman be influenced in his action by the report of any Commission on Mesopotamia or the Dardanelles as to whether officers of the higher ranks are fit or not? Mr Churchill. Everything will be taken into consideration I do not know what my noble friend has in mind

COINCIDENCE!

ANOTHER EX-GERMAN LINER BURNT.

Following the recent destruction of the ex-German liner Prinz Hubertus in the Albert dock the London Fire Brigade were busily engaged yesterday in fighting a fire which broke out on the ex-German liner Swakopmund in the Victoria Dock.

The cargo mainly consisted of three thousand tons of copra. This burned furiously for hours and was practically destroyed, but the vessel was saved.

LOST MUNITION SHIP.

Mr. Churchill informed Brigadier-Gen. Page Croft, in the House of Commons yesterday that the s.s. Adventure left Newcastle-on-Tyne on December 24, 1918, laden with munitions and general stores, for Archangel and Murmansk. She had not since been heard of, and was believed to be a total loss.

This was the only case of the kind—of ships lost on the way to North Russia—of which he had information

SOUND ADVICE.

Mr. Cook, the Australian Navy Minister, speaking at Albury, near Melbourne, said that while she is wholeheartedly supporting the League of Nations, Great Britain should "keep the powder dry," as it was impossible to avoid noticing what preparations Japan and America are making in furtherance of their policies in the Pacific.

LUDENDORFF TALKS.

Ludendorff, who is staying at Potsdam, has been making speeches of a pro-Prussian and pro-militarist character to crowds who raised cheers for the ex-Kaiser.

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.

Business was generally quiet owing to the multiplication of capital, but the under tone was steady. Foreign bonds were weak owing to Continental influences. Oils were steady, but later on Mexican Eagle developed activity, and strength attributed to Paris buying. Among diamonds De Beers touched 33½ on the excellent annual report, sales of the company's diamonds showing an expansion of 35 per cent., but later the shares eased to 32 on profit-taking. Egyptian land shares rose on purchases for Cairo accounts. In the money market discounts were easier, reflecting greater confidence in the monetary position. Silver fell to 74 pence on the news that the American Government is ready to release silver dollars for export in exchange for silver certificates and gold deposits, dollar for dollar. It is believed that about seventy million ounces of these dollars are available

All supplies of gold were readily taken for the Continent, and the East at about 103 shillings and 103s 2d. German marks varied from 175 to 185, and Austrian crowns 550 to 570.

A PRESSING PROBLEM.

We have previously called attention to the pressing problem of the ex-officers, many of whom have exchanged khaki for mufti only to find that they were unwanted in their new sphere.

A suggestion put forward by Sir Algernon Firth for the formation of local committees working in conjunction with the Chambers of Commerce for dealing with the increasing difficulty was not adopted by the government, but we are glad to learn that a strong committee of business men has now been appointed in London for grappling with the matter. This is a step in the right direction and with an extension of the principle to the provinces much can be done towards abolishing what can only be described as a lamentable business.

It is almost unthinkable that 19,000 ex-officers, the flower of British manhood, should fail to find a place in the great industrial machine at home and it is a shame and humiliation which, we feel sure, when fully realised by the masses, will not be allowed to continue.

Cases frequently come to light of men who proved their worth on the battlefield, winning honour and distinction, being refused on demobilization the chance of earning a livelihood. One case recently revealed is that of a man who, prior to the war was a bank clerk. On entering the army as a private he early displayed ability and eventually rose to the rank of major, being four times mentioned in despatches. On returning he was offered work by his original employers, who, however, imposed a condition which circumstances made it impossible for him to accept and the one-time hero was compelled to take work as a labourer. This is only one case of many, and in some the details are even more astounding.

We should have imagined that employers would have been ready and eager to discharge the debt they owe the younger men, who risked all to preserve their interests at home. Instead, they apparently recognise no such responsibility and their consciences are so blunted and deadened that they fail to hear or obey the insistent demands for justice.

All too many employers have made use of the war to profiteer and amass fortunes, have disregarded the sacrifices which made such an ignominious practice possible and now mock the men returning, who have earned in a harsh school the right to demand justice, if not generosity.

But, as has been previously pointed out, the officer in some cases is not without blame. The mere fact that he held commissioned rank and met with success as a soldier does not necessarily qualify him for an appointment of responsibility in a business he has yet to learn. He must recognise his shortcomings, be prepared to come halfway and not refuse an offer provided it is a fair one which, while not in keeping with his military position, perhaps, may lead to something better.

Real ability will always compensate for lack of experience if given a fair trial, and it is only when this fact is realised by employer and ex-officer alike that the solution of the unsavoury problem will be found.

STAFF CAPTAIN: Until recently I was employed in office at Base and have now been admitted to hospital. Can I wear a wound stripe?

A.—Not if Medical Board attributes injury to sitting on pen.

PASSIONATE PERCY: I joined the Non-Combatants' Corps, and served three months. Am now demobilized. If medal is granted, what bars do I get?

A.—Wormwood Scrubbs, Pentonville, and clasp for Wandsworth.

FRAULEIN: To me has a soldier Britisher much attention paid. I by him to pictures cinema invited am. Do you think his intentions honourable are?

A.—You never know your luck, but chance it, any way.

WAR WORKER: As my professional engagements (booked twelve weeks solid, Puddleton Coliseum, twice nightly) did not permit me to actually join the Army, I put in spare time heartening up the boys by singing patriotic songs to wounded soldiers. Please inform me to whom I should look for payment. N.B. the turn is going immense. See Press notices enclosed.

A.—Write to the management.

TABS.

THE TRAVELLING FOURTHS.

It was partly curiosity and partly a wish not to incommodate my two friends, who insisted on travelling fourth, that made me too travel fourth with them, from Bingen to Cologne.

I have forgotten how long we were over our journey; I only know that while we waited interminably at Coblenz the Schnellzug, which had left Bingen long after us, came in and departed, while I resisted a strong temptation to board it. Only a strong sense of obligation to my companions restrained me.

It was all very uncomfortable and yet rather amusing. Long before we reached Cologne, the carriage was very like a goods truck, so full was it of miscellaneous packages, bags of potatoes and baskets of fruit. These, however, one welcomed rather than otherwise, for they went some way towards supplying the lack of seats, and they helped to keep the crowd out.

You are lucky to get a seat in a fourth class carriage in Germany, and if you do manage to get one you will be torn all the while between feelings of weariness and politeness. The crowd was very good humoured, and everybody talked to everybody else. Even had it been possible, I do not think they would have withdrawn behind newspapers in the English way.

We talked and we ate. It reminded me of a journey years ago from Burgos to Valladolid, when marketing peasants got into the train at wayside stations with hobbled lambs and kids, which they slung unconcernedly upon the racks, to the trepidation of those sitting beneath.

Yet it was very refreshing after the glittering discomfort of the Sud Express. Here in Germany I missed the grave, well-bred Castilian politeness, and the ceremonial offer of food. The Spaniard makes the offer; it is of course politely declined; should it be repeated you may accept.

We had a little variety given us at Boppard, where a party of boys got in and soon drew the attention of all the travellers by the lamentable howling of one of their number. I have seldom seem such a contorted face or such an abandonment of despair.

Sympathisers questioned him, and in short gasps he managed to get out that his week's wages had been stolen, and that he would not be cordially welcomed at home. There was nothing for it but to raise a subscription, and the youngster was consoled with a handful of paper.

Before he got out, a couple of stations further on, he had attempted an unscientific fight with one of his companions, upon whom his suspicions appeared to rest The battle was stopped by a serious-looking elderly gent eman, who plucked the combatants apart, pulled their ears sharply and delivered a homily, amid approving exclamations from the folk around.

We loitered on, dropping folk here and picking them up there, but the numbers, the crowding and the discomfort seemed continually to grow. The windows were closed, of course, and the atmosphere was very curious.

It would have puzzled many a dog to pick up the scent of his master in it. Everybody however, was resolutely good-humoured. I found myself explaining to a stout hausfrau, as best I could, domestic arrangements in England, and impressing her by saying that we had always had enough to eat during the war. She sighed and appeared to think that then, as now, we lived in a Paradise where money and butter abounded. I could not convince her that butter is rationed in England to-day and that we are taxed up to the eyes.

She was almost affectionate when she left the train at Bonn, and we straightened ourselves for the last stage of the journey to Cologne. A youth with a beribboned mandoline struck up an air and soon had all the company singing. They sang until the lights of Cologne appeared, and, stepping to the platform, one felt the blood beginning to stir again in cramped limbs.

LOOKER ON.

NAVAL LOSSES.

HOW ALL THEORIES WERE UPSET.

The White Paper showing British naval and mercantile losses in detail during the war is now available. The Navy lost 254 vessels in all, of a total of 651,907 tons displacement, and 815 auxiliary vessels were lost. The mercantile marine lost 2,479 ships of 7,759,090 tons gross. Fishing boats to the number of 675 were sunk. In the destruction of merchant shipping, 14,287 persons were slain, often in circumstances of atrocious barbarity, and 434 fishermen were killed.

Among the naval losses 42 ships were sunk in action, 62 were sunk by submarines, and 44 by mines. The loss of the rest was due to various causes, so that, broadly speaking, the submarine and the mine sank more than double the number of vessels sunk by gunfire. It is extraordinary that only one battleship, the Russian Slava, of any nation, was sunk by gunfire throughout the war. Only one British battleship was sunk in action, H.M.S. Goliath, torpedoed at night off Gallipoli. Several battle cruisers were, of course, sunk on both sides.

FLEET ACTION.

The popular theory held before the war was that the whole art of naval warfare consisted in each side bringing its entire battle fleet into action as soon as possible and let the best man win. Thence it followed that, other things being equal, the side owning the large number of ships must win. Further reflection showed that there was an uncomfortably speculative element in the calculation, because if the margin of superiority, as it was called, was too narrow, some dreadful accident might enable the enemy to win. Many earnest persons explained that, whereas, if the enemy were defeated that circumstance would make very little difference to him; if this country lost the battle it would lose all. Then the question arose: How many more battleships ought this country to possess in order to make victory absolutely certain?

WAR BY ARITHMETIC.

People began feverishly counting battleships on both sides: so many built, so many building, so many going to be built. Seldom did any two persons arrive at the same conclusion; for no sooner was a calculation completed than a superior authority would upset it by condemning some of the items as obsolete. He would say that a certain ship was only half the value of a ship on the other side. These interruptions were so distressing that people abandoned ships for the moment and began to count guns instead. Guns were the only wear. But the same difficulty occurred, because some guns had a longer range than others, and nobody knew at what range the battle would be fought. So, after a brief interval of calculating the total weight of projectiles on both sides, called "the weight of metal thrown" (irrespective of its hitting anything), the public decided to return to counting ships, or, as they preferred to call them, Dreadnoughts.

At this point Admiral Lord Fisher announced that he had solved all difficulties by inventing a ship so wonderful that all the fighting would be on one side. She mounted guns so tremendous that she could reach the enemy before he could hit her, and her speed was so rapid that she could run away ere the enemy could approach. The public were immensely cheered by the good news. Weary of adding up ships and never getting the sum right, they saw at once that they were now quite safe.

AND WHAT HAPPENED.

When the war came, it was immediately evident that the enemy had never studied the science of naval warfare, for he actually declined to put all his ships in a row and fight. It was most perplexing. And perplexing it remained. For by degrees, and without the great battle, the enemy went on sinking merchant ships. Then there really was a battle. And still the enemy went on sinking merchant ships, until he sank 2,479 and damaged 1,835 more. And at the end of the war neither side had lost a single battleship by gunfire. It really almost seems as if there had been something wrong in the original popular theory of naval warfare.

Five British battleships were destroyed by submarine and five by mine, and 815 auxiliary vessels were lost, including 246 trawlers and 244 colliers. Most of the trawlers were sunk by mines, most of the colliers were sunk by submarine; 64 destroyers were lost, 16 in action, seven by submarine, 20 by mine; 23 special service vessels were lost, 22 of them by submarine.

None of the events was expected by the public to happen. None of the events they were taught to expect occurred. Nor, in fact, did the German people ever for an instant conceive that what has happened could happen. From THE GLOBE.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX.

Our Readers' Varied Views.

"WASH AND BRUSH UP."

Sir,—I think I know "Ablution." He must be the wallah I often encounter in the lavatory at the Club who presumably possesses no facilities for ablution in his billet and so makes himself an unmitigated nuisance to all others who want to use the place reasonably, for ordinary handrinsing or hair smoothing.

I have had to flee more than once when he has been monopolising the bowls, the soap and the brushes, dashing the water about in gallons, and smothered in lather, puffing and blowing like a grampus, and calling to the patient attendant for towels and all sorts of attentions.

If it's not the same Johnny, it's one of his tribe.

The accommodation is sufficient for all reasonable persons among whom I venture to class myself. H.P.J.

Sir,—There is one omission from the Officers' Clubs which "Ablution" has failed to mention.

I am sure that most officers in Cologne would wish to have their nails manicured daily.

There appears to be no provision for this absolute necessity.

Personally I think that a well appointed manicure parlour is as urgent a need as scented toilet soap and clean linen towels.

ORANGE STICK.

A REAL PUPPET SHOW.

Sir,—I wonder if it is generally known that there is a place of amusement in Cologne which does not advertise. Nevertheless it is very popular with the young Germans and also their parents and guardians. It is the Hann schen Theatre, situated in the basement under the Panopticum No. 3 Army Cinema Hohe Strasse.

The door will be found at the right, inside the main entrance, and the price of admission is the modest sum of 80 pfgs. The performances commence at 3 p.m. and last for about 50 minutes. There is a fresh house, every hour.

It is the old German Puppet Show, and is well worth a visit to anyone, who, like the writer, is suffering from a surfeit of Wagner. R.W.K.

DO WE READ TOO MUCH?

Sir,—I hope I am not too late to express an opinion.

That too much reading is done is evidenced by my being nearly bowled over yesterday by a Corporal who was poring over what looked like "Sexton Blake" as he proceeded along Kommodien Strasse without looking where he was going. He butted into me with great force and I had a rude shock, I can tell you, and had to retire to the old Dutch Bar to obtain a restorative.

A little later on I saw a case of over-thinking. An intellectual looking private was standing between the tramrails in front of the Dom, rapt in meditative thought. There was a far-off look in his dreamy eyes. I could see that his mind was far from mundane things. Suddenly a tramcar came along heading straight for him. The warning bell had no message for the deep thinker. In the nick of time I saved his precious life.

These two incidents seem to tell me that both over-reading and over-thinking may lead to disaster. JOB.

WIVES IN CLUBS.

Sir,—At first I intended to take no notice of "Bachelor's" letter, but talking it over with women friends on the Rhine I agreed to write both for them and myself.

If "Bachelor" thinks that because wives are permitted to use an Officers' Club, that fact gives every man the right to enter into conversation with them, then I think he has a mistaken notion of the proprieties.

For myself as a woman of the world, I see no "gallantry" in anyone, whatever his rank may be, forcing his company unasked upon women visitors however "disconsolate" he thinks them to be.

Surely "Bachelor" must have written in haste and without due consideration.

MURIEL H.

CHRISTMAS WATER SPORTS.

Sir,—It seems the right thing for everyone to write, making some suggestion for winter sport so I don't wish to be left out in the cold. Being a keen lover of swimming and aquatics at all seasons of the year and knowing that there are others who have not abandoned such healthy exercise even on the dullest days, I venture to hope some effort will be made to hold a Rhineland Regatta and Water Carnival on Chrisimas morning.

I, for one, would enter whatever the temperature and now that the wearing of fur by both sexes is so common, I don't doubt that the spectators on the banks could keep reasonably warm.

Anyhow it would be an interesting experiment. What do others say?

SPARTAN.

AUSTRIANS TO LUNCH.

Sir,—I was proud as a Britisher to see to-day how we treated our prisoners of war. I refer to the Austrian officers, now passing through Cologne on their way home. They were entertained to lunch and tea at the Officers' Club and were given the liberty of the place, although this involved some slight inconvenience to the allied officers who desired refreshment. This is only as it should be.

However, I cannot but contrast it with the way in which British Officers were repatriated a year ago. We marched to the station and travelled in cattle trucks—except the lucky ones who got 3rd or 4th class carriages—and for food we had chiefly to rely upon our parcels from home.

That was the method of "Kultur"; to-day's example was the way of the simple Briton. HUNO.

THE FEELINGS OF AN INTERNATIONAL.

BY

SYDNEY C. PUDDEFOOT.

THE FAMOUS CENTRE-FORWARD OF WEST HAM, WHO PLAYED FOR ENGLAND IN THE VICTORY INTERNATIONALS.

I suppose it may be taken for granted that every footballer who takes up the game seriously, cherishes secret hopes that one day he will be considered good enough to play for his native country. That I myself had this ambition from the moment when I first began to appear in the best football goes without saying, and to a certain extent my ambition has been realised—I have played for England.

Of course my friends who imagine that my head may get too big for my hat, constantly remind me that strictly speaking I am not an International player—that the two England v. Scotland games in which I took part were not Internationals in the real sense, and that they are not officially recorded in the blue books of the two countries concerned.

But it doesn't worry me to think that I am not really an International, and that I have only played in the Victory matches between the two countries. After all, Internationals are played every ordinary year, but Victory Internationals are something unique. So I retort to my severe friends that quite a lot of people have played in ordinary Internationals, but that very few have played in Victory Internationals.

However, I set out to tell of the feelings of a young player when he turns out as one of the country's chosen. Do you know what was the first question I asked when I learned that I had been chosen as the centre-forward for England against Scotland. It was this: "Who are the players on either side of me?" I somehow felt instinctively that whether I was a success or a failure would depend to a very large extent on the men chosen for these positions.

MY GOOD PARTNERS.

And my luck was in, for if I myself had been asked the one man I would prefer at inside right, my reply would have been "Danny" Shea. And it was "Danny" Shea who was England's inside right in the two games in which I played last spring.

You see there is a sort of real attachment between Shea and myself. He used to play for West Ham when I was a mere school-boy and I often watched him and wondered in the way young footballers have, if ever I should be good enough to play in a first-class team. I joined West Ham when Shea left, and surely it shows that the long arm of coincidence has not lost its use when I was chosen to play at centre-forward with Shea as one of my partners.

But although to find such a man as Shea on my right, and that very fine shot, Joe Smith on my left, was a big relief, I can assure you, that between the day I was chosen and the day I turned out on the Everton ground I was constantly wondering how I should shape. I couldn't forget that the centre-forward has, perhaps of all men on the field, the hardest job in an International side. He is the leader of the attack, and being called upon to play in a forward line with men to whose methods I was comparatively strange, I wondered how I should get on with them—or how they would get on with me, which was equally important.

Eventually, the great day came, and we turned out at Goodison Park, Everton, to meet the chosen of Scotland.

It will probably come as a surprise to the reader to learn that I never had any qualms or felt a little bit nervous when I turned out. So many people had told me that they had felt nervy in their big game, that this absence of nervousness surprised even myself considering the occasion and the crowd. I confess, however, that I was disappointed with the play in the first half. We seemed to be all at sixes and sevens, but perhaps that is not surprising seeing that we were all strangers to each other, and of course for the fact that we were at sixes and sevens I must take a big share of the blame. Perhaps we were all too keen, as well.

GETTING EXCITED.

Anyway, I remember that after one of the matches, a well-known critic said of my play: "Puddefoot must take things a little bit easier, and guard against giving the impression all the time that he is apt to tumble over." As a matter of fact, that was exactly how I did feel. I was too anxious to get on and do something. Consequently, in that first match, especially, I did not do as much as I ought to have done.

However, every possible encouragement and help was given to me by the other members of the forward line—older heads than mine most of them carried. I confess I felt quite envious of the luck of young Turnbull—a player making his first appearance, like myself—when he scored a goal early in the game. That incident also gave me distinct encouragement, for I began to find my feet almost immediately and to do myself justice. "If only I could get a goal like that," I thought, "just to show the people that I had some sort of right to be in the team."

Well, as luck would have it, I did get a goal late in the game, and as that goal was the means of saving England from defeat you can guess that I was a very happy man afterwards. I felt as though it would probably be the means of getting me another chance to play for England, and that surmise proved to be right. I am not out, fishing for a compliment when I say that I have played ever so much better in many ordinary matches than I did in my first International at Goodison, and I am firmly convinced that it was only that luck in scoring a goal which saved me from being "dropped."

However, I got my place again in the side which played the return game at Hampden Park, and my chief impression of that second contest is of the mighty throng. If I remember rightly, there were over 80,000 people present. And aren't those Scots enthusiastic?

THE SCOTTISH MATCH.

I may be wrong, but it seemed to me, looking back over these two games, that the Scot is about ten times as mad on football as the average Englishman. Certainly in the whole of my career I have never played before such a wholehearted crowd as that which assembled on that very fine ground at Glasgow.

The game was worthy of their enthusiasm, too. There may have been finer contests between England and Scotland in the past, but quite a lot of people assured me afterwards that for sheer excitement it was not easy to remember a better fight.

In this second game I felt much more at home than I did in the first one. I seemed to feel my feet much more surely, and it will be remembered that after Grimsdell had performed the unusual feat for a half-back of scoring two goals, I was lucky enough to get one past Brownlie and make the score 3—0 in our favour. Then we seemed to have the match won, but we were yet to realise the stern fighting qualities of the Scots. How they stormed our goal time after time, and gradually worked off the arrears, is well known now.

But all's well that end's well, and I got another goal in the second half. And now my chief feeling is that I want to play for England again, if only for the purpose of being able to tell my friends that I am a real International. Whether I shall do so or not remains to be seen. Meantime we at West Ham are concentrating on our Second League matches and not finding them too easy to win, I can tell you.

OXFORD v. CAMBRIDGE.

The following have been selected to represent Oxford v. Cambridge University in the cross-country race at Roehampton on Saturday Dec. 13: E. A. Montague (Rugby and Magdalen). W. A. Grace (The Leys, Cambridge and Queen's), J. A. Lanyon (Wellington and New College), and A. R. C. Bolton (Berkhamsted and Merton). The fifth Blue will be awarded after the match against the Blackheath Harriers at Oxford on Saturday.

RUGBY 'NATIONAL.

Five Yorkshire Men Selected in Trial Team.

The North fifteen to meet England in the first Rugby trial at Liverpool on the 6th of December has been selected as follows:

W. H. Pemberton, Cheshire; W. Jackson, Lancashire; O. E. H. Leslie, Yorkshire; F. M. Arkle, Cheshire; J. Saint, Cumberland; E. Myers, Yorkshire; R. P. Bloor, Cheshire; Capt. A. H. McIlwaine, Yorkshire; C. Tosney, Yorkshire; H. J. White, Yorkshire; F. G. Langford, Lancashire; P. Cheshire, Cheshire; A. Morgan, Cumberland; E. Dove, Durham, and H. Whitehead, Lancashire.

LANCASHIRE COUNTY C.C.

The annual report of the Lancashire County Cricket Club, issued yesterday, states that the number of members is now 1,849, an increase of 500 during the year and within 200 of the number before the war. Expenses have been exceptionally heavy owing to necessary repairs and replacements following the non-use of the ground for cricket purposes during the war. The financial position of the club is stronger than when the year began. At the turnstiles at Old Trafford during the season the sum of £23,490 was received from over 78,000 people. One match next season will be played for the benefit of Harry Dean, the left-handed bowler.

ARMY FIXTURES.

On the ground that, being so near to the 'Varsity match, the turf would be spoiled for that game, the Universities have objected to the Army playing their matches at Queen's Club on Dec. 3 and Dec. 6. Consequently the match, Army v. United Hospitals, on Dec. 3, will take place at Richmond; and Army v. London Scottish, on Dec. 6, will possibly be played at Blackheath.

The game between Woolwich and Sandhurst and the Army on Dec. 10 will take place either at Blackheath or Richmond.

TO-DAY'S ENGLISH LEAGUE MATCHES.

Burnley out for Revenge at Bradford.

SOME PROMISING GAMES.

Among the matches taking place this afternoon, none will arouse more interest than the meeting of Newcastle United and Sunderland. Last Saturday the Wearsiders administered the Magpies third defeat of the season, and, to-day, they journey to St. James' Park. There are signs that the spoils will not leave the Gallowgate ground.

Another great battle will be that at Sheffield where West Bromwich face the Wednesday who last week put paid to the Throstles' account at the Hawthorns. Anything may happen here, but the Wednesday should just manage to do the Tynesiders another good turn.

Bolton have not beaten Everton for four seasons at Bolton, but to-day's match may provide a "form upsetting" result.

Burnley go to Bradford and after last week's debacle the Lancashire team will be all out for revenge. The Bradford stronghold will take a lot of storming.

Second League Fare.

In Division II the chief interest centres around West Ham and Fulham while Tottenham and Notts Forest will provide good fare at White Hart Lane. Rotherham may beat Birmingham, but it is only three seasons ago since Birmingham suffered an 8—2 defeat on this ground.

The South will be greatly interested in the doings of Portsmouth who oppose Queens Park Rangers. The last meeting of these teams at Pompey saw the Rangers defeated 7—1, and while to-days result may not be so substantial it should show Portsmouth as victors.. Plymouth and Reading will be another great battle, with a draw as a likely termination.

In Scotland Celtic go to Aberdeen and this match is best left alone as the Park eleven are thoroughly unreliable to-day. The Rangers meet Albion Rovers but even with the latter's ground advantage the Glasgow men should bag the spoils. Motherwell and Airdrieonian encounters always produce, in sporting language, "dog-fights." To-days may add to the list.

Appended is the list of to-days games.

SPORT IN BRIEF.

F. Pratt's New Charge.

Bepani has joined F. Pratt's team, with which he will in future be trained.

To Train for Jumping.

Prince Danilo has been sent from Newmarket to Lewes to be trained for N.H. work.

Aunt Anna's Price.

Aunt Anna was sold to Mr. W. Champley for 170 guineas at Newbury and now goes into Poole's stable.

Another Gore Jockey.

T. Fieley, who was a prominent lightweight jockey in Ireland some years ago, will ride for Gore's stable this winter.

Daniel Sold.

Daniel who has been sold by Mrs. James to Mr. Douglas Clarke, has been sent to Findon to be trained for hurdle racing.

Prince Philip.

The Irish grey horse, Prince Philip, who broke down while being prepared for the Cesarewitch, will be sent to the stud shortly.

Poole's Jumpers.

Poole has a large stable of jumpers, which has been augmented by the arrival of several horses belonging to Mr. J. W. Harvie.

Jockey-Trainer.

B. M. Bullock is still another steeplechase jockey who is combining training with riding. He has a small stable of horses at Hednesford.

From Wantage to Lingfield.

The horses in training owned by Mr. and Mrs. Rudd have left their training quarters at Wantage for Lingfield, Surrey, where they will spend the winter months.

Sportsman's Death.

The death has occurred at his residence, Staunton Grange, Notts, of Mr. J. T. Fair aged fifty-nine, manager of one of the largest brewery undertakings in the Midlands, and president of the Notts County Football Club. Mr. Fair was an alderman of the County of Nottingham.

Another Coventry Player.

P. Quin, of Bradford City, has been secured for Coventry City, and will be available next Saturday against Blackpool at either inside right or centre forward, though it is in the latter position that the team requires strengthening. Quin is a native of North Shields and played for the club of that town before joining Bradford City.

ORGANIZATION OR SPIRIT?

Matches Arranged but Spirit of Play Absent.

"OLD BRIGADE" RETURNS.

That the discussion that has been running in these columns on the subject of the falling off of the sporting activities of units in the Rhine Army, has been followed with considerable interest, is evidenced by the large number of letters we have received. Various causes are blamed for the state of affairs that undoubtedly exists, and the following article is typical of many views received recently. "Old Brigade" writes as follows:

"Anti-Cant" has been up in the clouds again, romancing. My last article was filled to overflowing with indisputable facts to which he makes no reply, whilst about the figures, which, with striking force, display the present day lack of love of sport, he is as silent as the grave. Sports Committees, which in a previous article, he strongly advocated, he now condemns. The ludicrous manner in which he has portrayed to readers of the "Cologne Post," the working of such a committee in my own battalion, and the air of authority with which he speaks, I intend to ignore. Instead I shall point out a few striking facts which throw an entirely different light on the work of a committee.

System or men to Blame?

Backed by the sporting instinct which was so much in evidence at the beginning of this year, our system of organization would have been an instantaneous success. Last May, my battalion had not half the amount of sporting kit which it now possesses. Other battalions — and there were many — were in a similar position. But, Sport flourished. It was the breath of life to the Rhine Army, if one judged from the crowded columns of this paper. Recently, many units have broken up or returned home and consequently sports gear is plentiful and can be had without any trouble. Organization too has not been neglected. Yet in the face of these improvements the spirit of sport has diminished greatly rather than increased.

The Wrong Spirit.

Even if, as "Anti-Cant" says, there is a lack of organisation, (which I do not admit in the least), is it the right spirit for the Young Soldier to neglect out-door recreation and games because everything is not in "apple-pie" order, or because the Sports Committee, upon which sits a member from his platoon, does not bring to him his "strips" whenever he wishes to play? Or perhaps he has a grumble against them for not providing a ground nearer to his billet? No. All that is the matter is that the old time enthusiasm and love of the game are missing.

As for the Committee discussing such trivial matters as the washing of "strips"—such a statement is verging on the ridiculous. Keenness is expected from the members, but to convene a meeting of the committee for such a purpose would only be the act of a crank or a lunatic. In my battalion a sports orderly is responsible for the maintenance of all kit in first class order. He looks after washing. He sees that grounds are marked out and footballs dubbined. His duty it is to keep all football boots studded and attend to all matters which will keep up to standard everything labelled "Sports Kit."

Not a Post Office.

"Anti-Cant" has pictured the Battalion Sports Office as a sort of paper distributing agency. It may come as a shock to him, but I do not sit in a chair all day and dictate affairs to a number of satellites whose duty it is to send out programmes to Company Commanders. Neither is all my work done on paper. I am at all times in personal touch with the men and I consider nothing too important and nothing too trivial to deal with. I have done my best to kindle the fire of enthusiasm at the shrine of Sport but have generally met with no response. I have worked hard to obtain the large stocks of sports gear which we now possess, whilst engagements for months ahead have been posted up in different parts of the billet. Although I appear to be writing in a boastful spirit, it is only in fairness to myself that I make the above statements. I hope, at any rate that I have done my duty as Sports Officer.

A Nest of Sport.

Football and hockey in the middle of summer, in the heat of Continental sunshine. Think of it, and the perspiring atoms of humanity who, at the call of the President of their Sports Committee, "Anti-Cant," bathed in a sea of sweat and enjoyed it. What paragons of sport! What illuminating examples of our traditional spirit which somehow or other, has so declined that we cannot raise it in the cold and ideal days of November. When I read the formidable list of sports in which the men of his battalion were engaged it makes me wonder how much time was available for military training. Cannot he give me some practical suggestions of how to infuse this spirit into our men, instead of romancing away from the cold, hard facts of truth, which he so calmly ignores. I am afraid that he misses the material side of things and contents himself with being partly a dreamer and much more of a critic.

Contradictions.

It is rather strange to me that the men of "Anti-Cant's" battalion performed such tremendous feats of endurance on the playing fields, especially at cricket. He tells us that his battalion ran an Inter Company cricket league, besides taking part in the "Cologne Post" Cup Competition. In addition they played a host of friendly matches. And yet in a previous article he deplores the difficulty of getting hold of sports kit and also the impossibility of obtaining a cricket bat from the Army. If his battalion was able to obtain cricket kit enough to play all these matches together surely he should have experienced no difficulty in the meeting of his simple requirements.

Therefore I once again assert that the lack of sport on the Rhine to-day is due entirely to the bad spirit displayed by the younger element in the Army.

RACING REFORMS.

Important Decisions of the Jockey Club.

LARGER PRIZES.

In continuation of a previous telegram some further important decisions of the Jockey Club at their recent meeting are announced. It was decided that the club should exercise closer control over finance and management at all racecourses than hitherto and that the right of granting and withholding fixtures should be used in order to enforce this control.

The notice, originally published in 1883 regarding the promotion scheme for new racecourses and limiting the rate of dividend subsequent to that date, was cancelled.

It was further decided that no fresh issue of capital should be made by any racecourse, whether issue, debentures or otherwise, unless the consent of the Stewards of the Jockey Club had first been obtained.

A new Condition.

With reference to the granting of new licenses it was held that one of the conditions obtaining should be that the racecourse should be run on non-profit earning lines. The club will make representations to the Ministry of Transportation regarding the fares charged for the conveyance of horses to and from race meetings. It was considered desirable that more money be given as prizes to horses finishing second and third, particularly in long distance races, and that all races except selling and apprentice events shall be sweepstakes. In future racecourses when applying for their fixtures must submit a complete programme for the year showing how much they propose to add to each sweepstake.

Finally the Jockey Club is prepared to consider favourably all suitable schemes for the amalgamation of selected racecourses.

NEWBURY RACING.

Odds on Favourites win Three Events.

After a foggy morning the weather cleared at Newbury on Thursday, the going was good and there was a large attendance.

DETAILS.

Yatesbury Hurdle. 1, Chaplain (4—1); 2, Simon Cellarer (6—4); 3, Parson Jack (8—1). Six ran.

Alfreston Chase. Rathleague (5—2 on) beat Beadnell. Two ran.

Juvenile Hurdle. 1, Irish Fair (5—1); 2, Raboodles (100—7): 3, Girvan (9—2). Thirteen ran.

Andover Chase. 1, Mark back (15—8 on); 2, Childlike (3—1); 3, Redman (5—1). 3 ran.

GRUELLING CONTEST.

Noble Knocks out Watson in Eighteenth Round.

Great interest was taken in the contest at the Holborn Stadium on Thursday evening between the featherweights, Tommy Noble and Tibby Watson, of Australia. It was the most serious fight Watson has undertaken. Recently he has figured in three bouts with men of lesser boxing experience and skill, and on each occasion came out an easy victor. Consequently the boxing world was more than a little anxious to see how he would shape when opposed by a first-class exponent.

The result was a win for Noble by a knockout in the eighteenth round. The Englishman displayed greater skill and a more finished style than the Australian and after a gruelling contest he forced Watson into a corner during the eighteenth meeting and brought him down for the full count with a heavy right swing to the jaw.

Watson while lacking some of the finer touches showed himself to be a boxer of splendid courage and determination. The last of him has by no means been heard.

YANKS FOR FRANCE.

Well-known boxers expected to arrive shortly.

There is a flutter of excitement among the boxing fraternity in France at the announcement that several well-known American boxers are expected to arrive in that country shortly. Among them will be the coloured boxer Sam Macyes, Peter Herman, Coulon, Jack Dillon, Gibbons, Johnnie Ritchie, Batley and Levanksy.

ROSS AND LEDOUX.

To meet in Paris on December 6th.

An important boxing match for the bantamweight championship of Europe between Charles Ledoux, of France, and Walter Ross, of England, will take place at the Cirque de Paris on December 6th.

Georges Carpentier who will have returned from his meeting with Beckett on December 4th will act as referre.

BILLIARDS.

The closing scores in the principal billiards matches on Thursday evening were:—

Reece...13584 Stevenson 10208
Newman 6312 Inman..... 4487

Breaks:—
Reece, 185, 170, 387, 124, 139.
Newman, 229, 359, 118, 149, 161, 122, and 127.
Inman, 182 and 170.

Leave Club Whist Drive.

An unusually large number attended the whist drive on Thursday at the British Empire Leave Club. The Gentlemen were the highest scorers, Pte. Bennon being first with 165, and Pte. Morley and Cpl. Eveleigh "cut" for 2nd and 3rd with a score of 162. First and second "ladies" were Pte. Cameron and Pte. Carroll both 157; and Pte. Smith was 3rd with 155. Spr. Greaves was also 156 but lost the "cuts." Pte Green, 5th Border Regiment acted as M.C.

Dancing at the A. and G. College.

Among the enjoyable social functions in Cologne, the invitation dances at the Hansa Ring College form a conspicuous institution. The Library is eminently suitable for such occasions while the gallery and adjoining rooms provide most convenient supper and sitting out accommodation, although there are not many mere spectators of these functions. The dance which took place on Wednesday was a great success while the actual dancing reached a very high standard of excellence. I suppose that under the eye of the professor the followers of the terpsichorean art feel bound to produce their best.

Leave Club Dance.

Another very enjoyable fancy dress dance was held at the British Empire Leave Club on Wednesday night. The large hall, tastefully decorated in black and white was crowded with elegant figures representative of every nationality and age. The genius displayed in devising costumes in adverse circumstances was wonderful and the resulting melee of colour entertained the packed crowds of spectators who were fortunate enough to secure a point of view in the gallery.

Whist Drive.

"C" Company of the 52nd Devonshire Regiment spent a very enjoyable evening on Monday, when a whist drive was held, about a hundred players taking part. During the refreshment interval a "hidden number" was drawn for both "lady" and gentlemen players, and in each case a prize was awarded. At the close of the entertainment the prizes were presented by the Commanding Officer to the following:—Ladies: 1st L/C Richardson; 2nd Cpl. Sanders; Hidden No. Pte. Stacey; Booby Pte. Fulford. Gentlemen: 1st Pte. Berriman; 2nd Pte. Ranahan; Hidden No. Pte. Norsworthy; Booby Pte. Button.

At the Dischsaal.

The famous German comedian, Herr Joseph Plant, is giving two merry evening performances on Monday and Tuesday next at the Dischsaal, Cologne, commencing at 8 p.m.

JACQUES.

CALAIS "SWEEP."

All prize winners in Commander Bickford's sweepstakes are requested to send their claim and tickets, plainly written in block letters, by registered post to Commander W. Bickford, 53, Quai de la Tamaise, Calais, France, when cheques will be forwarded.

ANOTHER COMPETITION.

Only Ten Results To Be Forecasted In Football Contest No. 11.

To-day, we publish the first coupon in connection with No. 11 Football Competition. It will be seen that there are again only ten matches given.

Last week's winner was a sapper, due for demobilization, who confessed that the prize-money would be usefully employed on his return to civilian life. Would not a thousand or two marks be acceptable to you? One mark is all that it costs to submit a coupon and YOU are just as likely to give a correct forecast of next Saturday's matches as anyone else.

On the coupon printed below, strike out the team you think will lose, or, if you predict a draw, leave both teams standing, add your name and address clearly, place the coupon in an envelope with one mark and send it along to this office. Any number of coupons may be sent at the rate of one mark each.

Coupons must be addressed:—

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Not Infallible.

"I can tell by a glance at his face if an officer has his wife out here," said a friend at the Club yesterday. "Look at those three" he added, "everyone is very much married." I ascertained afterwards that neither was even a Benedick, though one was engaged.

Worn Out.

This has been one of the busiest dancing weeks in the history of the Rhine Army. Our dancing Editor who has been to every one of the revels is for the nonce "excused duty."

Forty-Nine.

Everyone seems to be hunting up German words of abnormal length and sending them to me. This is the latest example. It is from a Government notice and contains forty-nine letters.—Staatsschulden tilgungs kanzlei sekretariats aspirant.

Novelties.

I noticed an article labelled "Peace-knife," among the novelties in a shop window yesterday.

Lady Frederick.

I hear, via my pet canary, that the production of "Lady Frederick" at the Deutsches Theatre next week will be a marvellous affair. The same little bird suggests that a recent visit to Paris may have resulted in the production of some wonderful dresses which will grace the boards on Monday next. Lady readers please note.

"COLOGNE POST" CELEBRITIES
No. II. "ANTI-BOX."

Windy Corner.

Which is Cologne's windiest corner? Many I know plump for the one at the top of the Dom Hof and judging by my own experiences there, I certainly agree.

Largely Imaginary.

An officer just back from leave in Paris during awful weather conditions says that the terrible stories telling of no fires there are gross exaggerations. He found Paris quite warm, thank you.

Back To Austria.

Cologne has been full of Austrian officers, many of high rank, passing through on repatriation after having been prisoners of war. They looked quite picturesque in their long blue cloaks.

A Kiddy's Grouse.

A sergeant, whose small son is out here, told me that young hopeful was penning a letter to the "Post" complaining that no Punch and Judy Shows are provided for British children in Rhineland and asking that steps might be taken to supply the want.

No Crush.

An officer just back from Blighty tells me the leave train is almost empty in these days. He and three others had one saloon carriage entirely to themselves.

Theirs—Not Ours.

Occasionally I run across folk who have a notion that correspondence in our "Letter Box" represents Editorial views. Of course that isn't so at all. We just hear all sides and accept no responsibility for our readers' views.

Up And Down.

The mark seems to be more than usually "jumpy" just now. When it settles down to something—whatever it is—it will be better for everybody, and perhaps there will be fewer grouses about canteen and institute prices which can't possibly be regulated to everyone's liking at a day's notice under present difficult conditions.

A Piebald.

Yesterday I happened to see a piebald horse in the Hansa Ring. Of course I pulled myself together and wished. What do you think my wish was. Early demob? Guess again.

Like Cinderella.

On leaving the Black and White dance at the Leave Club some fair danseuse shed a daintly shoe and went off in a car without noticing her loss. I don't know how sizes of ladies' shoes run, but I'm told it's quite a wee one.

Monte Cristo.

A certain well-known Cologne picture house is advertising a screen play adapted from this celebrated story by the famous French author, Alexandre Dumas.

Costly and Scarce.

I am told that the best German pianos cost from 12,000 to 14,000 marks to-day and even at this price they are very difficult to obtain. Very few retailers have any of the most famous makes in stock.

Postage To Belgium.

All letters, etc., sent by British units or troops in the Rhine Army to civil addresses in Belgium must now be prepaid by means of British postage stamps when posted at Army post offices, at the rate of 2½d for the first ounce and 1½d for each succeeding ounce or fraction thereof.

Savage Horses.

There appears to be an abnormally large number of savage horses in Cologne. On three occasions yesterday I saw animals at a standstill, make efforts to bite passers by.

What to Read.

The following recent additions have been made to the Y.M.C.A. Central Library Lord Fisher's Memories; Sir Percy Scott's Fifty Years in the Royal Navy; Admiral von Tirpitz's My Memories; Charles C. Turner's The Struggle in the Air; "Bartimaeus" An Awfully Big Adventure; Stella Benson's Living Alone; "Taffrail's" H.M.S. Anonymous; J. B. Morton's The Barber of Putney; Sax Rohmer's The Golden Scorpion; Mrs. A. Sidgwick's The Purple Jar; Thomas Hardy's Collected Poems.

Costly Shelter.

A smoker sheltering behind his "better half" in order to light his pipe the other evening was the cause of a commotion in Marzellen strasse. He succeeded in setting alight the feather boa his wife was wearing and, incidentally, the lady received slight burns before it was extinguished.

Puzzling.

Some one I know, who is going to Lithuania, says his great difficulty will be to remember each morning who he is going to fight. At present the Lithuanians are engaged on three fronts.

Ghosts.

During the course of a debate on ghosts, a sergeant, who is a very keen debater, expressed his disbelief in vigorous language. The same night he was kept awake for a couple of hours by mysterious tappings in his bedroom. What is the explanation?

Not in his Time.

A somewhat elderly major, rather a bore with his reminiscences, was saying in the mess, "You know when the Romans were in occupation of Rhineland." Then a young sub. rudely interposed the query: "You weren't here then by any chance were you, Sir?"

RHINELANDER.

OPINIONS OF THE MOMENT.

THE WORLD'S EXCHANGES.

Sir George Paish, on the break in the world's exchanges and the position of credit, says:—We are running into debt to America at the rate of over £500,000,000 a year, and Europe is running into debt to us at the rate of over $400,000,000 a year, but America has the better chance of getting paid. To protect its interests America has appointed a National Committee of leading financiers, industrial magnates, and lawyers, to see how long credits can be given to Europe. I consider that it is only by international action, by all countries pooling their economic resources, that the situation can be relieved, and it is only by every country resuming production, that it can be solved.

MEDICAL RESEARCH.

James Mackenzie, the Clinical Institute, St. Andrews, says:—If anyone would inquire into the history of medical research during the last quarter of a century, he would be struck by the great number of projects that have been started with the most buoyant expectation, and which have ended in disappointment. We have but to look at the history of the crusade against consumption to discover that, notwithstanding the enormous expenditure of energy and money, we are far from understanding the things necessary for the prevention and cure of this complaint. There are factors still undiscovered which determine its incidence, and if the reason of the failure be inquired into, it will be found in the fact that medical knowledge has not advanced far enough to enable us to recognize these factors, or even the lines on which the investigation should be pursued.

NEXT GREAT REFORM.

Mr. John Burns declares that the next great reform will be the autonomy of the local authority, the independence of the citizen, and the freedom of both from the overlordship of central bureaus run by stilted supermen whose ability is often in inverse ratio to their obtrusive prominence and advertisement. If I were a Minister again my chief task would be to strike off all shackles that fetter local initiative in policy, variety, in administration, and experiment, and in new method. An overdrilled people, an over-inspected nation, and bureaucrised departments mean a routine machine and a race looking in vain to the centre for what they can do better for themselves.

CONDUCT OF WAR.

Major-General Sir George Aston says: Long ago, eminent British naval and military historians urged the need for devising an executive body for the control of sea and land operations. We entered the Great War, however, without having devised an efficient system. Executive power for conducting the war was entrusted normally to a sanhedrim of 21 civilian statesmen and one soldier. It is generally believed that the continuance of that arrangement would have drifted us to defeat. The War Cabinet system, subsequently devised, is probably the best that can be applied to democratic countries not containing any single leading statesman who, like the elder Pitt, has made the conduct and nature of war the study of a lifetime.

CASE AGAINST SUBSIDIES.

Mr. William Wallace says:—The case against subsidies to the speculative builder is surely not weaker but stronger now. A year ago, the Government might very well have decided that in spite of objections the need for immediate building was so urgent that subsidies should be given to anyone who would build. They might have urged that the speculative builder knew the job, and could start at once, while the local authorities would be reluctant and dilatory. But now for twelve months the Government have, by alternate cajolery and threats, been inducing the local authorities to prepare schemes. Up to date 5,842 schemes have been submitted. Site schemes have already been approved covering 22,500 acres, or sufficient for 225,000 houses at 10 to the acre. Already the labour for the schemes so far approved is proving inadequate, and the only effect of bringing in the private builders will be to transfer to them some of the labour otherwise available for the local authorities.

TO TALK OR NOT TO TALK?

How many men realise the value of being able to make a speech when called upon to do so? How many opportunities will you be losing on returning to "civvy" life through being unable to speak before an audience? How many men deliver an address starting with something similar to this:—"It gives me the greatest pleasure etc," the while their faces show that if they had been going through the tortures of the inquisition, it would not have been a more trying ordeal, and how many are there who break down altogether without being able to say more than half a sentence?

There are many, who go to a meeting with a fixed determination to acquit themselves honourably, but when called upon to do so, their memories become a blank.

The only way to improve this is by practising. The more you speak before an audience, the easier it becomes.

The remedy is there if you will only avail yourselves of it. Join the Empire Leave Club Debating Society.

Debates are held every Friday night at 6.30 p.m. in the Writing Room. Subject for next Friday—"Is Everything Fair in War?" No charge for joining—all you have to do, is to turn up.

There are two classes of men to whom this appeals. Those who can speak, and those who cannot. Those who can speak should join to give the necessary "go" to the debates, and to help make them a success. Still more should those, who cannot speak, join, as they now have the opportunities to practise the art, so that on their return to "civvy" life they will have nothing to lose through lack of confidence.

Why hesitate? Is it because you think you do not need practice, if so, come to a debate, and you will be able to satisfy yourselves on that point, or find out your mistake before it is too late.

Do you think you will be making fools of yourselves. It is better to do it here than to wait until your return to "civvy" life, when a lot may depend upon your ability at speech making. Every encouragement is given and nobody jeers at a failure, because we all are, or have been in the same state ourselves.

SHATTERED HOPES.

In no sense a grouser, Pte. Bolton had, nevertheless, one grievance, and only one so far as we could discover during the three months we spent with him on the Rhine. It was not associated with demobilization: short of extending his service no one could possibly have waited more patiently for his release than did Bolton.

Nor was he one to lie in wait for the Orderly Officer at the Mess; a week of Machonachie would not have produced a complaint from his lips; nor smoker though he was, would he have protested had the cigarette issue failed to get through the Q. M. Stores.

His indent for marks might be cut down on pay day, his favourite fraulein transfer her wayward affections—none of these disappointments could mar the purity of a speech singularly free from adjectives.

An extra duty he accepted without comment and the Q.M's. refusal to replace a shirt to which five chevrons and the Mons Ribbon might fairly be attached he regarded with a philosophical unconcern which only a tramp, with no prejudices as regards hosiery, might equal.

No; in all these trials of the flesh Pte. Bolton presented, what was apparently, the silence of indifference. Yet, as stated he had a grievance, and one, moreover, which made his company on walks abroad, somewhat embarrassing.

His one grievance was on the subject of saluting. It was not that he had any feeling against officers; nothing more than the inconvenience was responsible for his aversion to the practice. Long practice had given him an exceptional degree of skill in dodging officers, and one found, at times, that a companion who disappeared down side streets without warning detracted somewhat from the pleasure which, apart from this failing, his company usally afforded.

He did not however, invariably adopt the disappearing trick when he wished to avoid saluting duty. Quite often he betrayed a sudden interest in the contents of shop windows, directing our attention to articles not usually regarded as appealing to the masculine mind, on one occasion indeed, so sudden was the officer's appearance that we were invited to inspect some examples of the undertaker's art in which Pte. Bolton manifested an "interest" quite foreign to his healthy and normal nature. To such straws did he cling in his wild efforts to escape from his simple duty.

On one occasion, however, his shop-window trick failed him. It happened one Saturday afternoon. A Staff Captain was nearly on top of us, when suddenly Bolton, clutching me by the sleeve made for the first shop in sight.

Mechanically I followed him, turning to inspect the objects of interest. The officer turned in the same direction, in time to hear Bolton's, "That's the article"—

He would have heard more, but for the fact that the article of such engrossing interest to Bolton was clearly behind the shuttered window. The officer smiled a little maliciously, and returned our somewhat shamefaced salute.

ADVENT.

Year by year in the season of Advent the Church directs men's thoughts to the practical means by which society can be recreated. The Advent of Christ is not merely a historical memory of 1919 years ago, nor a future hope; it is far more than this; it is His actual and almost visible coming at this present time in the hearts of men and nations. This thought will be reflected in the services at the Garrison Church (C. of E.) during the next four Advent Sundays.

"Only through me can come the great awaking;
Wrong cannot right the wrongs that wrong hath done;
Only through me, all other gods forsaking;
Can ye attain the heights that must be won."

LADY ASTOR, PLYMOUTH'S M.P.

THE SEATCARRIED BY A MAJORITY OF FIVE THOUSAND.

MORE BRITISH SOLDIERS SHOT AT CAIRO.

LADY ASTOR, M.P.

BOUDOIR AT THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Lady Astor, who by a bumping majority of 5,202 has retained Plymouth for the Coalition Unionists, has the distinction of being the first woman member to represent an English constituency. In anticipation of her success at the polls, rooms had already been set aside in the House of Commons as boudoir, sitting and writing rooms for women members. At present Lady Astor will be the only occupant unless Contess Markievics, the Sinn Feiner, should assert her right to share it. Lady Astor will be introduced to the House by Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Bonar Law.

The figures at the Plymouth by-election were as follows:—

Viscountess Astor, Coalition Unionist 14,495,
Mr. Gay, Labourite 9,292,
Mr. Foot, Liberal ..... 4,139.

At the last election the figures were:—Major Astor 17,091, Mr. Gay, Labourite, 5,334, Captain Ransom, Liberal, 3,488.

HARMSWORTH WINS THANET.

The Thanet by-election result was also announced yesterday as follows:—

Mr. Harmsworth, Coalition Unionist 9,711,
Captain West, Liberal ..... 7,058.

At the general election Lieut.-Commander Craig, Coalition Unionist, was returned unopposed.

O'GRADY MISSION.

ALL PRISONERS IN GOOD HEALTH.

The British Government re-affirmed its position regarding the O'Grady Mission, namely, that negotiations with Litvinoff are in no case to go beyond the question of exchange of prisoners, which matter, it is expected, will be concluded within a few days. Litvinoff has enquired into the present position of all the British Military, Naval and Air prisoners at Moscow. He has personally visited some of the prisons and seen the prisoners and declared that all are well except some of the wounded. He is sending wireless instructions to Moscow and Petrograd regarding the civilian prisoners and asking for a report on their state of health.

Personal relations have so far been quite smooth. The British delegates have learned that, instead of 101 British prisoners, there are 110, while there are about 1,000 British nationals in Russia, mostly at Moscow and Petrograd.

ROSE FROM THE RANKS.

COURT-MARTIAL ON GRAVE CHARGE.

A Court-martial was held at Aldershot on Friday on Temporary Lieut.-Colonel S. D. Rumbold, C.M.G., D.S.O., M.C., 8th Battn. Yorks and Lancs, who enlisted in 1914 as a private. He was charged with acts of indecency and pleaded guilty. His counsel called a nerve specialist who stated that the acts of accused showed clearly that he was suffering from war strain. Pending confirmation the finding of the Court was not announced.

AMERICA'S DEAD.

PROPOSAL FOR EXHUMATION.

A Washington message announces that the United States Department has sent instructions to the American Ambassador in Paris to open with the French Government the question of exhuming the remains of American soldiers now lying buried in France.

COL. WARD PAYS SOLDIER'S FINE.

Colonel Ward, M.P., attended the South-Western Police Court, yesterday, as a witness, and came to the aid of a private soldier unable to pay his fine of 7s. for using obscene language.

"I will pay," said Colonel Ward, and he handed the money to the court official.

The soldier thanked the colonel, and shaking hands with him, left the court.

MEXICAN PRESIDENT'S FLIGHT.

A telegram has been received from San Antonio, Texas, reporting that fighting has broken out in Mexico City between the Carranza and Obnegon factions. President Carranza is stated to have fled to Queretaro.

Councillor Richard Earle, local secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen, has been appointed first Labour magistrate at Ramsgate.

CAIRO OUTRAGES.

TWO MORE BRITISH SOLDIERS WOUNDED.

Lord Allenby has issued a proclamation at Cairo warning the population that incitement to disorderly demonstrations or other acts subversive of authority constitute an offence under Martial-law. The officer recently assassinated was Captain Cohen of the Labour Corps. The four Nationalists arrested for disobeying Lord Allenby's order to leave Cairo have been released and have gone to their villages.

According to a telegram from Lord Allenby dated Wednesday shots were fired in the Tewjikieh quarter at two British soldiers returning from the theatre. Both were hit, together with a Greek girl. This is the third outrage of this sort in which the assailants have escaped arrest.

EX-OFFICERS' DEMAND.

HALF-PAY UNTIL WORK IN FOUND.

A deputation from the National Union of Ex-Officers waited on the Executive of the Army Committee at the House of Commons to discuss employment for demobilized officers. A number of proposals were placed before the Committee with the request that Service Members of the House should press the Government to adopt them.

The suggestions included the following: No person who has not served in the Army or Navy to be considered for any Government appointment until all ex-officers and men have been placed; the Government to notify all local authorities that they view with disfavour appointments not given to ex-service officers and men; the Government to recognise entirely the Appointments Department of the Labour Ministry and make it compulsory for all Government Departments to notify their vacancies to the Appointments Department.

The Deputation also urged that unemployed ex-officers should be placed on half pay until able to obtain employment.

MINERS' ROUND-UP.

REMAINDER RETURN TO WORK.

The military authorities at Sverigan (Wyoming) explain that the round-up of the Carneyville coal miners who refused to return to work was made under the recent military proclamation declaring that region under military control. After the arrest of fifty-two alleged Radicals, the Bersearneyville branch of the Miners Union voted in favour of an immediate return to work. The authorities announce that deportation proceedings will be begun against the extremists.

LETTS DECLARE WAR.

GERMANS RECALLED.

Information has been received from Berlin that the Lettish Government has declared war on Germany. On account of the military and political incidents at Mitau the Lettish and German Governments have recalled their representatives. The German representatives at Riga and Libau will also be recalled.

M.P. RESIGNS.

"PANDERING TO ORGANISED LABOUR."

Major Christopher Lowther, the Unionist Member for North Cumberland, has announced that he is unable longer to support the Government "owing to its continual pandering to organised labour." He has therefore decided to resign his seat

FRENCH LABOURITES HONOURED.

A despatch from Washington announces that M. Albert Thomas, the French Labourite, has been selected as the first Director-General of the International Labour office under the League of Nations and M. Arthur Fontaine as permanent chairman of the governing body of the International Labour Conference.

SPEN VALLEY CONTEST.

A three cornered contest is assured at Spen Valley by the official announcement that Colonel Charles Bryan Fairfax, an ex-flying officer and Battalion Commander in France, will address a meeting of Coalition supporters at Cleckheaton on Saturday with a view to his adoption as official Coalition Candidate.

R.A.F. VACANCIES.

RECRUITING FOR MECHANICS RE-OPENED.

Owing to the large numbers due for discharge on completion of engagement, recruiting for the Royal Air Force has been re-opened and there are now vacancies for skilled mechanics of various trades. Engagements are for 4, 6 or 8 years with the colours and 9, 6 and 4 years respectively with the Reserve.

The official notice adds that in view of the newly revised rates of pay the openings are distinctly attractive, particularly as men will be working at their own trades and constantly gaining fresh experience which will be of great value to them on their return to civil life, by which time there will probably be a greatly increased demand for aircraft workers of all categories.

MERCIFUL JUSTICE.

PAINFUL DIVORCE COURT STORY.

A tragic story was told in the Divorce Court in a suit in which the husband, Albert Ernest Marven, asked for the dissolution of his marriage because of misconduct between his wife and a co-respondent, Harry Turner. The wife pleaded connivance and conduct conducive, and counter-charged her husband with misconduct. In addition she asked the Court to exercise discretion in her favour and grant her a decree nisi.

The parties were in humble circumstances and lived in the neighbourhood of Rochford, Essex. The wife said her husband was a drunken and lazy man, who ill-treated her, and forced her to misconduct herself with co-respondent, who later took a cottage where they all lived together—the husband, wife, children, and co-respondent.

In 1909 the wife and co-respondent went away and lived together. Next day the husband sent his own two children along to them, saying he was not going to keep them. From that time they had lived together, and co-respondent had kept not only the five children he had had by Mrs. Marven, but the husband's two children also.

Counsel, Mr. Tyndale, for the wife, contented that this was a case where the Court could rightly exercise discretion in favour of this poor woman.

His lordship said it was a difficult case, but he had come to the conclusion that the circumstances justified him in granting the wife a decree nisi. The wife deserved the sympathy of the Court. She married a worthless man who was a drunkard and lazy. On the evidence the Court was satisfied that the husband drove and beat his wife into prostitution, bringing the co-respondent into the house when there was no money, and offering the man his wife.

Before leaving the court, Mrs. Marven came forward, and said to the judge: "May I thank you for your kindness sir?"

His lordship smiled kindly, and bowed.

RULES OF DEBATE.

SCENE AT LIBERAL COUNCIL MEETING.

Addressing a meeting of the Council of the National Liberal Federation at Birmingham on Friday, Mr. Asquith said the Party truce was ended, and Liberals in the coming political battle did not intend to be a wing of either the Tory or Labour Party.

There was a scene at the meeting. An amendment from the Manchester Liberal Federation asking equal pay for women for equal work, representation of women on Whitley Committees and removal of all sex barriers, was ruled out of order on a technical point.

One Manchester delegate accused the president, Sir George Lunn, of burking the discussion. Amid considerable sensation, the Manchester delegates rose and left the hall, ignoring the President's appeal to remain.

CORRECTION.

In yesterday's issue, a paragraph recording the fact that an officer had been degraded and sent to prison for surrendering Fort Malone in 1914, was headed "French General degraded." This was an inadvertence. It should have been Belgian, of course, as the Court-martial took place at Namur.

MUST TAKE THEIR TURN.

The Scapa Flow scuttlers, interned at Oswestry, are demanding to be repatriated before Christmas. They attempted to strike against work on Tuesday, but sullenly resumed on the appearance of troops with fixed bayonets.

GERMAN HELP FOR AUSTRIA.

The German National Assembly having decided to shorten the German bread ration by 50 gr in December and to send the spare flour to Austria, the Austrian National Assembly has passed a resolution of thanks to Germany.

NO EXTRA CHRISTMAS SUGAR.

The Food Controller expresses regret that the available supplies do not permit of a larger sugar ration during the Christmas and New Year season.

BETTER OR WORSE.

WIFE'S MESSAGE TO SOLDIER HUSBAND.

The Court of Sessions at Edinburgh on Friday granted the petition of Colonel Lohn Alexander Stirling, formerly commanding the 2nd Scots Guards, for a divorce on the ground of his wife's desertion.

Petitioner said he was married in 1914. The war caused financial worries and this annoyed his wife, who unjustly accused him of marrying for money and refused to live with him. She sent him a message saying that the only thing he could do was to go away and get killed as soon as possible.

COAL AND CLOTHES.

PARIS PROTEST AGAINST DANCING.

The Archbishop of Paris, Cardinal Amette, has issued a Pastoral Letter protesting against the immodest toilettes worn by many women and the indecent dances now in vogue. He declares that Christian women and girls ought to refrain from wearing such apparel and from taking part in such amusements. This letter will be read from the pulpits of all churches on the first Sunday in Advent.

The newspaper "L'Oeuvre," commenting on the closing of Paris dancing halls, attributes this new order to a desire on the part of the Government to suppress dancing as at present practised, rather than to an endeavour to economise coal. The journal further remarks that the "Presse de Paris," at the instance of the journal "La Croix" refuses to accept advertisements of dancing halls. This, concludes "L'Oeuvre," is a sign of the times and the public authorities cannot but follow suit.

LOCKED IN A SCHOOL.

RECTOR'S PLAYFUL LITTLE WAY.

An extraordinary story of how the National School managers of Markfield (Leicestershire) were locked in a school by the rector was told at a meeting of the Market Bosworth Rural Council on Wednesday, when the council decided to serve a notice on the rector to improve the sanitary conveniences of the schools.

It was stated that at a meeting of the managers, the rector, the Rev. H. Chambers, pointed out that under the school deeds he was made the chairman of managers. The other managers, however, refused to recognise his authority. The rector gave them five minutes to clear out, and as they refused to go, he locked them in.

SINN FEIN.

FEARS FOR NEW CAMPAIGN OF VIOLENCE.

In Dublin, says the "Daily Express," it is feared that a new campaign of assassination by means of bomb outrages is about to begin, and that Lord French and other officials are in peril of their lives. The Sinn Feiners have obtained great quantities of explosives and it is expected that attacks will be made on Dublin Castle and other buildings.

Grave as may be the situation, it is regarded as an indication that the extremists have come to the end of their tether and they are losing many of their hitherto solid supporters.

A GYMCRACK NOTION.

SOMETHING BETTER THAN A LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The annual dinner of the Gymcrack Club, which was in abeyance during the war, was revived at York last night. General Sir Ivor Maxse, responding to the toast of the Imperial Forces, said he could not understand the amount of bosh talked about the League of Nations. He preferred a League of Tanks.

Sir Abe Bailey, replying for the winner of the Gymcrack Stakes, declared that the Jockey Club is not sufficiently democratic and advocated the establishment of the totalisator and the licensing of betting.

DEALING WITH THE DRINK QUESTION.

In reply to the recent Temperance Deputation from the Churches, the Premier announces that a Bill will shortly be introduced continuing the powers of the Liquor Control Board and establishing Commissions with real powers of control. These Commissions would keep local bodies up to the mark, watch experiments in other countries and study the effects of different methods of dealing with the drink question at home.

DISCIPLINE IN R.A.F.

A joint order of the Army Council and the Air Council provides that officers and airmen of the R.A.F. acting with the military forces under the Commander-in-Chief, British Army of the Rhine, shall in all respects be subject to the Army Act whilst on active service as if they were officers and airmen attached to the Army.

SUMMARY COURT.

STUPID WAITER ASKS FOR TROUBLE.

Two policemen, who were making enquiries, were accused by Joseph Cramp, a waiter of Deutscher Ring, as being bogus police, and, in fact, deserters. Although their enquiries did not concern Cramp at all, he went out and fetched two military policemen from street duty, and to these, he triumphantly pointed out the "deserters." Cramp was then asked for his own permit, which was not in order, and he had no night pass. He then became insolent.

"You were simply asking for trouble, and you found it," said the presiding officer.

"Yes, sir," admitted the accused, who was fined fifty marks for his pains.

THEFT OF CINEMA FILMS.

Alfred Wupper, a chimney sweep of Drachenfelsstrasse, pleaded guilty to being in possession of cinematograph films to the value of £500, the property of the N.A.C.B.

Wupper denied that he stole the films, and asserted that he received them from soldiers in payment of debts.

He sold four films for 750 marks to a man in the Neumarkt, who, however, reported the transaction.

Accused, who was given a good character, was committed to prison for three months.

ONE KNUCKLEDUSTER—THREE MONTHS.

When nineteen-year-old Joseph Sames, a locksmith, of no fixed abode, was arrested by the German police on suspicion of theft, a weapon of formidable possibilities, to wit, a knuckleduster, was found on him.

Charged with being in unlawful possession of arms, Sames, a bad character, was sentenced to three months imprisonment.

TURKISH NATIONALISTS.

RUMOUR OF SECRET CONGRESS.

A delayed Constantinople message says that a private telegram received on the 16th October from Sivas, the headquarters of the Turkish Nationalist movement, alleges that at the instance of Mustava Kemul Pasha, an Arab deputation from Azerbaijan was with the heads of the Turkish Nationalist movement. It is also said that an Afghan deputation is coming to Sivas, when a congress will be held in the name of all Mahomedans and an appeal made to the Supreme Council at Paris to respect the integrity of the Ottoman Empire according to stipulations made at the armistice. Nothing is known at Constantinople in corroboration of this telegram and it is thought extremely unlikely that King Hedjan has sent envoys to confer with Nationalist leaders. The probability is that Mustafa Kemal is trying to exploit the Pan-Islamic movement for his own ends.

CHRISTMAS PARCELS FROM HOME.

The Board of Trade are informed that Customs officers in Germany have been instructed to admit from all countries, without licence, postal packets weighing not more than 5 kilos (11lb.) which are not sent for trading purposes, and which contain articles of food for the personal use of the importers.

Such parcels may not contain butter, meat, and articles containing meat, bacon, flour, sugar, pineapples, prawns, ginger vanilla, caviare, substitute and caviare pickled, lobsters, and oysters. They may not contain more than 1 kilo (35oz.) each of margarine and lard; products of dough, macaroni, vermicelli; sweetmeats and other articles coming under No. 202 of the Customs Tariff; coffee, tea, and products of the cocoa and chocolate industry. They may not contain more than 2½ kilos (5½lb.) combined weight of soap, candles, and starch.

To characterize a present as such, it is recommended to add "Geschenke" to the address on the dispatch note accompanying each parcel; the Customs officers will then at once recognise the character of the parcel.

NEW ORLEANS GOES 'WET.'

Holding that the continuance of the war time prohibition is unconstitutional the Federal Court at New Orleans has granted an injunction applied for by a local firm restraining Government officials from interfering with the sale of alcoholic drinks. Many drinking places at once resumed business and are doing an enormous trade. As is done in the case of similar decisions in various parts of the country an appeal will undoubtedly be taken by the Government to the Highest Court.

OUT-RELIEF SCANDALS.

At Friday's meeting of the Llanelly Board of Guardians, the relieving officer reported that a man earning £6 a week, and with only a wife dependent on him, was asking for out-relief.

In another case relief was being sought by a family in which the total earnings were £14 a week. Applicants with £4 or £5 a week, said the relieving officer, were quite common.

TAXI CAB ACCIDENTS.

During the first 10 months of this year the number of taxicab accidents in London was 755, compared with 655 over the same period in 1918. There were approximately 1,200 more cabs in operation this year.

PRICE OF COAL.

HOW THE REDUCTION WAS POSSIBLE.

In the course of the coal debate in the House of Commons Mr. Brace moved the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the Coal Controller's administration and the position of the coal industry. He said the miners had been driven to despair at the blunders committed by the Coal Department and the trade was getting into a state of chaos. The miners' solution was nationalisation, but he was prepared to co-operate with anybody in order to secure greater production. The motion was defeated, however, by 254 votes to 59.

Sir Auckland Geddes, replying to the debate, said the Government did not object to such a committee because it wanted to hide anything, but because it wanted to get on with the job. He defended the accuracy of the estimated figures on which the price of coal was raised. During the first part of 1919 there had been a deficit of nine millions on the working of the industry. This rose to eleven millions by the end of March but was reduced again to nine millions early in October. Financial experts estimated that the nine millions deficit would be paid off next month. If present prices continued and there was the same relative distribution between inland and export coal, there would be a profit of seventeen millions at the end of the financial year. This was the fund from which it was proposed to use the money to reduce the price of domestic coal. With regard to the demand for an impartial inquiry, the Government had already referred the matter to a firm of impartial accountants.

ANTHRAX BRUSHES.

COMPLAINTS ABOUT JAPANESE CONSIGNMENTS.

The danger arising from the use of shaving brushes infected with anthrax, which are being imported from Japan, was discussed at a meeting of the City Corporation yesterday. Mr. Heilbuth stated that many fatal results had been reported.

In one case it was found that six out of nine brushes were infected with the disease. All the known consignments of Japanese brushes were being examined, and where infection was discovered the Medical Officer of the district was notified. Practically every parcel was found on examination to contain one or two brushes infected with anthrax.

Mr. Walker said it was impossible to disinfect these brushes, because the intense heat required to destroy the anthrax germ would also destroy the brush. Importation should be prohibited. The serious point was that these brushes came here with a certificate from the Government of Osaki stating that they were free from disease and quite safe.

WOOLWICH ARSENAL.

LOCOMOTIVES TO BE MADE.

The Prime Minister visited Woolwich Arsenal on Friday to investigate personally what can be done to utilise the war-machinery for industrial purposes. The question of the discharges from the Arsenal has been the cause of very grave concern to the population of Woolwich, of which seventy-five per cent is dependent on the Government works.

Mr. Lloyd George stated that Woolwich Arsenal was probably to be developed as a railway centre in order to meet the world's shortage of locomotives.

BALLOON SOLD FOR 75s.

Ten complete ballons, besides a quantity of balloon fabric were sold on behalf of the Disposal Board in the Empress Hall, Earl's Court, yesterday. The balloons are made of the finest 3-ply linen, rubberised, and weigh between 3 and 4 cwt. The first went for 75s., but competition then became keener, and the next sold for £6 12s. 6d. Two more fetched £7, and another £8 5s. The other five balloons were of a larger type, and found ready buyers at a little over £10 each.

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.

The general tone was good but business was checked by counter attractions of new capital issues. British funds maintained their firmness, mainly owing to the cessation of selling. In Oils the leading shares were buoyant and some excitement prevailed on Mexican Eagle reaching a new high record of 15⅛. Lobitos Oil shares were firm, despite the contradiction of the rumour of their absorption by the Shell group. Shell Transport maintained their interim dividend on ordinary shares of 10% free of income tax. Foreign Government issues receded on Continental liquidations. In the money market supplies were plentiful and optimistic anticipations prevailed concerning the effect of War Loan disbursements next week. Silver declined to 72 s. 5 d. owing to the American Treasury releasing silver dollars. Gold was in good demand for the East and the Continent at 103/-. Marks were 169 to 171 and Austrian crowns 540 to 560. The Elder Dempster Shipping Company, to meet the requirements of various trade routes, has decided to increase its capital to £15,435,000 sterling. Marine insurance on goods to Black Sea ports is gradually declining. Lloyds quote forty shillings per cent on goods to Bucharest, against 100 shillings earlier in the year.

OBSERVATION.

Correspondence which has appeared in our columns has demonstrated the fact that the army of occupation are not failing to use their eyes; the vast majority have their powers of observation well-developed and are using them to better themselves and to increase their knowledge.

The soldier should be better at observation than the civilian. An important part of his military training is devoted to the development of this faculty in what is known as "Visual Training." A man is taught to take in detail and to penetrate obscurity as well as to notice the more obvious objects in his surroundings. It is an established fact that the rural, the man who has spent the greater part of his life in the country, has a great advantage in this respect over the man who has lived in the city, where his vision has been cramped and confined.

But during the war we have all become "rurals," our eyes have become accustomed to roaming over unlimited space and, what is more, we have had to learn — compelled by the instinct of self-preservation — not to overlook the detail.

That such training has been turned to good account in Rhineland, we have had evidence in abundance. Without unduly exalting the Germans we have to admit that there are many features of their life which are more up-to-date than, and improvements upon, our own. This fact must be true of almost every country; they have lessons to teach if the mind of the observer is open and receptive. It is impossible here to go into details, but they have previously been pointed to in our columns.

While it is true that there is much we can learn of a constructive nature for the eventual benefit of the homeland, and the individual, it is equally certain that information which may be acquired of a negative character will also be of immense value.

We cannot fail to have observed certain methods in which the German is on the wrong track, so to speak. A comparison with our system at home shows the British style up to the great advantage. In such cases we are acquiring useful knowledge because we shall see to it that the faulty methods are never introduced at home by people who have not seen their ill-effects.

To sum up, then, it is impossible to observe too much — the stock we take of Germany to-day must stand us in good stead in our own land and in our own businesses later on.

THE WORKERS.

Those who sit in offices from 5 to 12.30 and from 2.30 till 5 are often to be heard complaining of the press of work which is their unfortunate lot. But what about those who are working all the time with just a hasty half hour snatched for food? To this latter class belong the chief members of the B.R.A.D.C. Some of us go to the Deutsches Theatre with the idea that we are attending St. James' or His Majesty's, and we criticise rather freely if we do not witness a performance quite up to the standard of those theatres.

Again I have heard it said that these "play-actors" do what they do because they like it. Do they? Do they slave to make themselves as nearly perfect in their art as is possible from ten in the morning till two the following morning, and struggle against numerous and, in many cases, unnecessary and unjustificable difficulties—just to amuse themselves? I am certain they do not. They work like slaves in order to give an entertainment every night of the week to those who are fortunate enough to have the leisure to spare to witness it. On the evening previous to the production of "Strife" the producer brought a full day's work to an end by rehearsing till 2 a.m. when he fell, still clothed in his uniform, exhausted on the sofa in his dressing room and there slept till breakfast time.

PLAYING AND PREPARING.

The entire week previous to the production of "The School for Scandal" a performance was given every night at 6 p.m. Each day until about an hour before the curtain rose, rehearsals were being undertaken from 10 a.m. onwards and resumed after the curtain had rung down on the finale. On Friday of last week the entire afternoon was given up to the practising of the minuet under the able and persevering direction of the Ballet Master of the Cologne Opera house. Saturday morning was spent at the Opera house choosing costumes: in the afternoon another minuet rehearsal: after the evening performance, a rehearsal of the play on Sunday between the hour of 10 a.m. and 2. The following morning the company left the Theatre for exactly five hours. The Stage Director was attending to his duties on Monday morning at 9.30 a.m. and made the pleasing discovery that, of the eight stage hands allotted to him, four had been taken from him for regimental duty and two had gone sick. When most other people had gone to their luncheon, the Stage Director was nailing scenery together with a block of wood, because, having so much to remember, he had apparently forgotten to indent on Form X.Y.Z. something or other for that invaluable tool—a hammer.

LIVING WITHOUT SLEEP.

In addition to rehearsing, the actors must learn their lines. When and where they do it I cannot conceive. They must have solved the problem of living without sleep. These few facts may help the host of critics cheerfully to forgive any minor faults they may find in the various productions. The opportunity might also be taken to mention a certain gentleman of German nationality—the Stage Director of the Cologne Schauspielhaus, who has given gratuitous and untiring service to the B.R.A.D.C. On Sunday last he had two performances to superintend in his own theatre, but he neverth less spent the entire morning at the Deutsches giving his valuable aid and advice to a harassed English producer. Mention has often been made in the columns of "The Cologne Post" of the valuable work done by the company. These few ill-expressed lines may give some indication of the amount of labour and energy expended by these tireless people. E.H.S.

SCIENCE AND WAR.

Lord Moulton's small book* leaves us wanting more. This is only a lecture, the Rede Lecture of 1919, and we would have the whole story. Lord Moulton, known for years as a luminary in the realm of science, as well as of the law, was in charge of that department which sorted out the good and the bad from the thousands of inventions which were to end the war, an onerous, if at times, amusing job.

As Lord Moulton says, the future of the whole world was at stake and the issue became one of such surpassing importance that it inevitably called into action all the powers, known or latent, of those engaged in the struggle.

Science has revolutionized the world. has lifted half the labours from the back of mankind, has relieved the sufferings of the sick and wounded, has made life worth striving for. Yet science is not all. To quote Lord Moulton, for at least half a century Germany had stood first among the great nations in its care for the education of its people. Science was everywhere cultivated and made accessible to the whole nation. Even allowing for the exaggeration of its claims, due to its persistent self-glorification, I do not doubt that the boast of the Germans that their country could show a larger proportion of men of scientific attainments than any other was substantially justified and no doubt the influence of these men or the thought of their country was proportionately great.

Yet we find Germany during the period of at least twenty years consciously and deliberately making preparations for a war to be waged upon its neighbours solely for the purpose of self-aggrandisement. When the war was at last commenced it was acclaimed and universally supported by the Nation. That it opened with a flagrant and undisguised breach of national faith affected the people not at all. At no time did they seek in any way to mitigate its horrors but made it their aim to increase them. Common soldiers co-operated with their officers and the higher commands in carrying it out with calculated and revolting brutality to the civilian populations of the invaded countries. Finally they introduced the use of asphyxiating gas and all the tortures of so-called chemical warfare."

But their supposed superiority was a delusion as we afterwards plainly showed them. In every direction of purely scientific effort, unaided by natural brutality, we, a nation who entered the war to preserve our national faith, beat them.

Lord Moulton devotes considerable space to the Science of Explosives. The discovery of smokeless explosives was a great step forward. It permitted the target to be kept in view and the effect of the shots observed. The coming of the high explosive where pressure produced rises at the rate of several millions of tons per square inch per second and reaches its maximum within a fraction of a thousandth part of a second from the instant of its detonation, has revolutionised warfare. Such an explosion produces a shattering effect not dreamt of before. The development of our high explosives was a marvellous performance by our research workers to whom Lord Moulton tenders a warm word of gratitude.

When Big Bertha started shelling Paris, men were inclined to credit Germany again with having discovered something new. But all they had discovered was some insane reason for using such a monster. The glory of firing at a city say 100 square miles in extent, so that missing the target was impossible, merely for the sake of killing or frightening civilians had no attraction for us.

The wonderful development of the internal combustion engine which made air warfare possible is next dealt with and the amazing fact that the engine weight was reduced to 2lbs per h.p. is recorded. Although the more striking value of the engine was in the air and the tank service, its greatest service was undoubtedly the making of road transport under war conditions a practical proposition.

Motor v. Railway.

For forty years Germany had developed strategical railways but the motor transport system of the Allies heavily discounted this "vorsicht" and kept the battle going even when, as at Verdun, railways would have been "hors de combat." Then the internal combustion engine together with the Plante battery made submarines feasible.

But the contributions of science to warfare are innumerable; it was a science war and only a nation having science to back it could have survived at all. The meagre dribblings allotted to Research by our own country were repaid beyond computation. Had they been greater, had research workers been trained in anything like the numbers they should be, the war would have cost us far less in lives and money. Has the country heard, has it comprehended, will it profit by experience. Will it grant the money now; at once, and for the future, that is our best insurance for the comfort and welfare of the nation and against war. Economy can be a most expensive luxury when uncontrolled and we, as a nation, can never afford to fall into our old "pennywise, pound foolish" state of lawyer-ridden, unscientific partition of the nation's resources.

Much remains to be written about the nation's triumph through its men of science. The wonderful development of sound ranging, enabling us to locate hostile batteries within a few yards of their actual position, the marvellous work of our doctors and surgeons in alleviating suffering and saving lives all show us that the British science man can do well when given a chance. It is up to the nation now to remember the benefits conferred on it by science and to ensure that nevermore shall she become neglected and starved.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views.

WASH AND BRUSH UP.

Sir,—Having come through the war accustomed to the trials and hardships of a regimental officer, it is only under great provocation that I take up the pen as a cudgel.

H.P.I. evidently fails to realise that there are still many officers who come to the Clubs daily in order to enjoy the luxury of hot baths and washes supplied by these excellent institutions.

My only advice to him is to seek out one of the many uncivilised spots in which many officers are still destined to reside and to spend a week in their company. I will warrant that at the end of his stay he will remodel his views on the subject.

GEORGE BROWN.

Sir,—"Orange Stick" although pointing out that "Ablution" has omitted to mention an important necessity at the Officers' clubs, has himself made an omission.

He has evidently not noticed that "Brilliantine" and "Eau de Cologne" are not supplied in the ablution departments.

Surely such things should not be left out.

For my own part I think they are quite as necessary as a manicure department. KNUTTY.

A REAL PUPPET SHOW.

Sir,—How gratified I feel towards "R.W.K." for his information regarding a Puppet Show. I am sure many people will be extremely glad to visit such a splendid entertainment as the price is so ridiculously small. All the same, I, who do not suffer from a surfeit of Wagner, prefer to see something classical, and not a children's performance.

Evidently "R.W.K." is one of those persons who does not appreciate the fine arts and the opportunities that are given them during their stay on the Rhine. C. G. M.

HOCKEY IN RHINE GARRISON.

Sir,— As it seems possible that a number of units are desirous of competing in a Hockey Competition, with the permission of G.H.Q. the Y.M.C.A. intend to run one on the league principle, if sufficient entries are sent in.

To ascertain whether the number of teams wishing to enter will warrant such a competition, I would be glad to receive the names of units which would compete.

We shall also be starting a Basketball League, and would welcome entries for this. F. R. SKEELES.
Director of Athletics; Y.M.C.A.

CHILDRENS' SERVICE.

Sir,—In response to the courteous letter of the Y.M.C.A, in last Monday's "Cologne Post," a service for children of English residents in Cologne will be held regularly on Sunday afternoons in the Church Army Chapel in the Antoniterstrasse at 14.30 hrs. We hope that all parents will encourage their children to come to a service which is specially designed to help them to learn the practice of the worship of God and the service of mankind.

GARRISON CHAPLAIN.

SOLDIERS AND WINE.

Sir,—Replying to your correspondent "Perturbed," I might mention that I too had a slight passing perturbation on the subject of wine the other night, only my discomfiture emanated from the fact that I had only 50 pfgs. left after squaring the bill with the "Ober."

I sincerely trust your correspondent never had cause to become "perturbed" under these circumstances.

SOLDIERS AND WINE.

Sir,—I am very glad to note that "Perturbed" has had some of his fears allayed in regard to the expensive wine habit which he thought would be introduced into Blighty after demobilization had been completed.

He asks whether officers and N. C. O's. will prefer the "popular British beverage."

Well, as far as I can see, there is no reason why they should not.

How many N. C. O's. for instance in civil life will have between £2 and £3 a week to spare after they have paid all expenses, etc? Very few, I guess.

Also officers. Will they be able to afford the expensive wine habit?

There are at present quite a good number who are living on their pay, and I think I can say that they will not be able to afford these expensive wines when they are demobilized.

Therefore I feel sure that they will go in for the "popular British beverage," because they will not be able to afford anything else.

I trust, by now, that "Perturbed" has had all his fears allayed, and I think he can take it as a fact that the "popular British beverage" will still hold its own, and will become more popular.

MOPPER.

(This correspondence is now closed. Ed.)

CHRISTMAS WATER SPORT.

Sir,—I have met at least two gentlemen of the type of your correspondent "Spartan." Whether rain or snow, hot or cold, they take their daily dip in the Rhine.

All the same, as far as I can see, his only possible reason for holding a water carnival on Christmas morning can be that he anticipates that a large number of Britishers in Rhineland will have a particularly bad night on Christmas Eve.

SUMMER SWIMMER.

SELF-EDUCATION.

Sir,—I have been wondering whether the British Army of Occupation is taking full advantage of the unique opportunities for self-education, as apart from that derived through the Army Scheme, and am inclined to the belief that they are not.

With an unlimited supply of books available and a considerable amount of time on hand a wonderful chance for self-education and development of mental power is presented. Every scrap of knowledge gained now by our youthful Army of Occupation will be of inestimable value later on, both to the individual and the nation. Education means a good job and a good job carries a big salary. Think of it. SELF EDUCATED.

WIVES AND BILLETING.

Sir,—Much has been written about "Wives and extravagance" and so on, but that to my mind is by no means so serious as what might be said about "Wives and billeting!"

I refer of course to the country places, my arguments do not apply to Cologne and other of the larger centres. It is a fact that the greatest difficulty is being experienced in some of the outlying villages to find suitable accommodation for officers and their wives. There are in many cases only a limited number of suitable billets and these were previously in use as officers' messes.

With the advent of the wife in increasing numbers, the messes have been appropriated for them, the result being that many unfortunate bachelor officers have had to be content with very poor quarters indeed. A SUFFERER.

THE SONG OF THE TYPEWRITER.

(With apologies to Kipling.)

This is the song that it singeth,
Full oft as its master decrees,
To the chant of the fore-flung platen
And the rhythmic beat of the keys.

Mine is the power to utter
The words of the master-scribe;
I am the swift-winged servant,
Loosing the thread and the bribe.
Recording the findings of sages
Torn from the dark Unknown
Recording the orders of Princes,
Heaving the bolt at the throne.

Mine is the boundless power,
Mine is the fathomless might,
Curbing the stamping squadrons,
Ruling the clanging fight;
Launching the grim grey warships
Baring the angry blade,
Moving the ranked battalions,
Hurling the massed brigade.

In the snow-bound Polar regions,
Where the ice-bergs drift and grind
In the land where the broad-leaved palm-trees
Bend to the hot south wind;
On the skirt of the blinding desert,
On the shore of the blue lagoon,
Where the thundering white-topped billows
Lift to the might of the moon—
There are my words delivered,
There is my message found,
Borne by the might of steam and steel,
Banding the whole earth round.

This is the song that it singeth,
Full off as its Master decrees,
To the forward lunge of the platen
And the beat of the upflung keys.

THE LILLE SWEEP.

Major Denison Replies to Critics of Draw Method.

"ABSOLUTELY FAIR."

Considerable criticism has been levelled at the promoters of the Lille sweepstake in connection with the method by which the draw was made. The sporting papers in England have been devoting a great deal of space in their correspondence columns to the matter and many and varied have been the alternative suggestions claimed to be fairer than the method of drawing adopted by the conductors of the sweep.

Several references have been made to the matter in "The Cologne Post" and we now publish an explanatory letter, written to the Press by Major Denison, which will no doubt interest many critics in Rhineland. The Major says:

"I see a letter from Col. F. R. Begbie appearing in the Press and commenting rather strongly on the Great "Victory" Sweepstake draw which was held at Lille, on Nov. 17.

"I beg to take great exception to the Colonel's letter and ask you to allow me space to state the exact case, as whoever wins makes no difference at all to any benefits I may derive therefrom, and leaves me quite unprejudiced except that I give an absolutely straight deal.

System Explained.

"(1) I stated at the draw that 103,600 tickets had been sold out of over 150,000 sent out, and the whole of the counterfoils or chits representing those paid for were placed on long tables for the inspection of any officer, N.C.O., or man present.

"(2) I contend the marble system is an absolutely fair system, everybody having an equal chance; it is just as big odds against a number like 150,320 turning up as any other number.

"(3) The first numeral in the draw was represented by a bag of marbles which contained five zeros and three ones, this being the exact proportion below and above one hundred thousand sold.

"The other five bags of marbles each contained ten marbles 0 to 9.

"(4) Any number drawn over 160,000, i.e., when first numeral came out one, and second figure 6 or over, was considered void, and the draw recommenced. Any number turned out which was unrepresented by either counterfoil, telegram, or chit on the tables was redrawn.

"(5) Before adopting this method I did a draw at my office of 660 draws with counters instead of marbles, and twice drew numbers with the first four numerals zeros, viz., 000022 and 000076, and seven times with three zeros as first three numerals, and one 010001.

"(6) This idea of marbles was taken from the machines used in certain draws in France, i.e., instead of bags of marbles a revolving machine for each numeral which has the numbers 0 to 9. The numbers not required for first numeral being either altered to form a proportion, as in my case, or being entirely obliterated.

Late Applications.

"(7) I devised this idea as I felt that with a huge revolving barrel numbers which happened at the commencement of the draw to be in the centre of the discs stood no chance whatever of being drawn, whereas in the marble deal every number in the bag has plenty of play, and every combination of numerals has an equal chance.

"(8) As witness of the "gross unfairness" referred to by Colonel Begbie for those having tickets numbering less than 10,000, (1) Nos. 1 to 10,000 take £15,800 of the prize-money, (2) 10,000 to 20,000 £9,400 of prize-money, (3) 20,000 to 30,000 £1,925 of prize-money.

"With 66 draws for 103,600 tickets having a range of 160,000 this is not a bad effort, I think, 15 winners out of the first 30,000 numbers, and with an aggregate of £27,125 out of a possible £45,275. In my opinon simply a question of the chance of the draw.

"May I also beg of you to state that an immense number of applications received too late to be included are being dealt with and the money will be returned in due course to the applicants?"

ARMY TEAM'S DEFEAT.

Interesting Fencing Meeting in London.

A small but critical attendance at Bertrand's Fencing Academy, Hannover-sq., witnessed some pretty play in the meeting which resulted in the defeat of an Army "A" team by the Salle Bertrand, the total score being 21½ fights to 6½, made up as follows:—Folls, 8 fights to 1; sabre, 9 to nil; epee 4½ to 5½.

The general form of the Army representatives was distinctly good, Capt. T. H. Ward-Tetley's footwork and attack being seen to advantage in his defeat of Senor de Baera, an eminent Spanish fencer.

Referees: Foil, Capt. E. M. Amplett; sabre, Capt. A. W. Hammond; epee, Capt. Doorman. Results:—

FOIL v. FOIL.

Army.—Capt. T. H. Wand-Tetley, 1 win 2 defeats; Capt. F. Smith, 3 defeats; Capt. W. S. Norris, 3 defeats.

Salle Bertrand.—Senor de Baera, 2 wins 1 defeat; Major Stenson Cooke, 3 wins; M. Edgar Selyman, 3 wins.

SABRE v. SABRE.

Army.—Major E. L. Henslow, 3 defeats; Capt. Smith, 3 defeats; Capt. Norris, 3 defeats.

Salle Bertrand.—Capt. Doorman, 3 wins; Major Stenson Cooke, 3 wins; Major C. B. Notley, 3 wins.

EPEE v. EPEE.

Army. — Capt. Wand-Tetly, 1 win 2 defeats; Capt. Smith, 2½ wins; Capt. Norris, 1 win 2 defeats.

Salle Bertrand. — Count Larradio, 2½ wins; Col. Matthey, 1 win defeats; 2 M. E. Seligman, 1 win 2 defeats. The result being a tie, Capt. Tetley defeated M. de Seligman in the deciding bout.

Winners in America.

Among recent winners in America sired by English-bred stallions were Merry Princess, by Spanish Prince; Polroma, by Polymelus; Jack Stuart, by Valens; Allison, by Radium; Donnacona, by Prince Palatine; and Who Cares, by Wrack.

RHINE FOOTBALL.

Keen Matches in Army of Occupation.

D.A.C. 8-0 WIN.

Westhoven Ammunition Depot played London D.A.C. at Westhoven on Wednesday, the match resulting in a win for the D.A.C. by 8-0. Although playing against heavier weight, the Westhoveners made a plucky fight and all things taken into consideration, gave quite a creditable performance. For the losers B.E Millward (Capt), Menzies, Pte. S. Jackson and Sgt. Windsor played well.

COHESION GIVES VICTORY.

19th (S) Batt. Middlesex Regt. v. Rhine Garrison School.

A very interesting game was played at Bonnerstrasse barracks, Marienburg on Wednesday afternoon between the above mentioned teams resulting in a win for the Middlesex by 5 goals to 1.

The game was played at a particularly fast rate, and it was only owing to the superior combination of the Middlesex forwards that they ran up such a large score, as the school defence played a very stubborn game.

The goal scorers for the winners were 2/Lt. G. F. Griffin, 3. and Pte. Thaine 2, and for the School Pte. Cherry.

The school custodian Lieut. Oldbury played an excellent game and was given no chance with the shots that scored. He was ably supported by his backs.

INTER-COMPANY FOOTBALL.

51st Battalion the Hampshire Regt. at Wermelskirchen.

The second of the Inter-Company Football Matches, "A" v. "B", took place on Tuesday. What promised at first to be an exciting game (for both sides were almost equally matched) was eventually disappointing.

At the commencement it seemed that "B" Coy. would soon obtain the lead. Although continually pressing their opponents' goal, "B" Coys forwards failed to score, five chances being spoilt by weak shooting for goal. Until half-time play was very mild, being mostly confined to mid-field.

"A" Coy. soon distinguished themselves in the early part of the second half, gaining three goals in quick succession from splendid shots by Cpl. Johnson and Sgt. Fiori. The rest of the time both teams slackened considerably. "B" Coy. although afforded many opportunities to equalise spoilt them by fumbling with the ball at the goal mouth.

The game as a whole, could have been greatly improved had the forwards worked together more.

H.Q., VI Corps Ammn. Col. v. No. 2 Section VI Corps Ammn. Col.

On a ground, rendered treacherous by recent heavy rains, the above match was played at Berg-Gladbach on Wednesday, and a keen and interesting game ended in a win for Headquarters by 4 goals to 2.

No. 2 Section attacked from the kick-off, and were rewarded with a goal after 10 minutes' play. Nettled by this reverse, Headquarters played up strongly, and at the end of 20 minutes, equalised. Headquarters continued to attack, and obtained two more in quick time, No. 2 Section's defence at this time being subjected to a severe gruelling, and their forwards were able to make but little headway against the reliable defenders of Headquarters. Half time arrived with Headquarters still pressing and leading 3—1.

The second half opened with an attack by Headquarters. This was repulsed and No. 2 Section now settled down to a period of attacking, but it was not until 20 minutes of the second half had elapsed that their efforts were rewarded with a goal. Encouraged by this, they continued to attack but with no further success and the effort was eventually beaten off. A period of mid-field play followed in which neither side could claim much advantage until about three minutes from the end, when a break away by Headquarters forwards, resulted in their fourth goal being obtained.

FOOTBALL AT ALDERSHOT.

Staff College Easily Beaten By Command.

The Aldershot Command proved too good for the Staff College on the Officers' Club Ground, Aldershot, winning by six goals to two in a fast game. The visitors scored their two goals in the last five minutes of the game.

Malone was late in arriving, and Stock scored for the Command while they were a man short, and he scored a further goal before the interval.

Armitage scored at the start of the second half from a pass by Davis, and Turton netted with a fine shot. Armitage added a further goal, and then the College broke away, Daly and Collins scoring in rapid succession. Armitage scored the Command's sixth goal, the ball going off the goalie's stick into the net.

Aldershot Command.—Army-Schmr. O' Toole; Army-Schmrs Mahoney and Slater; Lieut. Crampton, Lieut. Aylmer, Capt. T. H. Wand-Tetley; Lieut. Davis Capt. Armitage, C.-S.-M. Malone, Army-Schmr Stock, Capt. Turton.

Staff College.—Major Priestman; Comdr. Spencer-Cooper, Major Macfarlane; Major Platt, Col. Liddell, Major Churchill; Major Hartigan, Major Carr. Col. Collins, Col. Neame, Major Daly.

Referees, Major Brooks and Army-Schmr Skelly.

For the Stud.

My Dear, Queen's Square, Quadrille, and Flying Spear all go to the stud next spring, and will not run again.

HUGE BOXING OFFER.

Albert Hall Mentioned for Coming big Fight.

£45,000 PURSE.

It is announced, with some reserve that an offer has been made by Mr. T. healey of a purse of £45,000 for the contest between the American, Jack Dempsey, and the winner of the Carpentier-Beckett match, which would take place at the Albert Hall, London, the purse to be divided as 60 per cent, to the winner, 40 per cent. to the loser, while 20 per cent. of the gross takings would be given to disabled soldiers and sailors from every Allied country which participated in the war.

Mr. C. B. Cochran had previously made an offer of £30,000 for the contest, and beyond that sum he has refused to go.

Whether the contest would be permitted with an advertised purse at the Albert Hall is open to question, for the policy in the past has been not to let the hall for any such event.

Goddard and Gordon Coghill Matched.

Frank Goddard, the recent victor of Victor McLaglen, has been matched with Capt. Gordon Coghill of the Australian Forces, for a 15 round contest for £100 aside, and the match will be decided at the National Sporting Club on December 22, Mr. Bettinson's benefit night.

KEMPTON PARK.

Winterly Conditions for First Day of Meeting.

RACE RESULTS.

Not for a long time has racing under National Hunt rules been witnessed at Kempton Park. On Friday, when an interesting card had been arranged for the first of a two-days' meeting, the elements were decidedly unfavourable. The weather was foggy and the presence of snow on the course rendered the going very heavy. This, notwithstanding, there was a fairly large attendance. Results:—

St. Margaret's Hurdle:—1, Carol Singer (2—1 on); 2, The O'Neill (6—1); 3, Lee White (100—8). Six ran.

Hampton 'Chase:—1, Sir Artegal, walked over.

Kempton Park Hurdle:—1, Water Gruel (6—1); 2, Doublet (9—2); 3, Court Bleddyn (7—1). Nine ran.

Uxbridge 'Chase:—1, Old Tay Bridge 3—1); 2, Sergt. Murphy (9—4 on); 3, Warrior 2nd (10—1). Three ran.

Two Mile 'Chase:—1, Square Up (evens); 2, Bonnie Charlie (10—1); 3, Shanton (7—4). Five ran.

Wimbledon Hurdle:—1, Farm Camp (8—1); 2, Gavrelle (6—4); 3, Potentate (100—8). Fourteen ran.

BLACK AND WHITE BALL IMPRESSINS.

BILLIARDS.

Reece and Newman Still leading in Big Matches.

The closing scores on Friday in the principal billiards matches in London are appended:—

Reece, 14,793 (breaks 143, 129, 105, 377, 114 and 130 unfinished).

Stevenson, 11,081 (breaks 121, and 276).

Newman, 7,615 (breaks 166, 184, 297, and 143).

Inman, 6,463 (breaks 201, 132, 150, 583, 171, 151, 183, 132 and 228 unfinished).

LAWN TENNIS.

The results in the first rounds of the Surrey County Hard Court Competition are appended:—

Men's Team Competition.—First Round (concluded): Epsom w.o., St. George's Hill scratched; Ruskin Manor beat Dulwich (3—0); Gallery, Dulwich) beat The Grafton (6—3).

Ladies' Team Competition.—First Round (concluded): Epsom beat The Grafton (4—0); Dulwich beat Ruskin Manor (3—0); Norwood beat St. George's Hill (3—1).

J. C. Parke and W. C. Bersey (Norwood), M. R. L. White and W. A. Ingram (Purley Bury) and F. V. Kirk and O. A. Sedgwick (Norwood), three of the strongest pairs in the Men's Pairs competition, have reached the second round.

A VIGOROUS GAME.

51st v. 52nd Battalions Royal Warwick Regt.

This match was played on the 52nd R. Warwick's ground at Berg. Gladbach on Wednesday. A slippery ground to some extent spoilt some very good football. From the kick-off of the game the 52nd continually rushed the ball towards the goal, but each time were checked by the defence of the 51st.

Half-time came with the score at nil, but on resuming play the 52nd showed to advantage, and after some very exciting and brilliant play their efforts were rewarded by a fine goal from Brotherton the centre forward, who played well throughout the game. The 51st played strongly on resuming and obtained a very strong position in front of the home team's goal but Sgt. Vicary and Pte. Head proved their worth as backs.

Play was then carried to the other end of the field from a goal kick and shortly afterwards L/Cpl. Ceken obtained the ball and after some pretty play passed to Rogers the inside left, who registered another point for the 52nd Battalion. Till the whistle sounded for time, the home side maintained their superiority and ran out winners by two goals to nil.

New Name.

The Optimism filly, by Theo Bold, has been named Theism, and the Tring colt, by Earman, Farsley.

AUSSIE'S CRICKET TOUR.

Imperial Forces and South African Match Ends in a Draw.

A Reuter telegram from Johannesburg states that the match between the Australian Imperial Forces and the South African eleven ended in a draw.

The Australians, continuing their first innings, were all out for 441, Collins increasing his score to 235. He gave a magnificent display and was at the wicket for five and a quarter hours.

The South Africans played up well and thanks to a fine innings by Zulch, succeeded in saving the game.

SID PUDDEFOOT.

West Ham's Dashing and Clever Centre-forward.

On his first appearance for West Ham, a critic remarked of Sidney Puddefoot, whose article appeared on this page yesterday "He's a diamond in the rough, but he'll be an International one day". How true these words were, all followers of football will be ready to testify.

There is nothing more noticeable about West Ham's centre than the wonderful air of confidence he invariably adopts. He gives one the impression that he can do big things and his performances do not belie this. A born leader he distributes the ball with rare judgment and his wingers know from experience when sending a centre across that "Sid" will be "right there" to meet it. He is a deadly sharpshooter as many a goalkeeper can testify, and never misses an opportunity to try a shot.

Playing as he does in Second League football, Puddefoot is under a bigger handicap than his First League brethren for the second league teams possess centre halves who know how to mark a man and never hesitate to use the shoulder whenever opportunity presents itself.

Ever a marked man.

Ever a marked man, he is out to outwit his opponent and the merest slip will allow him to get through and mount West Ham's "for" column, another notch.

In this season's match with Grimsby, Kenny, the Fisherman's pivot effectively marked Puddefoot and was ever on the International's heels, but one slip was sufficient to give the opportunity and a crafty pass paved the way for the scoring of the winning goal.

That is typical of Sidney Puddefoot, always on the alert, dashing, speedy and unselfish and consequently one of the best centres in the Second League.

It has been whispered that Falkirk have designs on this player, but all else being equal, it is doubtful if they would be prepared to pay the price. Even so, this is a season of sensations and nothing is impossible.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

THE MAGIC FLUTE.

At Friday's performance of the "Magic Flute" at the Opera House three guests presented themselves to Cologne opera friends. Alexander Kipnis from Wiesbaden introduced himself in the role of Sarastro, which gave the basso serioso full opportunities for a display of talent. Herr Kipnis has no doubt a fine and well-trained voice, but his deep notes will have to be still more perfected with regard to sonority and clearness. The "Queen of the night" rendered by the other guest, Paula von Hentke, was not up to the standing of an institution like the Cologne Opera. The voice is too weak for a large theatre and some passages lacked sweetness and clearness, especially the high staccato notes. The small but charming part of Papagena was rendered by Minnie Wolter who did full justice to this delicious musical creation of Mozart.

The representations of the other characters all belonging to the Cologne ensemble have had our attention before. Wanda Achsel, a favourite with English opera friends, and Fritz Krauss excelled and were ably seconded by Karl Renner as Papageno who gained two recalls for his humorous rendering of this role. Very fine was the "Sprecher" by Tillman Liszewsky. The trios of the three ladies and the three boys were truly enjoyable. Klemperer's leading of the orchestra was as usual masterly and his troops played the wonderful overture finer than ever before.

AROUND AND ABOUT.

Black and White.

When one first heard that the Leave Club officers' fancy dress dance was to be restricted to black and white the idea immediately arose "but what a pity so to restrict the scope." Not a bit of it! The affair fully justified the originator of the B. and W. idea. The variety was wonderful and so great that it is useless to attempt to give any detailed description. Of course the original "Black and White" was there with cork and label complete and we imagine that the spirit within must have had a pretty uncomfortable time and fully earned the first prize with which he was rewarded. Then there were two "Cologne Posts" and very successful ones they were. The Editor tells me to issue a warning, and some advice, on this matter. The paper on which our outpourings are printed is, we know, easily tearable. Should anyone else want to use us in this becoming manner they should go provided with "viel stecknadel" and the Editor will provide the necessary. There were two figures dancing which seemed to me not to fit the black and white idea but, of course, I may have been mistaken. In self defence I should say that I discovered them quite early in the evening and that I am not generally colour blind. But the dance was a great success. Among the interested spectators I noticed Mr. Ward Price the famous "Daily Mail" correspondent, who was greatly interested in the variety of the dresses and the beautiful decoration of the hall. Our tame artist is at work and we hope to reproduce his effort on Tuesday next.

Hospital Entertainment.

A very enjoyable evening was spent by the patients of the 25th General Hospital, all of them being gathered together in the large and spacious dining hall which was crowded to its fullest extent for the purpose of listening to a debate run under the auspices of the Hospital Educational Department. The subject for discussion was "That love is ideal."

The two leading speakers were Sgt. Shurman and Sgt. Cohen; chairman, the Rev. Kendall. After two splendid addresses by the leading speakers a lively discussion followed in which the Rev. Dossiter, the well-known Australian padre, participated. The vote taken at the conclusion was in favour of the motion by a great majority.

Leave Club Events.

The programme for the week ending Saturday next is as attractive as usual. To-day the Rev. C.E. Wheeler will talk in the quiet room from 5 to 6, and at 6.30 the Band of the 13th K. R. R. C. will give a concert. On Monday there will be German classes from 6 to 8. An impromptu concert will be held as usual on Tuesday from 5 to 6 and at the same hour there will be a dancing class. At 6.30 the chess tournament takes place, followed at 7 by a variety entertainment "Five Birds in a Cage." Later arrangements will be detailed.

VI Corps Club Dance.

A huge crowd and a huge success. That sums up the dance held on Friday night at the famous club in the August Platz. The room is very large and very beautiful, but it was outdone in both respects by the crowd.

The augmented orchestra played an interesting programme with their usual 'eclat' and the host of dancers certainly seemed to be enjoying their terpsichorean movements under "sardine" conditions.

Debate.

An interesting debate took place in the British Empire Leave Club on Friday. The motion for debate was, "That in the opinion of this House all methods of warfare are justifiable." Sgt. Sherman, D.L.I., opened in support of the motion, and was followed by Pte. Doughty, Labour Corps, who spoke against it. After many speakers had expressed their views, a division was taken. The motion was lost by one vote. The next meeting of the Society will be next Friday, at 6.30.

19th Middlesex Regt. v. 91st Wing R.A.F.

At Marienburg on Thursday. Pte. Thain gave the "Middies" the lead half way through the first-half with a tame shot. The "Wing's" soon equalised, and five minutes before half time got ahead, the whistle sounding with the score 2-1.

On resumption the "Middies" soon put matters level. Lieut. Griffin failed to score from a penalty mix up in the "wings" goal resulted in a third goal on the home side, and the final whistle ended a scrambling and unpleasant game with the score 3-2 in favour of the "middies."

Miss Shirley King's Finale.

Miss Shirley King, who has appeared in practically every production of the Rhine Army Dramatic Company, and by her charms of manner and cleverness won the hearts of the Deutsches audiences, made her final appearance with the company last night. Her portrayal as "Lady Teazle" in "The School for Scandal" has been a brilliant culmination of a series of successes, and she has probably never appeared to greater advantage than in this old-world part. Last evening, as the curtain rang down at the close of performance, the audience was vociferous in its applause, and one felt that it was this talented actress who called forth such marked enthusiasm. Tokens of appreciation in the shape of bouquets were handed Miss King from the audience, and a fitting climax was the presentation of a travelling clock by her fellow members of the company. In expressing a wish for all that is bright in Miss King's future, I am sure that I shall be heartily joined by the whole of the British element in Rhineland.

20th M.A.C Dance Club.

The 20th M.A.C. held their fortnightly dance in the Lochner Strasse School on Friday night. About sixty guests were present. The ladies were slightly in the minority although it turned out a very successful evening. The G.H.Q. Jazz band was in attendance and rendered excellent music under the conductorship of Sgt. Hallmark. Several extras were accorded and a most enjoyable evening was brought to a close at 11.30. The great feature of the evening was the grand march lancers. The floor was in excellent condition. The M.C's were S.M.S. Bowden R.A.M.C., C.S.M. Howell (M.M.) and Pte. Knight, R.A.S.C. The members of the club would be very pleased to welcome English married couples of the Rhine. Applications for invitations should be made to the secretary, P.M.S. Bowden, R.A.S.C.

Another "Demob."

Devotees of the Palace Theatre and, formerly of the Apollo Theatre, Cologne, will regret the departure of Cpl. Cowling who will be remembered as the popular "front of the house manager" at both these places of amusement. Cpl. Cowling found his considerable pre-war experience in the "profession", of the greatest value in his activities since the armistice, and added to an undoubtedly profound knowledge of his work, he endeared himself to his patrons by reason of a genial personality. He leaves Cologne with the best wishes of a very large circle of friends with whom I would like to associate myself.

A Popular Company.

The "Eccentrics" are announced to pay a return visit to the Palace theatre, Cologne, for a week commencing tomorrow evening. There is to be completely new programme I hear. It has only to be equal to that submitted on the occasion of this talented Company's previous visit to ensure crowded houses nightly.

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

The Excuse.

The fact of so many regimental dinners and similar functions taking peace in town just now is a fruitful cause of those on leave asking for extensions. But the "plea of urgent business affairs" doesn't always bear strict scrutiny.

Popular Gifts.

From all I can hear, the Christmas gifts that most soldiers in Cologne are buying to send home are manicure sets and bead bags for their women folk and razors for male relations and friends.

Good Programme.

The attractive programme at the Modernes cinema this week has resulted in very large houses. I found every seat occupied when I looked in the other evening.

Well Catered For.

Certainly it won't be the fault of a certain German publishing firm if Tommy does not go home a linguist. In a window yesterday I noticed in addition to the familiar "Englishman in Germany" booklet, similar publications to help the Britisher in Roumania, Sweden, Russia and Japan.

A popular Padre.

Meeting Father O'Farrel yesterday he informed me that he is going to Dantzig. He was the popular padre of the now disbanded Royal Irish Regt. and is a keen sportsman.

P.T. for Mothers and Others.

In response to urgent requests the Cologne Central Y.M.C.A. has arranged for a Physical Training class under C.S.M. Thane for Mothers and Canteen workers commencing on Tuesday. The class will be held every morning from 9.30 to 10 o'clock except Saturdays and Sundays and will meet in the Loreley Hall.

Ragtime.

I see that a number of German music shops are now exhibiting copies of the latest rag-time songs in English, as well as a large selection of rag-time and jazz dance music.

Where Aspirin was Invented.

It is not generally known that the famous drug, aspirin, was invented some twenty years ago at Bayer's great chemical works at Leverkusen. Dr. Hoffmann the originator of it is still on the chemical staff there.

Huge Works.

Messrs. Bayer employ nearly 8,000 workpeople and the magnificent buildings by the Rhine cover an area of 1,750,000 square yards. I'm told they consume 60,000 cubic metres of water daily or 20,000 more than that used by the whole of Cologne. In addition to the immense quantities of chemicals, they also make 100,000,000 lbs of artificial ice, yearly.

Beggars Appearing.

Recently I remarked on the comparative absence of beggars in Cologne, but the advent of the bad weather has forced me to revise my opinion, somewhat. Most of these "unfortunate people" are clean and well dressed.

Toy Prices.

The prices obtaining for toys in Cologne shops don't appear dear to me, but parents, I'm told, think otherwise, and pre-war prices as compared with those of to-day actually show 200 per cent. increase.

Unusual.

I saw a Lieutenant yesterday, in the Domhof, wearing the Distinguished Service Order and the Military Medal. Rather an unusual sight to see the two medals together.

Reason In His Reply.

An officer on a box-car asked the driver why he turned aside for a lorry approaching on the Duren road. "You had the right of way," he said. "Yes, sir," replied the driver, "but the lorry had the right of weight."

Anticipation.

The German children are looking forward to Xmas just as keenly as our youngster at home and already they are saving their ten pfennigs in anticipation.

Small but Effective.

The other day a friend of mine bought a little sewing machine in the Hohe strasse for 13 marks. It is ingeniously constructed and although its aspirations probably do not go beyond the making of dolls' clothing, it will sew through thick cloth quite easily.

Red lights.

Have you noticed that white lamps are used in Cologne to denote that a street is "Up." The familiar red lights so common in England are conspicuous by their absence.

Saves Labour.

In my billet the industrious housewife has a wonderful washing machine. It is almost a complete laundry. Apart from the rubber wringer there is fixed to the tub a water motor. This is attached by a rubber tube to the tap, the water turned on and the clothes are swirled round by the mechanical action of the wooden peggy.

An old Custom.

The other evening near Langenfeld I was surprised to see a civilian enter a restaurant leading a "rider." They were apparently well known, for the landlord gave the horse a piece of sugar while the owner supped.

The Essentials.

"And so you learned French thoroughly in the war?" said a proud father to his demobbed son. "Oh, yes, dad, I could say 'Hullo' and 'Goodnight,' order ham and eggs, ask a fellow to lend me money and tell a mademoiselle I loved her better than anything. What more do you want in any language?"

Selling Fast.

I notice that several shops have a large selection of postcards of the funeral procession of the late Cardinal Hartmann, and they are selling, to both civilians and soldiers, like hot cakes.

Really!

A civilian with whom I held a conversation informed me in all seriousness that before the war Cermany led in all sports, boxing especially. I wonder what Mr. Cochran would have said.

Sprechen Sie Deutsch?

Colonel F. N. Maude. C.B. and Frank Scudamore have produced a wonderful little book of which the full title is "Sprechen Sie Deutsch and Parley Voo"! and the price is fourpence. It is a very handy size for the pocket and contains a good selection of phrases likely to be useful. Each phrase is given in triplicate — French or German, English pronunciation and English equivalent and there are useful hints as to pronunciation. The booklet is published by Forster Groom and Co. and may be obtained at our bookroom in the Hohe Strasse Arcade.

Walking Sticks.

I notice that a number of our countrywomen are now to be seen in Cologne's streets with walking sticks. Why this new fashion?

RHINELANDER.

NONE OTHER GODS.

In the early history of the world we can read how nation after nation went into decay, how kings of might and power bowed their heads in shame for the loss of their kingdoms.

One can see the splendour of the Egypt of long ago, Egypt which once held dominion over land and sea, but to-day is merely a name among men. Gone are those mighty temples where countless gods were worshiped by day, only the strength of nature remains to speak of the might of that nation who in one time in their history held sacred more than three thousand gods.

At last there came a time when the people of Israel under their great Chief Moses were led from captivity on the banks of the Nile, towards a land which in time was to be their own, when they would possess a king and become a nation of worth among the the peoples of the world.

At the foot of the Mountain of Sinai those same people learnt the secret of progression, when amidst the thunders of the Mount, the words were given that ring down through the ages—"Thou shalt have none other Gods but Me". Alas those one time slaves forgot their deliverer and the commands of Almighty God, and it is history to read of the departure of the glory of the land, and the turning away of the people from the One True God. Not Israel alone but many nations have to be numbered with the past greatness, for polytheism which makes for the downfall of peoples has been responsible for many names which have been struck off the roll of fame.

We look upon England to-day as the greatest nation the world has ever seen, North, South, East and West the flag of our Empire flies aloft and speaks to the world of freedom and right. But we can still ask the question, if that Empire is going to flourish through the ages, if we individually are doing our part to make that nation great?

The reply from many would be, that we as a nation only worship one God, and we therefore cannot be accused of the faults of those nations who in bygone days turned to the many gods and shattered the foundations of greatness for their countries. "Thou shalt have none other gods but Me" surely need not be quoted to the English people.

In the heart of every man there is a god which is slowly but surely taking the place of the One True God, and that is the God of Self, that god whose power growing upon the life of a man or woman, can sap the strength out of that life and turn the patriot into a misanthrope, take the joy out of existence and in time obliterate God Himself from the human life.

None other Gods we are told, and yet even as men and women sit in church where they are supposed to worship that One God they place the God Self far above any other worship.

No need to point the finger of scorn at those nations who lost their greatness through that Polytheism which decays, for there is in our midst a much greater evil, when the false gods of Selfishness Sloth and Greed are taking hold of the nation and striving to bring mankind to their shrine, where men may worship but in worshipping lose all that is vital towards attaining true greatness.

Through the din and clamour of war God has again spoken, "Thou shalt have none other Gods but Me."

NOTES FROM LONDON TOWN.

COAL PRICE DROP.

People rubbed their eyes and stared hard at the placards which announced the 10/- decrease in the price of household coal. So long have they grown accustomed to constant rises in the price of everything in spite of repeated and apparently well-founded hopes of a decline that they had grown sceptical. But after all the basis of the 6/- increase was never a solid one and, moreover, the latest returns show conclusively that the miners' output for the last periods under review are well up to and even over the previous weeks figures when the working week was a longer one!

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

Hats off to the Prince! His American tour has undoubtedly cemented the bonds of Anglo-American friendship and the quibbies over ratification and covenant pale their fires before the general optimism engendered by Prince Edward's popularity. I am told by an American journalist that the Prince's facial resemblance to his grandfather and that frank indifference to formality, entire naturalness and sense of humour—qualities all so reminiscent of King Edward—largely account for the Prince's triumph in America. But over and above that he is on all hands recognised, by a queer paradox, to be the living symbol of our twain democracies. His personal cheerfulness bids gloom and misgiving in the face of future problems to yield to the hope and confidence that spring eternal in the breasts of the young. He is the rallying point in a time of need and that is why Londoners want to extend a riotous welcome to him when he returns at the end of the week.

H. G. WELLS AS A HISTORIAN.

Mr. Wells, versatile as ever, has launched out on a most ambitious history. His new work "The Outline of History" which is being issued in fortnightly parts, is, in his own words, "an attempt to tell truly and clearly in one continuous narrative, the whole story of life and mankind so far as it is known to-day." It is avowedly written in popular language for the general reader, but in its scope and aim should be of use for scholars and scientists as well in the leisure hour. With the editorial assistance of such experts as Professor Gilbert Murray, Sir E. Ray Lankester and Sir Harry Johnson, accuracy is assured as far as possible for a narrative which purports to give us a coherent account of the world's beginnings and man's ancestry, the dawn of civilisation, the decline and fall of the early Empires, and a panorama of all the great epochs of the World.

EINSTEIN'S THEORY.

It is not a little amusing to read the various newspaper attempts to state Einstein's theory in popular language. His prediction of stellar deflection in the solar field during an eclipse sounds formidable enough. If it had remained a mere problem for mathematicians we should have heard no more about it. But it has invaded the realms of popular philosophy, and willy nilly the newspaper man must go straight-way and report what eminent men have to say about the various and startling results. I think the layman is mainly interested in the effect of Einstein's theory on gravitation. To say that we shall have to revise all our notions about gravitation is to take us into the sphere of Mr. Wells' freaks of imagination. But I hardly think Mr. Wells' ingenious idea in "The First Men in the Moon" of an anti-gravitational force, which enabled his airman-hero to shoot up like a rocket to the moon, is now destined to become a practical proposition to the confusion of modern aeronautics. But after all, as Sir Oliver Lodge has said, you never know what secrets gravitation may have to throw up to us.

SWORD SWINGING.

The death of Corporal Battersby of the 1st Yorkshires and the World's Champion Sword-Swinger recalls that epitaph in a certain North Country Churchyard:—

Here lies the body of Jacob Dale
A Champione in this Nothern Vale
He swung a sword much longer thanne
Was ever swung by mortal manne.
Yet now hewed down by Death's own sworde
His soul doth stand before hys Lords.

Fiction writers and poets have ever been fond of the man who could use a very hefty sword. The couplets in Scott's notes to "Marmion" on the terrific powers of one Ferracute (also called Ferragut), and the doings of the doughty Fierabras will occur to many. To come to our own day, Mr. Thomas Hardy's Sergeant Troy in "Bathsheba Everdene" was a wondrous man for swinging the sword. He won Bathsheba's heart by lunging and passing his sword round her motionless form with such swiftness that lightning seemed to play about her and so finely did he cut matters that the line of light left by his passes formed a perfect replica of the girl's figure.

RUSSIAN SOVIET'S VIEWS.

SUGGESTED BASIS OF EXCHANGE FOR BRITISH PRISONERS.

HOMECOMING OF THE PRINCE OF WALES.

SOVIET PROPOSALS.

CONDITIONS OF RELEASE OF PRISONERS.

Litvinoff was interviewed by a "Daily Herald" special correspondent at Copenhagen. He denied that Russia had had relations with Germany and said that for economic ends Russia would by far prefer relations with Great Britain or America. He asserted that the real reason for Allied intervention could be summed up in the word "Concessions" and being realists the Bolshevists preferred to grant concessions to Allied capital rather than to waste Russia's strength in an endless war. Litvinoff demanded full investigation of the alleged atrocities.

The correspondent, recalling the statement of Mr. Lloyd George that he had never received direct suggestions of Peace or compromise from the Russian Government, asked Litvinoff if he could not write such a letter immediately Litvinoff seemed half inclined to carry out the idea but eventually thought that the responsibility should be left to the fresh Congress of Soviets due to meet at Moscow on the 3rd December.

Litvinoff was also interviewed by Reuter's correspondent, to whom he said that the Soviet is prepared to exchange British prisoners and permit British nationals to depart from Russia if proper provisions are made for Russians now abroad who were cut off by the blockade, provided also that they be accorded free communication with Russia and that the Soviet be permitted to protect its nationals and their interests.

HOTEL BURNT.

GUESTS ESCAPE IN PYJAMAS.

Damage exceeding the value of twenty-thousand pounds was caused by fire early on Sunday morning at the Royal Hotel, Plymouth, which was full of guests, some of whom were even sleeping in the bathrooms. The fire started in the basement and invaded the coffee room where some of the visitors were actually breakfasting.

The residents were aroused, but so quickly did the fire spread that many had no time to dress and were compelled to escape in pyjamas or nightdresses. Two elderly ladies who returned to their room for valuables had to be rescued through the windows. A large quantity of luggage was lowered through the windows and stacked outside the church.

GUIANA AND INDIES.

NO TERRITORY TO BE CEDED.

The Governor of British Guiana has received a telegram from the Secretary of State for the Colonies saying: "Pray assure the members of the Legislature that His Majesty's Government has no intention of ceding British Guiana or any of the West Indian Colonies to any foreign power.

SOVIET DEBT TO SWEDEN.

The Stockholm newspaper "Aftontidingen" learns that the Swedish Commission of Investigation regarding Swedish outstanding accounts and claims has discovered that Soviet Russia owes Sweden 250 million kronen, besides two million marks and amounts in other currency.

SUCCESSFUL RAID IN IRELAND.

Following on the recent disorders arising out of a Labour dispute at Tramore, County Waterford, the police and military raided the countryside on Saturday and arrested three men in bed, including Nicholas Phelan, the County Organizing Secretary of the Irish Transport Worker's Union. They were conveyed to Waterford under a strong escort. It is stated that during the raid a number of firearms, including German revolvers were discovered.

ROYAL FREEMASONS.

Prince Albert is about to follow the example of the Prince of Wales in becoming a Freemason. His equerry is being initiated at the same time and both join the Navy Lodge, the ceremony taking place this evening.

The million franc prize in the Ville de Paris Lottery has been drawn by ticket No 1430723.

The International Labour Conference adopted on Saturday a convention providing for the indemnification of women wage earners, both before and after the birth of a child.

PRINCE OF WALES.

HOME AGAIN AFTER GREAT TOUR.

H.M.S. Renown, with the Prince of Wales aboard, entered Portsmouth harbour at nine yesterday morning. All ships in the harbour were decorated with flags. As the Renown entered she was received with a royal salute of twenty-one guns. A strong South-West wind was blowing, and rain fell heavily as the Prince drove in an open car along the half mile route from Portsmouth dockyard to the Town Hall. The entire route was hung with ten thousand flags. Even the tramway standards were painted in brilliant tints, and between them was a woven web of rainbow colours. During the morning all shops were closed, and the children were released from school. The crowded streets were lined by troops, bluejackets and marines.

The Prince was met at Victoria by the King and Queen, and on the drive to Buckingham Palace he had a great popular welcome. The streets were bedecked, and though it rained heavily there were large crowds everywhere to see the Prince after his supremely successful tour.

POLITICAL SCANDAL.

AMERICAN SENATOR INDICTED FOR CORRUPTION.

A grand jury at Grand Rapides, Michigan, has indicted Senator Newberry for alleged corruption and fraud in connection with his election when he defended the Democrat Ford. Many lesser Michigan politicians are also indicted. The officials declare that a scandal has been unearthed which has seldom been equalled in the political history of the United States. It is alleged that over half a million dollars have been expended in bribery, extending from the Ward politicians of the city to the Indian Reservations, where it is claimed that Indians were hired to vote at the dictates of Newberry's supporters.

ONE FOR THE CONCHIES.

FAMOUS NOVELIST'S STRONG MESSAGE.

The following message from H.G. Wells was read at the first national convention of the No Conscription Fellowship which opened at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate, on Saturday:—"The only message I can send your meeting is this; that conscientious objectors, having saved their skins, can afford to refrain from heroic attitudes and will show seemly gratitude to the dead by working as hard as they can for that world-settlement which the overthrow of aggressive German militarism made possible."

LECTURING THE AFRIDIS.

A communique from Peshawar dated the 20th November, states that Mr. Hamilton Grant and Major-General Shephard interviewed the Afridi Jirga. Whilst the attitude of the tribesmen has hitherto been hostile, they have now accepted the terms, including a fine of one thousand sterling, guarantees of complete security for transport and troops as well as the restoration of stolen property and the suspension of tribal allowances.

Mr. Hamilton Grant, addressing the tribesmen in their own dialect, severely reprimanded them for the lawlessness caused by the younger men.

LATVIA AND GERMANY.

The official Lett Bureau states that Latvia has not actually declared war on Germany but Lettish and German relations have been broken off owing to Eberhardt, on instructions from the German Government, having assumed the protection of the troops fighting against Latvia, thereby violating the Versailles Peace Treaty.

FATAL RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

A Great Eastern train from Colchester rain into the stop blocks on a siding when entering Haverhill station on Saturday morning. The first carriage was partially telescoped and one man named Jarvis was killed.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S RELAPSE.

President Wilson is not so well. His condition is not giving rise to any alarm, but it is considered wise for him to stop giving interviews for the present. Consequently, Senator Hitchcock was unable to consult him on Saturday as arranged

GERMAN NAVY.

ALL WARSHIPS TO BE BROKEN UP.

The Supreme Council has decided that all German surface warships are to be broken up under the supervision of an Inter-Allied Committee, with the exception of ten light cruisers and twenty torpedo boat destroyers. These will be divided between France and Italy on account of their inability to build warships during the war. One battleship, one light cruiser and three torpedo boat destroyers will be given to each of the five principal Allied and Associated Powers for experimental and propaganda purposes, but these vessels must be sunk or broken up within twelve months.

The proportion in which the proceeds of the breaking up of the enemy surface warships will be awarded between the five principal Allied and Associated Powers has been agreed to by Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan on the basis of wartime warship losses. The American plenipotentiary still awaits instructions from Washington. A proposal has been put forward by France that all enemy submarines be broken up except ten. These are required by France, as she alone was unable to build submarines during the war. It is suggested that these ten submarines be chosen from boats not used in unrestricted submarine warfare.

STUPID ROUMANIA.

ULTIMATUM FROM THE SUPREME COUNCIL.

An ultimatum to Roumania was despatched on the 28th November by the Supreme Council. After declaring that Roumania's reply of the 2nd November was unsatisfactory, the communication emphasises the patience of the Allies towards Roumania and points out that but for the immense sacrifices of the Allies, Roumania would now be ruined and hopelessly enslaved. The Supreme Council invites Roumania to take the following steps unconditionally. Firstly, to evacuate Hungary entirely, and retire behind the frontiers fixed by the Peace Conference. Secondly, to accept the formation of a Inter-Allied Commission to deal with Roumania as requested by Hungary. Thirdly, to sign the Austria Treaty and the Minorities Treaty on the conditions stated in the Supreme Council's Note of the 12th October.

Failing a satisfactory reply by today, 2nd December, the Allies will most regretfully break off relations with Roumania.

PUSSYFOOT'S PLUCK.

TESTIMONIAL BEING RAISED.

As a token of administration for Mr. "Pussyfoot" Johnson's pluck, the "Evening News" has decided to open a testimonial and start it with a subscription of one hundred pounds. The "Daily Mail" has subscribed a similar amount.

Since the loss of his eye, Mr. Johnson has remarked to one of his doctors: "With all the millions of eyes in the world it doen't much matter if there is one eye the less."

VILLAGE MEMORIAL TO GALLANT LEADER.

A memorial window was unveiled at West Ashton Church, near Trowbridge, on Sunday by Lord French, together with bronze tablets in memory of Brigadier Generals Walter Long, eldest son of the First Lord of the Admiralty, and others from the village who fell in the war. Lord French said that the love and affection existing between officers and men was a marked characteristic of the British Army and its most powerful fighting asset. This feeling was never more strongly exemplified than in the splendid military career of General Long. He was a leader who returned the love of his own men with interest and whom they gladly followed, even to death.

DISMISSED POLICE STRIKERS.

About one hundred women, the majority of them carrying babies, the wives of dismissed police strikers, presented themselves outside 10. Downing street and sent in a request for an interview with Mr. Lloyd George on the subject of the re-instatement of their husbands. Every division in the Metropolitan Police Area was represented in the deputation. They were told that nothing further could be done, as the men had had every opportunity of re-instatement in accordance with the Government's offer. The women were evidently much disappointed but dispersed quietly.

FRENCH HONOURS FOR FOLKESTONE.

Sir Stephen Penfold, ex-Mayor, and Mr. Farley, Mayor of Dover, were decorated at Folkestone last week with the French Legion of Honour in recognition of valuable services rendered to France during the war. Six Médailles de la Reconnaissance Francaise were presented to Folkestone residents for services to France during the war, including one to Lady Penfold.

Fourteen degrees of frost were registered on the East Yorkshire Wolds on Sunday.

TALBOT HOUSE.

THE OLD POPERINGHE HOSTEL.

In order to meet the expressed wishes of thousands of soldiers of all ranks who formerly visited the old "Talbot House" at Poperinghe—the hostel where officers and men met on an equal footing,—a new Talbot House will shortly be opened in London. It will be a replica of the original and will be known as the "Poch."

An executive committee has been formed, of which General R. S. May is Chairman. The place will be conducted like an ordinary club, but the administration will contain no salaried appointments beyond servants, all profits being spent on the House. Nor will there be any strict rules. The club will be non-political and non-sectarian.

An offer of a suitable house close to Charing Cross is being considered. Lord Cavan, Lord Saye and Sele, and Col. Bates of the London Rifle Brigade, are interesting themselves in the scheme.

LABOUR CONFERENCE.

FINAL SESSION AND DECISIONS.

The feature of the closing session of the International Labour Conference at Washington was a protest by the South African delegate, Mr. Gemmill, against the preponderance of European representation on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, wherein twenty out of twenty-four members represent European countries. The Conference endorsed Mr. Gemmill's protest by 44 votes to 39. The Governing body will meet at Paris on the 24th January.

The Conference finally adjourned after reaching an agreement on every item in the agenda as laid down by the Peace Treaty, and creating the machinery for a permanent International Organisation to secure Industrial harmony by compromise. Six draft conventions and six recommendations will be presented for ratification by the legislatures of the forty States which appointed members of the Conference.

M. Fontaine, of France, President of the Governing Body, stated that pending ratification of the Peace Treaty, the decisions of the Conference have no binding effect, but when the Treaty is ratified, action must be taken to make them effective. The Conference thereupon passed a resolution authorising the Governing body to take such action. It was also announced that the International Labour Office will be located provisionally at the temporary seat of the League of Nations, with the Secretariat in London.

SWIFT RETRIBUTION.

BOMBS ON WAZIRI VILLAGES.

Recacitrant Maddakhel Waziris realisedl on the 19th November the inflexibility of the British terms. No reply to the twenty-four hours' ultimatum having been received by eight in the morning, within half an hour seventeen aeroplanes were flying over Ismailkhel with a full complement of bombs. Four tons were unloaded upon the tribesmen, the planes descending to three hundred feet and leaving the villages mere heaps of dust. Further bombing operations against the Waziris will probably be unnecessary, though a column of troops may march through the Waziris country in order to impress the tribesmen.

NEXT GENERAL ELECTION.

Speaking at Widnes on Saturday, Mr. Arthur Henderson, the member for the Division, said he was convinced that a General Election is much nearer than most politicians imagine. The future of the country lay with the Labour Party, which wanted a bloodless revolution based on the principle of democracy.

IMPORTANT CONSULAR APPOINTMENT.

Mr. Henry Gloster Armstrong, the British Consul General at Boston, has been appointed British Consul General at New York. Before his appointment to the Consular service, Mr. Armstrong was for many years in charge of the New York office of the Manchester Ship Canal Company. He has had wide commercial experience.

TROOPS FROM THE EAST.

S. S. "Derbyshire" was due to arrive at Plymouth on Monday and the "Castalia" at Liverpool on Tuesday for disembarkation of troops from India and Aden. Influenza occurred on board both vessels on the voyage between Bombay and Suez, but there were no fatalities.

SPEN VALLEY CONTEST.

At a meeting of the Liberals at Cleckheaton, Colonel Fairfax, Coalition Liberal, was unanimously adopted as candidate for Spen Valley.

The Admiralty states that there were no German submarine officers aboard the tugs. The vessels were stopped in the ordinary way, no vessels being allowed to leave Germany without notice, and then only under supervision.

SUMMARY COURT.

ARMED SUSPECT FIRES AT POLICE.

A military policeman's midnight chase after an escaped prisoner in the Buttermarkt, when both pursuer and pursued exchanged revolver shots, was described at the Summary Court yesterday, when Albert Voss, a locksmith, of no fixed abode, was charged on six counts, including attempted murder and escape from military custody.

When a combined raid by British military police and German detectives was made at midnight on the house at 14 Salzgasse, Voss, who was with a woman, was arrested for being without identification papers. A loaded six-chambered revolver was found in the room.

It is alleged that when they descended the stairs, Voss turned on his escort with another revolver and got away. He was chased by a military policeman for two hundred yeards through the Buttermarkt, Voss firing six shots at his pursuer, who returned the fire until his ammunition was exhausted. The following night, Voss, who is known to the police president's department was arrested by the German authorities.

A German detective produced old photographs of the accused, who had registered under another name. In the bedroom struggle, however, the detective noticed accused's crippled little finger, which was peculiar to the Voss he knew.

Accused's female companion said that when the German police had left the room, Voss made significant reference to his "Knarre" (revolver), and added "I have got out of prison and I'm damned if I don't get out of this."

Voss, who said he was in drink at the time, was committed to the Military Court.

"ON THE ROAD."

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS ON WARSHIPS.

Dr. Macnamara stated in the Commons that, in the event of the Overseas Trade Department making use of the very limited accommodation which might be available for commercial travellers on British warships, these commercial travellers would be received in the ward room mess. No expense would fail on the officers of the Royal Navy in respect to their entertainment.

In reply to Commander Kenworthy, Dr. Macnamara said the charge would be 12s. a day for the first 14 days and 9s. a day afterwards.

IS ITALY SINCERE?

STARTLING STORY OF SECRET TREATY.

Italian warships at Genoa and Smyrna are reported to have made common cause with Admiral Millo in support of D'Annunzio. The Belgrade journal, "Pravda" asserts that the Serbian delegation at Paris is in possession of definite information that Italy has concluded a secret agreement with Bulgaria and Rumania in view of an eventual military offensive in Dalmatia and Montenegro.

SMART CAPTURE.

GERMAN OFFICERS EVADING JUSTICE.

On Saturday night British destroyers intercepted and brought into port two tugs which are believed to come from Kiel, bound for South America. On these boats were a number of German naval officials whose surrender is likely to be demanded by the Allied Powers and who were seeking to escape. The tugs now lie in harbour under a guard of fully armed marines and attended by destroyers.

IRONMOULDERS' STRIKE.

As the result of further correspondence between the Ironfounders' Unions and the Engineering Employers' Federation, the latter has offered to resume negotiations provided the representatives of the Unions put themselves in the position to make recommendations in the event of the Conference arriving at a basis for general resumption of work.

OUR LADY M.P.

Asked for an expression of opinion on the victory of Lady Astor, Mr. Jack Jones said: There are plenty of old women here already—what objection is there to a young and pretty one? Lady Astor's victory over Labour is to be regretted, but we may console ourselves with the fact that she is a woman of progressive views and instincts.

It is reported that Colonel Sir Rhys Williams has resigned the Parliamentary Secretaryship to the Ministry of Transport, owing to differences of opinion with Sir. Eric Geddes.

'VARSITY NOTES.

FORMATION OF MANY NEW CLUBS.

Nearly all the pre-war societies at Oxford have now been resuscitated and new ones are appearing daily. The latest include an Anglo-Russian Society and a British-American club. This was inaugurated on Saturday, with Earl Rea ing as the guest of honour. The Folk Song and Dance Society gave an exhibition on the same evening. A fair number of students have joined the University O.T.C., but pending a War Office announcement regarding the Corps its future position is necessarily unsatisfactory.

At Cambridge the Council have put a grace on the agenda paper for a Congregation next Saturday proposing the appointment of a special syndic on the admission of women to the University, or the conferment of separate degree without admission. It is believed that the grace will be carried, but is likely to meet with opposition in its later stages. The Council has prepared a list of Senators for the suggested syndic, practically all of whom are in favour of conferring degrees on women but are divided on the question as to whether they shall be granted on the same terms as to men.

Lord Fisher and Lord Byng speak at a dinner and re-union at the Corn Exchange on Thursday, organised by the University branch of the Comrades of the Great War.

The University Liberal Club has been revived and has arranged for Mr. Asquith to address a meeting on the 23rd January. A number of women students from Girton and Newnham have accepted the club's invitation to join it.

Arrangements are being made to restart the Carlton Club.

The New Cambridge, in an article advocating the establishment of a students' representative council, describes how the thing is done at Glasgow University and now youth may help age in University management.

At London University the engineering departments are all acutely congested and a fund of £100,000 is being raised for the extension of the engineering buildings at University College. Lord Cowdray has given £10,000. The Fives court at King's College have been demolished to provide space for new engineering laboratories. The Ministry of Munitions, which used the college for training munitioneers during the war, has left behind a valuable equipment "on permanent loan."

The Council of the Guild of Undergraduates of Liverpool University has issued a notice strongly denouncing "unseemly and distasteful behaviour in the name of ragging," and threatening offenders with disciplinary action.

MIDDLE CLASSES.

MUST COMBINE FOR SELF-PROTECTION.

Addressing the Girls' Realm Guild at Westminster, the well-known author Charles Garvice, referring to the hard lot of the middle and professional classes, exhorted his hearers to combine both politically and socially for their own protection.

Until these classes proved themselves a great political and social force in the land they would never get anything, he said. Black-coated professional men have been hit as hard as any class by the war. The middle classes, although many had sacrificed their all in the war, had never complained but they must now combine. It was the great middle classes that were relied upon at times of difficulty and stress. Mr. Garvice therefore hoped for a great combination of these classes which would stand up for their rights and privileges and above all look after he welfare of the children of their class.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

YOUNG COUPLE FOUND DEAD.

A young married couple named Shepherd were found dead on Saturday at their home in Manningham-road, Anfield.

When a woman who lives in the house came downstairs, she found Mrs. Shepherd lying in the hall with a bullet wound in her chest and Shepherd in the kitchen with his throat cut. Both were wearing dressing gowns.

Nothing has yet been discovered to throw any light on the tragedy. It is believed that the husband shot his wife and then committed suicide.

GOVERNMENT CARELESSNESS.

Lord Rosebery, in a letter to the "Scotsman," says he has been furnished with a copy of an advertisement of the sale, by direction of the Ministry of Munitions, of Turnhouse Farm. "I cannot help being surprised," says Lord Rosebery, "because I am under the impression that the farm belongs to me."

He adds that he does not think the Government's action is due to lawlessness but to gross carelessness.

Turnhouse Farm was an R.A.F. aerodrome near the Forth bridge.

EPIDEMIC OF FIRES.

During the last ten days there has been an epidemic of fires at Clipstone Military Camp, near Mansfield, Notts. In all there have been half a dozen outbreaks. The military authorities have decided to offer a reward for information leading to the detection of the offenders.

THE BYE-ELECTIONS.

The recent bye-elections at Plymouth and Thanet have been unique in character and have given rise to more than passing interest.

In the case of Plymouth, Lady Astor is the first woman—with the exception of Countess Markievicz, the Sinn Feiner, who has not as yet exercised the right to sit in the house—to make a successful appeal to electors. It has been left to the Devon Borough to set the new fashion, to establish a precedent which may well have far-reaching results and to break the ice of centuries' old tradition.

That sooner or later women would be allowed to make use of their representation privilege was as inevitable as the following of night by day, but it called for a strong personality to convince constituents of the claims of the weaker sex. We, as a people, are slow to depart from deeply rooted and firmly embedded national customs and Lady Astor is to be congratulated upon having taken the lead.

Now that the bonds of antiquated superstition have been burst asunder, we may expect to find other ladies finding favour with electors and gaining admission to the counsels of the nation.

It still remains to be seen what effect the participation of women will have upon the administration of national affairs, but there can be little doubt that in certain branches of legislature their views and co-operation will be of inestimable value.

At Thanet, Mr. Harmsworth, while virtually standing as a Coalition Unionist, based his candidature upon a call for a crusade against national waste and extravagance. Such a popular cry could not fail to attract sympathy at the present juncture.

Appalling cases of waste have been revealed, and while the Government are apparently awakening to the essentiality of cutting down all superfluous expenditure and are acting accordingly, it is no surprising that Kentish electors should show their approval of such a policy of retrenchment by sending to Parliament a candidate who made this vital issue the principal, if not the only, plank in his platform.

His advent to the House of Commons will signify a definite message from the people calling upon the Government to pursue such a policy to the farthest reasonable lengths.

"SWEATIN' ON DEMOB."

About a month ago, I read an article in the "Cologne Post" on "Demobilization via Holland" and I found it very interesting. One can appreciate all the thoughts which your contributor recorded for the benefit of those who were "sweatin' on demob" same as I am, but I think he should have written two articles on his subject instead of one.

He omitted an important part of his demobbing, and that was the time when he was "sweatin' on the top line" — the delightfully short period, when one does not know if the trains will be cancelled, or if the camp is full and one has to wait, etc.

He went via Holland, and I envy him, although at this time of the year I have set my hopes on doing it in style — by means of the leave trains which are now in use — so different to the "Hommes 40, Chevaux en long 8" Pullman Car, with which we are all very familiar.

The last journey to England via Holland has been made, and we who have been left here are faced with a comfortable bunk on a fast train, with everything as it should be. It is worth while being demobbed if only to get a decent number of hours' sleep without being disturbed, and which will probably be the last peaceful sleep before we renew our domestic relations at home. Some of you single people may smile at such an expression, but I can assure you that George Robey never said a more true word than on one occasion in 1914 when he was performing in London. Our friend Mr. Datas can tell you what that was.

I was told by my C.O. to-day that in a fortnight's time I could have my papers made out, and go to England as quickly as I liked. He did not say as much as that, and all he told me to do was to go to a certain place — why I know not, because I have no desire to be demobilized there, and I mentioned the fact to him. You may therefore know that I have reached the sweatin' stage, and that is what is worrying me considerably.

I do not fear the journey or my reception when I reach my home — fortunately I have a house to live in, and the rent is paid by my wife during my absence. It is truly wonderful what one can pay for out of one's wife's separation allowance, and I should advise all single men to try it.

I have an anxious time before me, because I know I shall have to answer many awkward questions when my papers are being completed. To tell them my number, name, religion, date of birth, etc. is simple, but what I shall say when they ask me what kit I possess, I know not.

I do not altogether despair, because I have worked in a Q.M. Stores for some time, and I am therefore acquainted with all the methods of the professional scrounger. I have also scrounged myself, when I was staying near Festubert for the benefit of my health. A doctor told me to do that, and but for the fact that the houses thereabouts were not so very comfortable—there were no bathrooms in them—I could really have appreciated life. It is possible that after having lived amongst scroungers, and scrounged for myself for the past five years, the prospect of my completing my kit and equipment, before I call for my papers, should not necessarily worry me.

I began my campaign to-day, as with a disarming smile and a remark about the weather, I approached my C.Q.M.S. We chatted quite affably about the Football Competition in the "Cologne Post," and then about the Lille Sweepstake. That did it—I did not know that the "quarterbloke" had five tickets in the Sweep and he was unlucky. So I naturally offered my sympathy, but he would have none of it.

The poor man was very rude to me as well and told me in plain and understandable English—he used to work in a fish market in London, although I have forgotten the name of the place—that if I had come there to scrounge anything, there was nothing doing. I did intend to ask for "Socks, pairs, one," which after all are not very expensive articles when bought in thousands, and in any case they did not belong to the C.Q.M.S. My heart sank into my boots and I came away from him, taking good care to bang the door behind me to show my indifference.

When I returned to my billet, I had not made up my mind as to my course of action for to-morrow. But I now have an idea, and if it does not work, I may as well sign on, in the hope that I shall "win" some kit somehow.

I shall not divulge my plan — did Napoleon do so? Besides, I think it would be piling it on to the C.Q.M.S. if he knew that every reader of the "Cologne Post" was aware of it long before him. He never buys a copy of the paper, but always reads mine. I should imagine that he is worth hundreds of War Savings Certificates.

I have, therefore, a whole fortnight to get myself ready for my interview with the one who will condescend to make out my demob papers. I am open to borrow, beg, scrounge or exchange. Does anyone want a tin-hat?

P. T. S.

TO A FRIEND.

Only a simple wish
Honest and true,
Out of this heart o'mine
Straight unto you,
Friendship and memory
On the words dwell,
With you where'er you be
May all be well.

Only a little wish
Tender and pure,
Where'er you wander friend
May this endure,
Gladness be thine alway
To thy life's end,
Never a shadowed day
For you my friend.

New friends may come and go
Lighting your way,
Some all too soon will part
Others may stay,
Yet let this comfort thee
All your way through,
I shall be thinking dear
Always of you.

J.M.S.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER-BOX

We Hear all Sides without Responsibility for our Readers' Views.

DO NOT LOAF.

Sir,—Notwithstanding the Army Cinemas, theatres and several excellent men's Clubs one cannot help noticing the amount of "loafing" resorted to by young soldiers at night in Cologne.

It is true R. L. Stevenson defended the idler by saying "a faculty for idleness implies a catholic appetite and a strong sense of personal identity," but it was to rural idleness that he referred, idleness wherewith the idler at least drank in the beauties of nature and acquired a fuller knowledge of humanity. Rather let the idler mark the words of Richard II as put in his mouth by Shakespeare: "I wasted time and now doth time waste me."

An idle man is usually a discontented man. What is more hindrance to discipline than a discontented man?

Forward to the rescue, educational officers and Padres, is the cry, I think. Nightly classes in natural history and various industries by aid of the brigade cinemas is my suggestion for the former, for the latter more whist drives, competitions and dancing in the recreation room.

H. C. W.

SAFER TRAMWAYS.

Sir,—I hope your readers won't be bored by too many references to tramways in your columns, but having seen several accounts lately of serious accidents in England due to the overturning of tramcars, I began to wonder if our much praised "double-deckers" are really as superior as some people assert.

An expert committee, I know, fully considered the question and pronounced against them for many reasons but most of your readers seem to praise them for some reason or other.

To my mind they are top heavy, ungainly vehicles which if they miss the points especially on a curve or on a hill crash over on their side in a large number of cases. This is a point against them I don't think has been referred to.

Occasionally a single-decker such as we see in Cologne skips the rails but we never heard of their overturning, the centre of gravity being so low. I don't know of any country—and I've travelled the world—that goes in for the dangerous and awkward two-deckers except England. There must be a sound reason for this.

BOLIVAR.

RINK HOCKEY.

Sir,—A little while ago there appeared in the columns of your admirable paper a threat that there was to be a roller skating rink in Cologne with facilities for rink hockey.

Immediately on the appearance of this announcement, I sent home for my ball-bearing "foot vehicles" but the rink appears to be no nearer materialization than before.

I am not grumbling about a lack of of amusements in Cologne—who could?—but rink hockey would add to the joy of many of us considerably.

"FREDDIE."

N.A.C.B. PRICES.

Sir, — In view of frequent "grouses" regarding the above, do you not think that the N.A.C.B. might adopt a method whereby everything for sale is marked in Sterling and paid for in marks at current rates?

It would not cause any trouble to anyone, but it would ensure that the figures were somewhere near the proper price of the article on sale.

STARLIGHT.

SELF EDUCATION.

Sir,—Apropos the timely letter of "Self-Educated," I as a youth got most of what I know from that excellent publication, "Cassell's Self-Educator." I owe it a debt of gratitude. I see that a new edition brought up-to-date is being issued in fortnightly parts, and would recommend every young soldier to take it in and study some at least of the many subjects it covers.

Then I notice another serial publication that should be of great value. H. G. Wells', "History of the World" is just out. I'm sure it won't be dry, and what a mine of knowledge it will be!

I thought the men and youths of the Rhine Army might like to know of these useful works both within their reach.

SELF TAUGHT.

ON READING.

Sir,—Your correspondents are divided, and, as my letter on "Reading Carlyle" has brought to light so many different opinions, I trust that you will give me space for my own views. I am of opinion that some individuals think that the end of reading is amusement only. That is not the case; reading both amuses and instructs.

Yes, "people thought and thought deeply long before books appeared." There were few books during the time of Seneca, but the few that profound thinker had access to, were of the first order in the realms of Literature.

But as books began to be written and read, people's mode of living became different, and their thoughts became more sublime.

"A man reads what some newspaper says and accepts that view." Not in every case surely. Do you mean "Rural" in the case of every reader, or in the case of a particular few? You do not make yourself quite clear.

In a previous letter we have noted that we are not to read and to take for granted, but to weigh and consider. We must accept or reject the printed word according to our judgment of it in the light of truth. Nothing is worth reading unless it is true. The first thing of importance is the choice of books; books, that will arrest our minds and compel us to think, books that will create within us a desire to read more.

In opening a book, we ought to think that we are opening the door that leads to a cave of hidden treasure. It is this that we are doing. We are searching between two musty old covers where lie buried the noblest thoughts of the noblest men that ever breathed, searching deep down in that unfathomable grave for hidden gold stored there by the most able thinkers and the greatest scholars that ever blessed the world with knowledge and wisdom.

There they lie—silent—but yet speaking; buried, but not dead, they guide the world, and their written word lives for ever. Read, and having once read, read again.

R.M.

CHRISTMAS WATER SPORT.

Sir, — Going over "Spartan's" letter again and reading between the lines, I can't believe he was quite serious in his suggestion.

There can't be many of the Rhine Army who keep up their swimming in the river all through the inclement weather of winter.

There are a few I am well aware of, but perhaps you could count them on the fingers of one hand.

Even if they number as many as a dozen—which I doubt—is he not pulling our legs to suggest a Christmas water carnival just for their special benefit?

I shrewdly suspect him to be one of those misguided idiots who go in the Serpentine every morning, and if necessary break the ice to get their plunge. He has probably swum in the Serpentine Christmas morning race. Well, when he is demobbed he will be able to join the chilly throng again.

But out on the Rhine, let us hear no more of "Spartan," and his wild eccentricities.

WARM WATER.

Sir,—There is something in "Spartan's" idea but I think it can be improved on. Instead of outdoors in the icy cold Rhine why not organise some water sports and swimming contests in one of the fine bathing establishments in Cologne, for both sexes?

These baths are warmed so being in the winter wouldn't matter and there must be lots of British men and women here who would compete I am sure. I would, for one.

A water carnival indoors then is what I venture to put forward. Will some one in sports organising take the matter up?

MERMAID.

WIVES IN CLUBS.

Sir,—The gallant officer of Field Rank mentioned in "Bachelor's" letter, should bear in mind that the habit of accosting ladies without introduction whether at home, in Rhineland or elsewhere, is looked upon as what is vulgarly termed "picking up", and is not done by gallant officers, much less by those of Field Rank.

As to "Bachelor's" remarks about privileges all I need say is, "Confounded impertinence!"

T. B.

THE PASSING OF THE VOLUNTARY WORKER.

A change is taking place in the character of a considerable amount of national work—so silently that few outside the immediate circles concerned are aware of it. For five years the work of the War Pensions' Committees — originally the Soldiers' and Sailors' Families Association, known briefly as the S.S.F.A.—has been carried on by voluntary lady workers, whose husbands and brothers in most cases were at the front.

In the early days these workers were drawn from the higher social strata. Many gave their whole time to the work of looking after the pensions of disabled soldiers and sailors—all gave their services for nothing. They were glad to be able to do some necessary war work. How important this work was, became increasingly evident as time went on, and the war pessed into its third, fourth, and fifth years.

WAITING FOR HIS LADY.

Not all the workers were married. Some were young and hitherto unaccustomed to roughing things to any extent. These young workers personally visited the homes of the fighting soldiers and sailors and would oftentimes grow familiar with sickness and with deathbed scenes which hardly came within the original mental picture of the work.

These were very strenuous days at first, but with capable brains at the head of the committees, things soon got into a good working order. All was done for the love of it, and so went with a swing. Knowledge of particular cases meant a strong personal interest on both sides.

"You're William Smith, I think? Can I do anything for you?" the head of a district would cheerfully ask.

"Oh no, thank you, mum; I'm waiting for my lady." And nothing but his lady would satisfy him. He knew his lady knew all about him and his missus and the two kids, and he didn't want to begin all over again to a stranger. And not a few of the ladies possessed a charm and strength of character which was felt throughout their entire districts.

Through the crucial years of the war these local commitees knew every case personally, and would see to it that Mrs. A. got her alternative pension, no matter how many times headquarters lost the papers. They were, in fact, advocates for the families under their charge, and the strict letter of the regulations was tempered with much kindness.

In the first flush of enthusiasm many gave and lent their own private money, until experience showed that such a course could not be carried out to any extent. At one time there was a superstition in a certain London district that the workers "made a good thing out of this pension business," until the pressure of fact and daily experience proved that things were all the other way.

THE NEW OFFICIAL SYSTEM.

"I can't thank you enough, miss, for all you've done for my wife. If you hadn't been here . . ."

But all this is of the old days. With increase of specialisation has come the paid worker. First the occasional typist, then the male secretary, and so forth, until—one rubs one's eyes—the voluntary helpers are no longer there. Scores of young girl typists and assistants have come, and a new atmosphere reigns. The old has gone, and it is only fair that the passing of the voluntary worker should be recorded. Certain districts may be more immediately affected by the change. What we have written summarises one large and efficient district of London. William Smith will not again find "his lady," and we can only hope that a very efficient system will do for him all that is necessary,

HOW THEY FARED.

Burnley's Revenge: Coventry Still Losing Points.

NEWCASTLE DISPLACED.

Saturday's crop of surprises was again of a large order, as in previous weeks. The principal failure was Newcastle United's defeat at home, which removes them from the leadership. Sunderland by their victory are now well in the running and the battle for the head of the table presents an interesting problem.

Burnley's victory at Bradford wipes out last weeks defeat and brings them out on top of Division one, an event which is very gratifyng to Lancastrians. Liverpool's defeat by Preston on Merseyside was a nasty shock and the failure of Bolton at home to Everton gave the hopes of the "Trotters" supporters a cold douche.

West Bromwich made amends for last week's debacle and put paid to Sheffield Wednesday's account, whilst the Arsenal added to their away record by booking a point at Nottingham. The Londoners are getting quite expert at drawing matches. Aston once more secured a victory and are gradually climbing from the fatal area.

Division II.

Coventry lost their thirteenth match when falling at Blackpool and nothing seems to go right, but they will come on yet and provide some surprises ere the curtain falls. Grimsby did well to conquer Stoke and Birmingham put up a splendid show when defeating Rotherham. South Shields are to be congratulated upon their victory over Leicester; the Seasiders are making a plucky fight in their first season in good company. Spurs continued their point gaining career at Nottingham Forest's expense, but the Tottenham eleven, despite Saturday's victory, seem rather stale at present.

The surprise of the day for Londoners was Fulham's defeat of the "Hammers." Few teams leave the West Ham enclosure with full spoils and the inability of their favourites to beat the "Cottagers" must have disappointed the "Hammers" supporters. Barnsley's win over the Wolves revived hopee of Division I, but—and its a big but.—

Southern League.

Millwall sprang a shock on Brighton, and the "Lions" deserve the credit of their success. Portsmouth put on four against the Rangers, and strengthened their hold on the leadership, while Norwich came out of their shell and put up one of the biggest scores of the day against lowly Gillingham. Watford are hard on Portsmouth's heels and their narrow win over Bristol Rovers was very pleasing to their supporters. Newport by defeating Swindon again accomplished the unexpected; they are deserving of all credit for their performances, struggling as they are against great handicaps.

Scottish League.

Celtic just managed to win at Aberdeen and the Rangers made no mistake against Albion Rovers. The battle between the Rangers and Celtic, ever keen, is, if possible more bitter this season, and it would take a clever man to forecast their positions next May. Dundee's seven against the "Honest Men" was the greatest surprise of the day across the Tweed, and they thus displace Ayr on the fourth rung. Queen's Park did well while Clydebank's win at Kilmarnock was a good performance. Falkirk's inability to beat Third Lanark, even with ground advantage is one of football's mysteries. Four drawn games and a victory for Thirds is the record of the past five seasons.

Games Abandoned.

Blackburn v. Bradford City, Manchester United v. Oldham and Crystal Palace v. Exeter were abandoned through fog. In the first two games the visitors were leading in each case, and the latter game was a draw with no score.

LOCAL BOXING.

Open Fortnightly Competitions at All-Weights.

INDIVIDUAL CONTESTS.

Lovers of the noble art will be very glad to learn that the Army are arranging fortnightly individual boxing competitions tnough the A. I. of the P. and R. T. Entries are requested for the various weights and are to be submitted not later than Dec. 5th.

Such a proposal cannot fail to find favour in the British Army of Occupation. There is probably no sport which carries a greater appeal at the present time and there will doubtless be a flood of entries. Some really sparkling shows should result and the new feature gives promse of being one of the most popular in Rhineland.

Points to Note.

The following points should be taken note of by intending entrants.

The competitions will be open to W. Os., N. C. Os. and men of the British Army of the Rhine.

Entries for the following weights to be forwarded to A. I. of P. and R. T., G.H.Q. by the 5th December.

Bantam weight	8 st. 6 lbs.	and under
Feather "	9 " 0 "	" "
Light "	9 " 9 "	" "
Welter "	10 " 7 "	" "
Middle "	11 " 6 "	" "
L. Heavy "	12 " 7 "	" "
Heavy "

As soon as the entries have been received, notification will be forwarded to all concerned giving dates of competitions and further particulars.

All entries must be forwarded by units on one form, and must be signed by the Officer Commanding.

All Competitions will be held under the Rules of the Imperial Services' Boxing Association.

First tournament to be held on Friday and Saturday 12th and 13th December: place and hour will be notified later.

Team Competitions.

In addition, team competitions are also being organised and in view of the difficulty which has been experienced in getting men of the correct weights in the young soldiers' battalions, a revision has been made. The teams will now be:—

Fly	8 st. 0 lbs.	and under
Bantam	8 " 6 "	" "
Feather	9 " 0 "	" "
Light (one officer)	9 " 9 "	" "
Welter " "	10 " 4 "	" "
Middle " "	11 " 0 "	" "
L. Heavy	12 " 0 "	" "

Each team must be complete, otherwise no entry can be entertained.

FRY DEFEATS HOUSEGO.

At the Ring Blackfriars in a twenty rounds contest on Saturday evening, Billy Fry of Tylorstown knocked out Fred Housego in the seventh round after a moderate bout.

KEMPTON RACING.

Bumping Objection Overruled at Saturday's Meeting.

The weather was fine, but dull at Kempton Park on Saturday. The attendance was good and going heavy.

In the Staines Hurdle an objection to the winner, Golden Daisy, for bumping was overruled.

Details.

Barnes Hurdle:—1, Jack Sheppard (2—1); 2, Storm Witch (7—4 on); 3, Jolly Jack (20—1). Four ran.

Vauxhall Chase:—1, Loonian (7—4); 2, Platonic (3—1), Only two finished. Five ran.

Middlesex Chase:—1, Minstrel Park (10—1); 2, Cresley (5—2); 3, Mr. Pick (10—1). Nine ran.

Staines Hurdle:—1, Golden Daisy (5—4); 2, Dacmerry (4—1); 3, Drumlanrig (10—1). Eight ran.

Richmond Chase:—1, Lutteur Third (11—8); 2, Wave Tree (evens); 3, White Trout (6—1). Three ran.

Dunbury Hurdle:—1, Procurator (7—4); 2, Trezidella (7—1); 3, Yellow Bedstraw (4—1). Ten ran.

A.I.F. WIN AGAIN.

Owing to a misunderstanding Saturday's message stated that the match was drawn, whereas the four-day match between the Australian Imperial Forces and the South African eleven ended on Nov. 25th in a win for the visitors by eight wickets. When stumps were drawn overnight the home side had scored 227 for 4 wickets and were all out for 359, Ward carrying out his bat for 62. This left the Australians with 46 to get to win and they were hit off for the loss two wickets.

RHINELAND FOOTBALL.

Interesting and Exciting Week-End Games.

52nd Devons v. 52nd Warwicks.

The 52nd Devons made their first appearance in Southern Brigade football at Berg, Gladbach on Saturday last. Although they were beaten by the odd goal in five, the Devons played clever football and will be a difficult team to beat as the season goes on.

Kicking off with the wind in their favour the Devons had nearly all the play, and twenty minutes from the start Pearson scored from a clever pass from Bell. The Warwicks' goal-keeper was having a busy time and after shots from Shaw and O'Neil had just failed, Gallagher again scored for the Devons.

In the second half the Warwicks came back strongly and scored four goals in the last twenty minutes, being a little unlucky in having one disallowed by the referee for off-side.

A penalty goal against the Warwicks failed to materialise, and they finished winners of a fast, and evenly contested game by three goals to two.

In spite of the difficulties of transport, nearly 150 Devon supporters came over from Burscheid to see the game. Brigadier General Campbell, V.C. was present, and the afternoon's sport was an excellent, reply to "Old Brigade's" carping criticism of the young soldier Battalions.

The Teams lined up as follows:—

WARWICKS: Kensall; Sgt. Vicary and Head; Cpl. Hill, Sgt. Owen, and Cook; Spencer, L/Cpl. Allen, Pte. Brotherton, Pte. Rogers and Pte. Allen.

DEVONS: Mott; Sgts. Tite and Cotterell; Lt. O'Neil, Lt. Cairns and Sgt. Yeo; Ball, Gallagher, Lce. Cpl. Pearson, C.S.M. Bradley and Shaw.

BOXING SCENE.

Referee Attacked and Injured at Mountain Ash.

KICKED AND STRUCK.

There was a disgusting scene at Mountain Ash on Saturday night. After a close contest Billy Marchant, of Salford, was given the verdict over Danny Morgan, of Tirphil, and on the announcement of the decision it is alleged that one of Morgan's seconds hurled himself at the referee, Major Arnold Wilson, the manager of the Holborn Stadium.

Several other partisans joined issue, the result being that the referee was struck in the eye, thrown on the floor and kicked several times before he cou d be escorted to Morgan's dressing room. Eventually the police escorted Major Wilson to the railway station. The cowardly attack was the work of a small section of Morgan's supporters and was quite unjustifiable in the opinion of the majority of those present who agreed that the verdict was correct.

TWO GOOD WINS.

52nd Battalion Devonshire Regt.: Inter-Company Matches.

Two matches of the inter-Company Football Competition of the 52nd. Devons have been played during the past week. On Monday, "D" Company made their first appearance in the competition against the redoubtable "A" Coy. team which plucked a hard-earned victory from "B" in the first game of the series. It is rather unfortunate for "A" Company that on this occasion they had to fight just as hard, without the sweet solace of a win.

"D" Company's team, looking rather like a schoolboy eleven, though small in stature and with the balance of avoirdupois very much against them, took control of the game from the kick-off, and within a few minutes were "one up." Their passing and shooting both were excellent, and they kept the game going at a great rate. Soon they scored again, and a third quite astonishing goal was added before the interval. Shaw, the "D" Coy. left winger, was standing quite unmarked near the touch line, some distance out from "A" Company's goal, when the ball came out to him. He steadied it lovingly, pondered for a few seconds, decided to try a shot, did so, and scored.

The pace was just as fast in the secondhalf, "D" Company doing practically all the pressing, their efforts being duly rewarded by two more goals, the game thus ending in a victory for them to the tune of 5-0. "A" Company were unlucky to lose their outside right, Sgt. Cooper early in the second half, and, towards the end Drummer Cook also had to go off the field.

The "D" Company supporters were delighted with the form of their team, which proved itself to be a fast, clever, well-balanced side. Every man played a good game, and it was a tribute to the shooting ability of the forward line that each of its members scored. For the losers, C.S.M. Bradley worked hard and played well, as did Sgt. Cottrell, until the latter portion of the second half, when he got rather disgusted.

A Second Match.

In their second match, against "C" Company on Thursday last, "D" Company fielded the same team, with the exception of a new right half-back, as that which won the first game on Monday. With their hair nicely brushed, and smart new green-and-white jerseys on, "D" Company looked a gratifying picture to their fond supporters, who turned up in great numbers with loud voices concealed behind the collars of their greatcoats. Their superiority was unquestionable all the way through. "C" Company tried hard, but they were up against a better team and cleverer combination. Three times did the "D" Company boys get the ball through their opponents' goal during the first half, the scorers being Pearson, Gallagher and Cutler.

The second half very soon developed into an incessant and furious onslaught on "C" Company's goal, only relieved by two or three brief breakaways by their forward line. In this portion of the game "C" Company's left back, Sgt. Tite, that well-tried defender, played splendidly, clearing time after time, and the goalie, Mott brought off some fine saves.

In spite of the continued bombardment however, "D" Company only managed to score once during the second half, but once again they demonstrated their football ability, while the final result of 4-0 does not do justice to the excellence of their forwards. It is idle to mention specially any of the team, as every man in it did his best, and a remarkably good best it was, too.

INMAN AGAIN DEFEATED.

Inman suffered a second defeat on Saturday, this time at the hands of Tom Newman who received 1,000 in a match of 9,000 up. The champion never looked like getting the better of his young rival who was leading by 1,474 when he ran to his points.

Final Scores:—

Newman 9,000
Inman . . . . . 7,526.

AMATEUR WRESTLING.

At Bradford in the English Amateur Wrestling Championship Finals, best of three falls, the results were:—

Middle Weights:—N. Jackson, Halifax, beat L. Johnson, Denaby, gaining the first fall in four minutes one second and the second in 57 seconds.

Feather-weights:—G. H. Stott, Bradford beat H. H. Watson, Manchester, gaining the first fall in three minutes, forty-five seconds and the second in eleven minutes forty-four seconds.

AMUSEMENTS AND RECREATIONS.

MISS SHIRLEY KING'S FAREWELL.

On Saturday night the final performance of "The School for Scandal" was given at the Deutsches Theatre, and a great ovation was given to Miss Shirley King on the occasion of her last appearance at this theatre. Although I am definitely assured that this really was Miss King's last appearance, I still have hopes that we shall see her again before the Army of the Rhine ceases to exist. It is one of the most exalting sensations in this world of complex emotions to feel that one is loved and appreciated. Indications of the love, appreciation and regret at her departure had began to filter in concrete form to Miss King before the curtain went up and, in spite of the emotion she was undergoing, she played better, if possible, than she had done the whole week.

The curtain hardly ever rang down on any scene without Miss King being the recipient of a bouquet or some other form of her public's appreciation of her, and when it was all over Lieut. Percy lead her forward to the footlights and made the neatest speech I have ever heard him make. With apologies to Sheridan he said; — "To-night the play is not the thing, but Miss King is."

Struggling with her emotions, Miss King made a sweet and simple reply, merely quoting a line from the play which was apt indeed. I think what touched her generous and appreciative heart most of all was the last present which was handed up to her — a gold bag. Had it been made of tin the inscription was worth a fortune to her: — "From the Tommies of the Army of the Rhine."

And so the final curtain rang down on the figure of one of the sweetest little actresses who has ever graced the boards of the Deutsches Theatre with her talented performances. The vision of Lady Teazle hiding her tears in a bunch of flowers — one of the many symbols of appreciation from her admirers — will remain with me to the end.

On Sunday night a dinner was given in Miss King's honour at No. 1 Officers' Club. There was a large attendance and the proceedings included dancing and song. Miss King's health was drunk many times over and so much is the public regard for her that the guests left still wondering if there was anything more they could do to impress upon her the general gratitude and affection that is her due.

E.H.S.

AROUND AND ABOUT.

At the Deutches.

For nearly two hours on Sunday evening the full audience at the Deutsches Theatre sat spellbound by the artistry of gifted musicians. Place aux dames there was Gertrud Bender, whose brilliance in the most intricate operatic vocal gymnastics was matched by the sheer beauty of her rendering of Gounod's Ave Maria, the violin obligato being e xquisitely played by Alfred Barker,

* * *

Then there was Modest Menzinsky. When the curtain went up he was "discovered" with a pile of music on the piano. He sang through it—five songs in all, including four of Schumann's and the audience wished the pile had been ten times the height. Later he sang excerpts from Tosca, Die Africanerin, Walkure and the Meistersinger. He was Menzisky which is enough said. I wonder when we shall hear him again at Covent Garden.

* * *

In Alfred Barker's hands the violin is a thing bewitched. He played Hejre Kati (and as per programme) a violin song which was Wienawsky's variations on Russian airs. Each item was a 'tour de force', his exactitude in double stopping and harmonico being simply amazing. Two bouquets were handed over the footlights to him.

* * *

Lastly a word for Hubert Heiner, who accompanied throughout with great delicacy and charm. All the artistes must have felt very happy that they were being actually accompanied, not led or driven, as is so often the case.

An afterword is also not only permissible but advisable. It is this. Keep Dec. the 14th free for the Deutsches Theatre. It will probably be Barker's last appearance and he will be assisted by a host of-well,—just wait a bit. That is Capt. Haygarth's pigeon, which promises to be nearly as big as Elsa's swan.

"D" Company, 52nd. Devons at Whist.

The above Company held a very successful whist drive on Wednesday evening. Over 100 players took part in the set of 22 games, and undoubtedly everyone present enjoyed himself. The top score of the evening—169—was made by "Mrs." Casey, a well-known Private in the Company, who received as reward a handsome set of carvers.

The other prizes were as follows:—Ladies, 2nd. L/Cpl. Goddard case of knives and forks; Gents 1st. Pte. B. Smith, wrist watch; Gents 2nd. Pte. E. R. Young, case of knives and forks.

Ptes. Hamblin and Hodges respectively received the Lady's and Gent's "Booby" prizes, and it is sufficient to say that these would doubtless have proved of great utility to anyone thinking of setting up an Infant Welfare Centre.

At the conclusion of the Whist Drive three cheers were called for, and heartily given, for the Company Officers, as a mark of appreciation of their enthusiasm and interest in arranging and organising such a pleasant evening's entertainment.

Band Concert.

The band of the 18th K.R.R.C. was heard at the British Empire Leave Club on Sunday night. They gave a pleasing programme, the incidental music from Monsieur Beaucaire and humorous sketch "The Drummer's Holiday" being especially well rendered. Bandsman Taylor played Tosti's "Joy Dreams" as a cornet solo with fine expression and during the evening there were solos from Miss Mackenzie, whose delightful renderdering of "My Ain Folk" was enthusiastically encored, and Miss Campbell, who sang two songs in finished style.

"Five Birds in a Cage."

There will be an interesting programme at the British Empire Leave Club to-morrow night at 7 o'clock. Beside concert items there will be a short sketch entitled "Bill's Ghost," a bell solo from Sergt. Gordon and a one act comedy—"Five Birds in a Cage," in which Miss Douglas, Miss Castell, Major Chance, Captain Ziegler and Captain Barton will appear.

A Good Show.

The Audrey Esmond Concert Party had a grand finale at the Palace Theatre on Saturday evening, when the audience were raised to a high pitch of enthusiasm. Each turn was encored; "Jimmy" Chilcott ("Onions,") whose picture we reproduce here, had to appear six times. The accompanist excelled even his previous success at the piano and there was a tremendous round of applause at the finish. The party are at the Y.M.C.A. Central to-night, at Opladen on Wednesday and Thursday, at the Rhine Garrison School, Lindenthal on Friday and they finish a busy week at the M. G. C. at Riehl on Saturday. Miss Esmond's beautiful voice will be heard at the Sunday concert at the Deutsches theatre on Dec. 7th.

JACQUES.

AMATEUR GOLFER.

Professional Beaten on his Home Course.

A match between Oxford University and Frilford Heath was played over the latter's course at Abingdon, Berks, the University winning by five matches to two.

The match between J. Turner, the local professional, and R. H. Wethered, the Oxford captain, was exceedingly interesting. The professional was two up at the turn, but his opponent won the 11th and 12th, and took the lead at the 14th. The match had a keen finish, the Oxford captain winning on the 17th green.

Owing to a heavy fall of snow the match between Cambridge University and Coombe-Hill, over the latter's course at Malden, Surrey, had to be abandoned.

ARE YOU A PROPHET?

Money Prizes For Football Forecasts.

As stated in Sunday's issue, surprises were again the order of the day in No. 10 competition matches. The victory of Sunderland over Newcastle upset many calculations, whilst Burnley and Millwall by supplying away wins, "stumped" numerous competitors. The draws obtained by Arsenal and Third Lanark at Nottingham and Falkirk respectively also proved a great stumbling block.

Blackburn's tussle with Bradford City was abandoned through fog and this result according to our rules is not included. Therefore entrants are set but nine results to forecasts.

Four of the teams on No. 10 coupon appear also on this week's form; turn your attention to it now.

On the coupon printed below, strike out the team you think will lose, or, if you predict a draw, leave both teams standing, add your name and address clearly, place the coupon in an envelope with one mark and send it along to this office. Any number of coupons may be sent at the rate of one mark each.

Coupons must be addressed:—

ECHOES FROM RHINELAND.

Wear a Disc.

Did you know that a recently published G.R.O. makes the wearing of identity discs compulsory? With the abolition of the old A.B. 64 some means of identification is necessary.

Cosmopolitan Cologne.

Cologne still maintains its cosmopolitan appearance. Standing in the Dom Square it is possible to notice many different nationalities in the course of half an hour. One particularly noticeable figure was that of an Italian cavalry officer, with his long flowing cloak, and high top boots.

Week-end Leave.

A large number of Senegalese and Algerian troops arrived in Cologne on Saturday night evidently on a week-end visit to the city.

Slipped her Moorings.

The Rhine is now in full flood; indeed I do not remember seeing it quite so high. The current is powerful, and only a day or two ago one of the boathouses off Rodenkirchen broke away from its moorings. I did not envy the occupants who were standing on the half submerged roof, frantically flag-wagging their helpless condition to other river traffic.

Then he got Busy.

"I say," said the young sub, as he caressed the six twin hairs on his upper lip, "do you like moustaches?" "I don't know," said the sweet girl coyly. "You see, I've never come into contact with them."

Misplaced Trust.

There seems to be a perfect epidemic of pilfering going on. In many cases I am afraid that the trust placed in German civilians has been grossly abused. I know of an office which has had three typewriters stolen.

Artistes Wanted.

I hear that the Rhine Garrison Concert Party is in need of artistes. Now then you budding comedians etc. Good artistes very soon become popular personalities.

A tip for Mess Secretaries.

It behoves all who would keep up the festive season of Christmas to get their messing arrangements in hand. All information with reference to the supplies of fresh vegetables may be obtained from Room 10, Hauptmarkt Halle, near the Suspension Bridge.

In the Balcony.

A party of German students were in the balcony at the Deutsches theatre last Thursday night, and seemed very interested in the "School for Scandal." The famous screen scene tickled them immensely.

Turned Down.

Did you know that Somerset Maugham sent his play "Lady Frederick" to almost every West End manager without result? At last it was accepted and became the success of the season. The inability of experienced theatrical managers to guage the public taste is a thing difficult to understand.

The Rescue.

There was quite a commotion in Auf dem Berlich the other day. A careless householder left burning ashes in a tin with the result that the refuse collecting van caught fire. When the alarm was raised, householders rushed to the rescue with buckets of water.

A Comparison.

Standing on the eastern bank of the Rhine by night, one is vividly reminded of the Thames Embankment. The lights of the Town and bridges and those lining the Oberlander Ufer on the opposite side of the river are typical of stretches of the Embankment.

Novel Idea.

I noticed a shop window in the Ulrichgasse bearing the name of the owner upside down on the plate glass. Whether this was put on intentionally or not, I cannot say, but it certainly attracts attention.

Cheap Transit.
